Half-cent sales tax passes by 75 votes

City leaders say narrow margin will encourage responsible spending

By Jessica Pitts
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A close "yes" vote to a sales tax increase should make Riley County and the city of Manhattan more accountable for how the money will be spent, officials said.

"Since the margin is so narrow," Commissioner Brad Everett said, "the city and the county will certainly have to be more responsible for accounting for the money that is being spent. We should know where every dollar and cent is that our voters so faithfully said yes to."

Manhattan residents voted yes to a half-cent sales-tax increase Tuesday – but only by 75 votes.

And it was expected, Bernie Hayen, city director of finance, said.

"Honestly, I wasn't too surprised," he said. "The close vote is an indication things are tightening up. We are in an economic slowdown, and the vote shows voter concern."

The half-cent tax increase will replace the current sales tax when it expires in late 2003 or early 2004, Hayen said.

The sales tax is paying off the construction of the Law Enforcement Center and will continue to provide money for other things – including about $16 million in improvements on county roads and bridges and added funds for the city's economic development efforts.

"Now, when the sales tax expires, this one will start where the other one finished," Hayen said.

The main concern among voters, Hayen said, is that the funds be spent in the matter they were presented to the public.

"That is the responsibility the city and the county are going to have to shoulder," he said.

The ballot proposal called for 56 percent of the revenue to go to the city and 42 percent to the county. The remaining 2 percent will be divided among the county's incorporated cities.

"I think the close vote is going to do two things," Hayen said. "It is going to wake up the county to make sure the funds are being spent on road improvements, and it will cause the city, in terms of economic development, to be very certain the funds are being used for that purpose."

Everett said he wasn't surprised by the close vote, because he didn't know if it would pass.

"All we can do is move forward with the item," he said. "It certainly wasn't a resounding vote of confidence. Voters obviously had some uneasement about how the funds were spent in the past.

"But that is all water under the bridge now. We have to accept the vote and move forward."

The vote total is still considered unofficial because there are 230 provisional ballots for Riley County that might affect the results of local elections, Jolene Campbell, deputy county clerk, said. The official results should be available Friday.

Sebelius planning to fund education

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although newly elected governor Kathleen Sebelius will not be sworn in until January, there's plenty to get done in the meantime.

Sebelius
GOVERNOR-ELECT

"We face some real challenges in this state," she said Tuesday night during her victory speech. "We have some serious budget issues to tackle, and we need a lot of talented people to be involved in this effort. We need to bring Kansas together and work on moving us forward."

In addition to budget issues, educational funding took up most of the conversation throughout Sebelius' election-watch party Tuesday night.

"I like the idea that we're willing to put education as a top priority," Sebelius said. "We have to get more dollars into the classrooms. We have to pay teachers a more rewardable salary and make sure that the best teachers are in classrooms across the state."

Although funding in Kansas has been in question, Sebelius said that so far, education has not been a problem.

"We're not in a crisis," she said. "I think the good news is we have excellent public schools. Kansas kids test in the top 10 in the country."

Sue Peterson, director of governmental relations, said Sebelius earned a majority of her votes with support from universities across the state.

"Her education message helped her," Peterson said. "I suspect she won at least every state university community, since those are the kind of places that are interested."

Moreover, Peterson said Sebelius' message has influenced K-State.

"Obviously, education and budget are the two primary interests for our students and our employees," she said. "When people are talking about education, that's important for us."

As a Democrat, Ben Procter, sophomore in political science, said the party's win was important for him and fellow supporters.

"I was real pleased with the turnout and outcome of the election," he said.

Procter spent Tuesday night volunteering at the Riley County Democratic Party headquarters. Sebelius' stance on education, he said, was the main reason she won.

"Sebelius has true commitment to education, where Shallenburger played lip service to it," he said. "She made a big point of talking about the values of higher education, and that was more than a simple campaign promise. It is the direction of the future."

Along with her other campaigns, Sebelius said she still is committed to the future funding of education.

"We don't have the luxury of cutting back on education funds," she said. "We can't have an economic recovery without good schools in every community. That's really essential to get our economy up and running again."

Patrol seizes 5 pounds of cocaine on I-70

By Tara Patty
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Highway Patrol seized five pounds of cocaine in Riley County on Interstate 70 Tuesday morning.

Randal Terrell and Murnia Vercher, Las Vegas, Nev., were driving down I-70 a few miles southeast of Manhattan near mile marker 319 when they were stopped by Kansas Highway Patrol troopers at 9:24 a.m., said Lt. Kirk Simone of the Kansas Highway Patrol.

Terrell and Vercher were driving a rented 2002 Chrysler minivan. Neither Terrell nor Vercher rented the vehicle, so the minivan had been impounded by the rental agency.

Simone said the cocaine was recovered during vehicle inventory.

Terrell and Vercher are confined at the Riley County jail pending $100,000 bonds. The two face charges of possession of cocaine with intent to sell and no drug tax stamp. Depending on the criminal history of the defendants, the maximum sentence they face could be between 14 to 16 months or 46 to 51 months, said Brenda Jordan, assistant Riley County Attorney.

The illegal drug arrest comes not long after an Oct. 17 seizure of methamphetamine on I-70 one mile west of Junction City, according to the Kansas Highway Patrol.

Simone said there have always been drugs and criminals on I-70.

"The reason there's been more arrests is because one of KHP's best interdiction officers ever has been promoted and now patrols that area," Simone said.

The second lieutenant patrols Riley and Geary counties including the Manhattan and Junction City areas. He also has been training younger troopers, Simone said.

"We're trying to get officers to go beyond the initial reason why someone is stopped," he said.

Simone said the Kansas Highway Patrol trains officers to ask more questions and look for suspicious behavior of motorists that are stopped.

Attorney General race results to be verified by Friday

By Patrice Holderbach
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ten thousand provisional ballots wield the power to determine by Friday whether Chris Biggs–D, or Phill Kline–R, will serve as Kansas Attorney General.

In a race that ended undecided Tuesday evening, Kline maintained a 50-percent margin with 406,353 votes. Biggs received 403,343 votes.

All 3,369 Kansas precincts had reported unofficial results to the Kansas Secretary of State by Wednesday.

Article 5 of the Kansas Constitution states that a provisional ballot is provided when a voter "changes his or her name, or changes addresses within the county, and fails to re-register before the election."

In addition to the provisional ballots, some advance voting ballots may not have been included in the totals, as reported on the Kansas Secretary of State's Web site, www.kssos.org.

Jolene Campbell, deputy county clerk for Riley County, said that although unofficial election results were available Tuesday evening, no results are official until Friday. By then, election officials will determine which provisional ballots will be added to the election night totals for the final outcome in a process called canvassing, she said.

"None of the election that happened last night is final, until after the canvassing that we do this Friday."

Seniors to serve on national council

Engineering students to represent KSU for 3rd consecutive year

Katie Lester | COLLEGIAN

Curtis Wondra, senior in mechanical engineering, and Alex Darby, senior in civil engineering, are newly appointed members of the National Association of Engineering Student Council. The national council organizes and facilitates the local councils as well as promotes engineering at large.

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two K-State engineering students were elected to the national executive board at the National Association of Engineering Student Council national convention.

Alex Darby, senior in civil engineering, and Curtis Wondra, senior in mechanical engineering, are the two new members of the board and will begin their yearlong positions in December.

The convention took place at the University of Pittsburgh at Pennsylvania in October.

This is the third consecutive year K-State has had two students represented on the national executive board. This year, there are 13 board members total.

"The fact that Alex Darby and Curtis Wondra have been elected to the National Association of Engineering Student Councils (NAESC) says a lot about the quality of K-State engineering students and the college," said Terry King, dean of the College of Engineering.

"K-State students have been leaders of NAESC for some time. We emphasize the importance of leadership to the engineering professions and leadership experiences for our students. When these students graduate from K-State they will no doubt have opportunities to lead again."

Darby will be the vice president of finance.

"It's very nice to have the opportunity available," Darby said.

"The willingness of the college to let us do this, to support two representatives, displays the support of the college and the Engineering Council. I'm excited to meet all these new people and become one of the leaders of this organization that spans the entire United States."

As members of the national board, Darby and Wondra will be able to travel to locations that include Canada, California and Florida.

"Curtis and I were very excited because we get to do a lot of traveling around the country and meet and become friends with people throughout the country," Darby said.

Wondra will be the vice president of relations.

> COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING DEAN

"I knew it was going to be a lot of work," he said. "But I wanted to carry on the tradition of K-State representatives on the national board. I get to work nationally with different supporting companies and organizations."

Wondra is currently on the executive board of K-State's Engineering Council, but he said he isn't worried about his duties interfering with his national position.

He said his job on the K-State council is basically over because he has already fulfilled his duties.

He was in charge of running the new student-orientation seminar.

However, Wondra said he is a little worried about his travels with the national board interfering with classes.

"I'm a little bit concerned for this spring because I'll miss a lot of Thursdays and Fridays traveling for the national board," he said.

"But the College of Engineering and the faculty have been wonderful so far. They're really good about understanding."

Joseph Thomas, senior in architectural engineering, had a position on the national board last year and said the primary purpose of the NAESC is to bring students majoring in engineering from all over the United States together.

"These guys are representing 110 engineering university councils across the nation," he said.

Thomas said professors worked with his traveling schedule while he was on the national board.

"The professors were willing to help me make up work or try to reschedule because they understood the opportunity for me to represent not only Kansas State University, but also councils throughout nation," he said.

Thomas said he enjoyed the time he had as a member on the national board.

He said K-State has definitely been the most well-represented university on the board in the last three years.

"Being the third year in a row to have two representatives speaks volumes about the caliber of students and character of students coming from Kansas State University, the College of Engineering, and the support the administration gives students," he said.

Coffee hours present opportunities to learn elements of foreign cultures

Quilter presents American culture

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

David Stuckenschmidt wants to broaden his horizons.

"I like to meet people from different places," he said. "I also like the food. Really, I like trying different kinds of foods from different places. Some of the sweets from India and Pakistan are really good."

Stuckenschmidt, Manhattan resident, attends every coffee hour at the International Student Center. Five times each semester, the center is host to a presentation about a different culture. Wednesday's topic was "Quilting: An American Tradition."

Maria Beebe, program coordinator for the center, said the coffee-hour presentations offer chances to share and learn about different cultures. International students are often the presenters, Beebe said, and refreshments following the presentation are native to the culture.

With banana nut bread and peanut butter cookies, the American culture took center stage. Harriette Janke, Manhattan resident and quilting instructor, displayed many of her quilts and explained many techniques and materials involved in quilting.

"There are so many delicious fabrics," Janke said, "I just can't resist."

Janke began quilting 11 years ago, although she had been interested in it before that.

"I had a lot of pent-up desire," she said.

Janke said she heard about the coffee hour through her involvement with World Friendship, an organization consisting of community members and international students.

"I thought this would be a good opportunity for some of my students to be able to show theirs," she said.

About seven international students are learning quilting from Janke, she said.

Faith Roach, Manhattan resident who attended the coffee hour, said her mother and grandmother both quilted, but she has not had the time to learn."

"It's fascinating," Roach said. "She does such beautiful work."

Roach has attended nearly every coffee hour. She said she tries to go, unless she has a scheduling conflict.

"I enjoy hearing about places I've been or places I'd like to go," she said.

Stuckenschmidt said he also enjoyed hearing about different cultures.

"Usually, I can learn something about people, a place, a religion or an activity that I didn't know before," he said.

The final coffee hour will be Nov. 20, Beebe said, and will focus on Buddhism. The events are open to the public.

"It's a well-kept secret," Beebe said. "We usually don't get that big of a turnout, but they're very informative."

The next coffee hour will be Nov. 20 in the International Student Center. The topic will be Buddhism. For more information, visit www.k-state.edu/intlstucenter

TO THE POINT

City should join in Homecoming celebrations

Homecoming Week is generally thought of as being primarily greek-oriented.

But the city of Manhattan has many opportunities to get everyone involved in what should be a city-wide event.

Concerts, parties and bonfires in City Park are just a few events that would bring K-State and the community together.

Instead of putting up business posters and advertisements, shops and restaurants should sport homecoming banners, signs and decorations.

Manhattan should play up homecoming a lot more than it does. The community should rally around its social and economic center.

The university is the main source of income for many of the businesses in Manhattan, so those businesses should show their support in return.

In other college towns, such as College Station, Texas, and Stillwater, Okla., homecoming is played up a lot more. The entire college and residential communities come together twice a year to celebrate school pride.

It's time that sense of dignity made its way to Manhattan.

It's time everyone in this town showed a little Wildcat spirit.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Uneducated callers need to learn Fourum rules

LAYTON EHMKE

The Campus Fourum is the supercenter of controversy, humor and many times, idiocracy.

It is probably the most-read part of the Collegian, and the most ridiculous. In what other publication can there be ever-continuing Cox jokes or fannypack ridicule?

However, nothing beats original comments about real issues. That was the purpose of the original Fourum, introduced to K-State way back in spring 1999 by Opinion Editor Kelly Furnas.

Since then, things have spiraled into the movie-quoting, sex-driven nonsense we have today. It gets less funny every week, and it's your fault.

There are too many types of comments I get really sick of seeing. I refuse to read anything that starts out, "Is it bad when ...?" Usually, my answer to whatever question they pose is: you're an idiot.

Some students have decided to use the Fourum as their own Stuckey's bathroom stall. The limited, and anything-but-clever comments, made about the unheard-of local joke Dead Lemon, were probably called in by its own members. Was that genius or what?

Whoever these tools are, they know that people turn directly to the Fourum as soon as they grab a copy of the Collegian. It would have been a good idea if the band didn't suck sheep dip.

"E" for effort, dudes.

Comments that globalized were really funny when I was a freshman. "All greeks are phonies," or the countless slams on those of you from Johnson County, seemed risky. But honestly, picking on sorority girls or fraternity boys is just too easy. Can't you Fourum fanatics raise the bar just a tad?

This one is better than most: "Big girl, small umbrella, wet friend."

Simple, random, good.

Those of you who call in saying, "Wow, I finally made it into the Fourum," or "Gee, the Fourum inbox is finally not full" are wasting valuable space.

Yeah, we all know it sometimes can be hard to get printed in the Fourum, but that's because some inconsiderate sphincters call in 50 times in a row just to fill up the message box.

Stop doing that! It's a public forum. Don't ruin it for everyone else. You all have the right to be heard, according to the First Amendment, but damn! If you want to be heard that badly, write a freakin' letter to the editor.

There are far too many examples of complete ignorance in the Fourum, and other things that simply do not belong. For instance, one comment from the Oct. 4 Fourum read that Dean Bosco was "hot and sexy." OK, that's absolutely disgusting. That does not belong in the Fourum any more than calls from students at Manhattan Christian College. Hey, if they want a campus forum, they can get their own.

Some of you are wasting valuable space for the good comments, which poke fun at Last Choice Spittoon, Kathryn Hollingsworth and K-State's kicking game.

If you're going to call in and say, "People should stop leaving stupid messages in the Fourum," why don't you just call in something you feel is not stupid? What is accomplished by anonymously throwing around obvious advice?

Space is wasted. How dare you breathe my precious air and squander the Fourum space. How, indeed?

Even though you can get away with saying nearly anything because of complete anonymity, at least put some thought into it before you dial 395-4444.

If the Fourum is absolute bile on any particular day, it is your own fault. Here are a few hints to make it better:

Libelous comments, messages with cuss words and dirty sex statements won't make it into print.

According to the Fourum policy, your opinion should be based on issues, not personalities or personal vendettas.

But don't forget to keep having fun.

Like one caller commented earlier this year: "Let the Fourum be your Jesus."

Privatization of Social Security not to be feared

Move would benefit women, minorities by increasing profit

SUSAN POWELL

The recent campaign commercials of Jean Carnahan criticize Jim Talent and the privatization of Social Security. Carnahan promises not to "gamble" away our financial security, scaring the public with the innuendo of poverty-stricken retirees.

With our current system of Social Security, this image could become reality.

According to the 2000 report of the Social Security system's Board of Trustees, the Social Security system will begin to run a deficit by 2015.

The Cato Institute, a non-profit organization that researches governmental issues like Social Security, explains the deficit. With many baby boomers retiring within the decade, a great majority of funds will be handed to them via Social Security benefits.

With the surging number of retirees living off Social Security, the youth of America can expect an increase in taxes in the present, or a decrease in their benefits come time to retire.

It seems little is known about privatization, except the myth that it's a risky venture destined to leave an investor bankrupt. There are far more attributes to privatization than our current system, as is thoroughly explained at the Cato Institute's Web site concerning Social Security, www.socialsecurity.org.

The basic idea of privatization is that people have at least partial control over the money they contribute to Social Security. Many derogatory campaign ads imply that all money will be lost on the stock market, when the actual amounts invested are 2 to 10 percent.

Not only is this a marginal percentage, but it also is not mandatory. Privatization is a voluntary program.

Investors can take 10 percent of their annual income and invest it in stocks, bonds, CDs and treasury notes.

History has proven even in our worst of economic times, such as the period of 1929-1948 that included the Great Depression, investment had a positive real rate of return of 3.36 percent.

Our present system has a return rate of roughly 2 percent.

With the current tax structure, many are at a disadvantage, such as women and minorities. Privatization will bring a positive financial change for these citizens.

In a study by researchers at Harvard University, every woman, no matter her marital status, would be better off financially under a system of privatization, the Cato Institute states.

The 1,992 retired women studied compared their Social Security benefits to what they would have received from a personal account that yielded a 6.2-percent return rate. On average, the single women would gain 58 percent more than their Social Security returns, and married women an astounding 208 percent more.

Under our current system, how much in benefits you receive depends on how long you live. The life expectancy of a black male is about two years shorter than a Caucasian male's, meaning a white man would reap more Social Security benefits.

Currently, 29.6 percent of all black people over age 65 have incomes at or below the poverty level. With the increased percent of returns due to privatization, minorities will be able to live more comfortable lives.

So many are ignorant of what privatization is, and such ignorance breeds fear. Yes, the stock market is volatile. But its long-term earnings offer more than Social Security today.

If you are ignorant concerning how to invest, and in what stocks, financial advisers are prepared to help you. There are mutual funds that offer many different stock options so all your money isn't in one basket, so to speak.

We are a highly specialized society. We don't all have knowledge of medicine or automotives or finances. We visit a professional when sick or when the car breaks down, so why not visit a professional to secure our financial future?

The complacent attitude concerning Social Security has to be demolished. It's in our economy's best interest, as well as our own.

Hey, Mr. Gabriel Hughes, what exactly are you trying to say--that everyone in America should not go out after dark and wear bullet-proof vests to school and work? You're dumb.

"The Simpson's" quote of the week: "And when the doctor said I didn't have worms anymore, it was the happiest day of my life."

As long as girls are attracted to guys who are alcoholics and going to mistreat them, we will always have frats.

Happiness is a smiling rhino.

That deserves a little talcum powder.

Does anybody have any talcum powder?

So, Republicans win across the board. That's all the motivation I need to leave the country.

Is it bad that I absolutely love my roommate's mother, Gloria?

My roommate just ate Wendy's. He got the ketchup out of the fridge, but I guarantee it will still be on the coffee table tomorrow. He is the laziest sack in the entire world.

I'm a single guy, and I have a truck--a big one.

John likes high school girls.

With the way the national elections turned out, I suggest that all K-State students take Arabic, because a lot of you will be going to Iraq next year.

To all my peoples in Spanish IV: Did that quiz suck, or what?

The guys at the corner of 12th and Bertrand who gave you a shot at 8 a.m. are tools.

We live in a pink house because it's a half a block away from campus. And you know what? I still get rides to class.

To the girls who are having roommate problems: Look at the bright side. Her boyfriend's body heat will reduce your bills.

K-State cross country team: You guys kicked butt. Congratulations on Big 12.

Instead of a bilingual editorial, can we get a bisexual one?

To all of my ex sorority sisters: If I was going to pay for friends, I'd actually pay for people I like.

Hey, Kent, did they give you money for that interview? Because, maybe, you and Pat could put that money towards fixing all the weights you broke from throwing them down and grunting so loud.

My roommate's girlfriend made him a PowerPoint presentation on how to be a better boyfriend. Does anyone else think there's something wrong with that?

To the girl who called in about having sex with the Marine Corps sergeant: You're a slut.

I know this guy who looks like a pedophile. I was wondering if you could put him on the sexual predator list.

What happened to the gothic couple?

I think Fiji and Chi Omega need some "g-u-i-d-a-n-c-e" on their spirit sign.

Jay, from Apt. 5, who works at Briggs: We called your mom, and she told us about you. We have your cell phone. Please give us a call so you can have it back. It's a black Alltell phone that was found at Britney Ridge.

Wanted: single girl to watch professional basketball game. Contact Paul, sixth floor Moore.

So I'm walking through Old Stadium, and I realized we're watering astroturf.

It's not just the food that keeps you coming back to Mr. Goodcents. The beautiful women help out, too.

Everyone else complains about their roommates. I have the best roommate in the world. She wakes me up for class every morning.

To the guy who lives on the sixth floor of Haymaker: I want you. I need you. Oh, baby, oh, baby.

To the person who checks the answering machine for the Fourum: Beware. I want your job.

To the people who took my clothes out of the dryer before they were finished drying: You owe me a quarter, and I'm very angry at you.

I'm going to put an electric fence around my house, so if anyone else tries to pee on it, he's going to get his little wee-wee shocked.

In regards to the girls who want their roommate kicked out: First off, you can't kick your roommate out because your landlord is sending the girl you don't like leases for all of you.

To Katie, Ali and Shana: Welcome to college. Let's try to be adults.

GENERAL RACE | Election results unofficial until Friday when provisional ballots counted

Campbell said.

In Riley County, 230 provisional ballots were recorded, Campbell said.

Among other items on the ballot, the final accounting may affect the half-cent sales tax that passed in Riley County by 75 votes Tuesday night, she said.

Campbell said provisional ballot voters could contact the clerk's office at 537-6300 to find out if their ballots were used.

Joe Aistrup, head of the political science department, said it is unlikely that the canvass process will garner enough Democratic votes for Biggs to pull ahead of Kline.

"It will be very difficult for Biggs to make up the difference in the provisional ballots," Aistrup said. "It's theoretically possible, but realistically, probably not."

He said a more likely way for Biggs to win would be to have a recount.

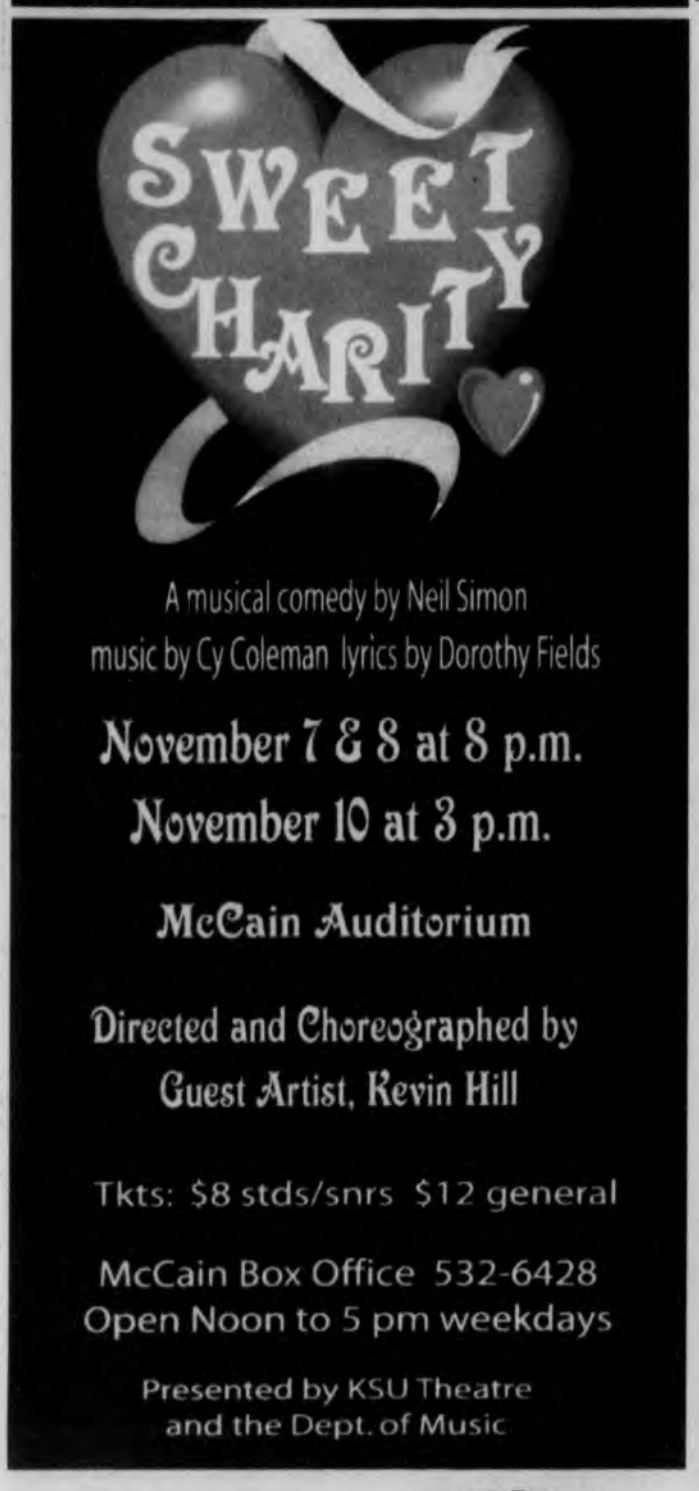
Typically, two-thirds of the provisional votes are accepted, Campbell said. Voters who have moved from a different area of the county are likely to have their ballots accepted, she said.

Provisional voting in Kansas began in 1996, Aistrup said.

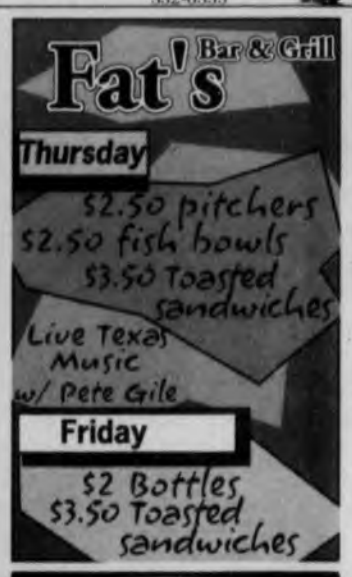
He could not recall any elections that have been significantly effected by it.

The provisional ballot counts as a potential vote, he said, and an automatic voter registration.

Even if the individual ballot is not accepted, the voter is now registered to vote during the next election.



Having recently moved from Hays, Aistrup said he was surprised to see his wife's name, but not his own, on the list of registered voters when he went to vote Tuesday.



"I had to cast a provisional ballot this time," Aistrup said, "so this was particularly relevant to me. I certainly want my vote to count, but there's no guarantee."

Volleyball pushes run to 10 with upset win

Cats shut out No. 20 Missouri with stingy defense, attention to MU tendencies

By Michael Watson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State was already second in the Big 12 prior to playing Missouri, but that position needed to be solidified.

The team did just that Wednesday night.

No. 25 K-State swept No. 20 Missouri in three games (30-26, 30-24, 30-28) before 1,452 fans at the Hearnes Center in Columbia, Mo. Coach Suzie Fritz said it was a momentum game against a tough Tiger team.

"The first game was very important, and it set the tempo for the rest of the match," Fritz said.

"We did well in executing our game plan, and I thought we were very well-prepared, and we stayed well-composed. We won the serve and pass battle against a very tough serving team."

With the win, K-State extended its winning streak to 10 matches. The stretch is the second longest in school history behind the 13-match run posted from Sept. 24 to Oct. 8, 1977.

The Wildcats also extended their school-record conference road-winning streak to 11 matches, dating back to a 3-0 win over Kansas on Oct. 31, 2001.

Missouri entered the match with a 20-4 overall record and a 9-3 mark in Big 12 play. The Tigers had won their last three games since losing to the Wildcats on Oct. 23, including a five-game win over then-No. 23 Texas on Oct. 26.

But K-State shut down the Tigers, limiting Mizzou to a .025 hitting percentage.

It was the second consecutive match in which K-State held its opponent to less than .100 hitting.

And while hitting has been K-State's big ticket this season – the Cats posted a season-best .348 hitting percentage Saturday against Iowa State – it wasn't a strong suit against the Tigers.

The Cats hit only .216.

K-State's defense, though, compensated.

Freshman middle blocker Katie Stanzel and sophomore middle blocker Lisa Martin formed a strong wall for K-State, both setting career highs for blocks, seven and 10 respectively.

Stanzel said the Cats' solid defense was a result of greater attention to the Tigers' tendencies.

"We all knew they ran a pretty fast set," she said.

"We just needed to realize when they were sliding to hit the ball so we could get set up at the net. Blocking is my strength, and I'm just glad to be able to help the team out.

Game 1: K-State 30, MU 26
Game 2: K-State 30, MU 24
Game 3: K-State 30, MU 28

"This was a big game. Missouri had a nine-match home winning streak, so it was great to come out here and beat them."

That momentum could be important as K-State faces Baylor on Saturday, but Fritz said she is not thinking about that just yet.

"I'm just going to enjoy this one," she said. "We'll start worrying about Baylor tomorrow."

Survival of the fittest: Heisman hopeful list whittled down to 7 true contenders

The college football season has now wound down to its fourth and final quarter. In Manhattan, we all know the Cats have three big games remaining, but, around the rest of the country, people are beginning to talk about the Heisman.

JOEL REICHENBERGER

While every school begins the year with its hopeful, many have now been whittled away. Only the true candidates remain. Here's a rundown of who is still standing, and who I think has the best shot at winning the trophy.

7) Maurice Clarett, Ohio State

It's pretty hard to win the Heisman when you're a freshman, and it certainly doesn't help that Clarett has taken a mid-season vacation.

If Clarett had any hopes of pulling the upset and becoming the first freshman ever to win the trophy, he flushed those away by getting injured. Now I guess he can focus on when he wants to jump ship to the NFL, since you know he is so good.

6) Seneca Wallace, Iowa State

Wallace's biggest problem is the rest of his team.

That's not to say that his teammates are bad – they just aren't nearly as good as he is. Whenever he touches the ball, he puts on a show, but sadly, that alone won't win a Heisman. His team got embarrassed by Oklahoma and lost to Texas in a tough game. Those losses have caused the spotlight to move on, and Wallace to fall from the picture.

5) Chris Brown, Colorado

I guess I'm one of the few who has yet to jump on the Chris Brown bandwagon, because frankly, he hasn't impressed me very much.

He raked up 169 yards versus K-State, but 85 of them came on one carry. Outside of that, he averaged 3.4 yards per carry. That's not very Heisman-ish. His best game came at KU where he gained 300 yards. But 300 yards against the Jayhawks is worth about 15 yards against most teams. He currently ranks fifth on the Heisman watch list.

4) Carson Palmer, Southern California

As another player K-State faces, Palmer also fails to impress me. Against the Cats, Palmer pretty much played like an overrated buffoon for three quarters before he finally pulled his head out and put on a decent show in the forth quarter.

Sorry, Carson, it takes more than one quarter a game to earn my respect. Palmer is currently fourth on the Sports Illustrated watch list.

3) Ken Dorsey, Miami

Dorsey has earned my respect.

The guy is awesome and is almost through with his second season of domination. Sadly, I don't think he will end the season with enough horses to win the Heisman. That whole little thing about losing to Rutgers for three quarters is the anvil around his neck. Ken is third on my list.

2) Willis McGahee, Miami

McGahee has stepped up and proven he's the real muscle behind the Miami attack.

That, alone, has vaulted him into the hunt for the Heisman. It doesn't help that he is so young – only a sophomore – and in the end, that was the deciding factor for me in picking someone else.

1) Byron Leftwich, Marshall

For me, this guy is the shoe-in to win the crown.

Just watch some of his games – he defines the term tough. In his last game against Akron, he severely injured his ankle, but when his team was down, the injury didn't stop him from coming back into the game. He couldn't run and could barely even limp. In the end, his heroics didn't win the game, but wow, they were awesome. This guy proved he is made of steel – in mind, heart and body.

All of that coupled with the fact that he has an amazingly accurate arm earns him my vote for the Heisman this year.

Joel is a junior in print journalism. You can e-mail him at pilotksu@hotmail.com.

CAT CALENDAR

After a busy Saturday of Wildcat sports, things will slow down a little until the women's basketball preseason NIT kicks into gear next weekend. Here is a look at Wildcat sports for the next week.

Friday
- Women's Basketball — Cats conclude their exhibition play when they take on the Basketball Travelers at 7 p.m. in Bramlage Coliseum.
- Tennis — Day one of the Arizona State Invitational in Tempe, Ariz. The tournament is the Cat's last of the fall.

Saturday
- Football — K-State looks to extend its winning streak to three when it takes on Iowa State at KSU Stadium. Kickoff is set for 6:10 p.m. and will be televised on TBS.
- Volleyball — Because of the football game, the time of the volleyball match has been moved up to noon. This will be the last match for the Wildcats for nearly a week and a half.
- Tennis — Day two of the Arizona State Invitational in Tempe, Ariz.

Wednesday
- Men's Basketball — K-State's final men's exhibition. The Cats play Athletes First at 7 p.m. in Bramlage Coliseum.

Football | Newman 1 of 5 defensive back semifinalists to make Thorpe list

K-State cornerback Terence Newman was one of 14 semifinalists announced Wednesday for the 2002 Jim Thorpe Award, presented annually to the nation's best college defensive back.

Newman, senior from Salina, Kan., was one of five defensive backs from the Big 12 Conference on the list. Seniors Rod Babers (Texas) and Sammy Davis (Texas A&M), join Oklahoma juniors Brandon Everage and Derrick Strait as semifinalists.

It is the second straight year that Newman has been a semifinalist for the Thorpe Award.

THORPE AWARD SEMIFINALISTS

Rod Babers, Sr., Texas; Sammy Davis, Sr., Texas A&M; Mike Doss, Sr., Ohio State; Brandon Everage, Jr., Oklahoma; Terrance Holt, Sr., North Carolina State; TERENCE NEWMAN, SR., K-STATE; Willie Pile, Sr., Virginia Tech.

Troy Polamalu, Sr., USC; Etric Pruitt, Jr., Southern Miss; Stuart Schweigert, Jr., Purdue; Derrick Strait, Jr., Oklahoma; Shane Walton, Sr., Notre Dame; Dennis Weathersby, Sr., Oregon State; Eugene Wilson, Sr., Illinois.

NCAA | Texas put on probation

College World Series champion Texas was put on two years probation by the NCAA on Wednesday for illegal job benefits given to a former volunteer assistant coach.

The NCAA determined that assistant Richard Couch took a job at a beer distributorship owned by a former university regent but didn't do any work. Instead, Couch spent his time working on activities related to the baseball team, especially recruiting.

NCAA rules prohibit volunteer coaches from being on an athletic department's payroll or receiving preferential treatment in an outside job arranged by the department.

The Longhorns won their fifth national title and first in 13 years by beating South Carolina 12-6 at the College World Series in June.

Reggie Duncan, one of the most highly sought prep running backs Kansas has recruited but who's career never seemed to get started, is no longer with the program.

First-year coach Mark Mangino declined to say whether the junior tailback decided to leave or had been dismissed.

Duncan redshirted in 1999 before rushing for 207 yards, including 96 against Nebraska, in 2000. In 2001, he had a team-high 739 yards rushing even though the offensive line was not strong.

Theater to present '66 musical comedy tonight in McCain

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Behind the flashy, retro costumes and sets, and beatnik references, the story of the 1966 musical comedy, "Sweet Charity," still holds true.

"I think it taps into a lot of emotions people feel with relationships today," visiting director Kevin Hill said. "We're all looking for love in one way or another, and most of us look for it in strange places."

As the title character, Chantel Green, junior in theater, said Charity might look for love in strange places, but her personal motto and attitude give people a way to relate to her. That motto, "Without love, life has no purpose," is what drives the naive Charity through a series of encounters with men who leave her with nothing but her own desire for love.

Charity is Green's first big role in a production this size after playing smaller roles in "Crucible" and "The Taming of the Shrew" as well as a lead in "Extremities."

- Tickets
  $8 for students and seniors, $12 for the general public, available at McCain Box Office, 532-6428, or online at www.ksu.edu/mccain.

"Chantel had an innocence about her that I was looking for," Green said. "She has an almost child like quality, and in my mind, that is Charity. She's a child who wants a fairy tale romance."

The musical, written by Neil Simon, with lyrics by Dorothy Fields and music by Cy Coleman, is about a dancehall girl named Charity and her pitfalls on the way to finding love. After being jilted and cleaned out by other men, she falls in love with the nervous Oscar, played by George Stavropoulos, junior in theater. Charity must decide whether to tell him she is basically a prostitute, which might ruin her chances of leading a normal life.

The 1960s costumes were designed by head of the theater design program Dana Pinkston, associate professor of theater.

She said she looked at photographs of New York City in the early and mid 1960s, looking at both high fashion and everyday clothing. For the colorful girls of the Fandango Ballroom, Pinkston said she filed through Frederick's of Hollywood catalogues and pictures of prostitutes on the streets of Mexico. While it was OK to make the girls stand out, their costumes also serve another purpose.

"I wanted to make each one of the Fandango girls so out there that the principle characters, in contrast, seem more like real people," she said. "Those girls are more like caricatures in a sense. Then, when Charity and Oscar come forward, they seem to be more human."

Containing that flashiness was a concern when putting together a play that could easily slip too far beyond the trappings of reality, Hill said.

"I like going to the theater and watching characters develop, and find truth and honesty in those characters," he said. "It's a challenge to keep that the main focus when you're directing a musical that has such a potential to go campy and caricature ish."

"There is a campiness to the Fandango girls, but there is also still a reality to them."

Green said she enjoys taking on a role that combines acting, singing and dancing in one production.

"While I'm doing it, it's not bad at all because I'm in the moment and going with it, but when I get home, I'm knocked out," she said.

Aggie Station owner's college experiences motivates comedy bookings

Weekend ticket to include television-tested comedians

By Adam Lee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A college memory has made comedy a regular feature in Aggieville.

Wade Phillips, manager of Aggie Station, said that when he was in school, bars often had a night devoted to comedians. He always enjoyed those nights, and when Phillips started managing a bar in Manhattan, he didn't see anyone else doing it, so he started booking comedians.

"It was tough at first to get people to come to Manhattan, but after making a few contacts, it's been easier to schedule shows," Phillips said.

Phillips was impressed with T.R. DeGraw's performance on HBO's "U.S. Comedy Arts Festival" and got him to perform in his bar. Phillips was successful, and DeGraw's performance Friday marks an evolution of comedy at Aggie Station.

Variety Magazine called T.R. DeGraw "the Kid Rock of Comedy." DeGraw doesn't shy away from this label, one that he attributes to his abundant amount of tattoos and piercings. Instead, he has used it to carve out his own comedic niche and to create a name for himself.

"I guess I'm sort of white-trash, but in a cool way," DeGraw said.

His radically rustic lifestyle provides DeGraw with much of his inspiration when writing material. DeGraw said he likes to focus on the subtle, yet peculiar aspects of his daily interactions with people.

"It's kind of cliché to say that you draw from your own experiences," DeGraw said, "But I try to offer a different perspective."

Many of DeGraw's jokes focus around his childhood in Memphis, Tenn., and his parents, whom he describes as dysfunctional. Though he uses his parents' shortcomings for a few laughs, DeGraw is quick to point out that he has forgiven them and isn't trying to place blame on anyone.

"My comedy has the underlying notion that all the problems that happen in life aren't anybody's fault but your own," DeGraw said.

Tomorrow night's stop at Aggie Station is part of a relatively new endeavor for DeGraw – touring. DeGraw hasn't done much road work, instead sticking to the comedy clubs in his hometown of Los Angeles. A lack of touring doesn't correlate to a lack of experience. DeGraw has worked with several industry stars including Andrew Dice Clay and Richard Pryor.

Phillips hopes the show will keep people coming back for the other 16 scheduled nights featuring comedians. Emil Fry, also known as The Fryman, will be warming up the stage as the opening act.

Fry started his comedy career during the first grade in his home country of Iceland. Since then, he has moved to St. Louis where he has continued to develop his comedy and appeared on shows like BET's "Comicview."

"I've heard nothing but good things about him from my friends in St. Louis," Phillips said. "He's got a loud, in-your-face style, sort of like Sam Kennison."

Winona Ryder convicted of grand theft, prosecution won't seek jail

A jury on Wednesday found Winona Ryder guilty of stealing more than $5,500 worth of merchandise during a shoplifting spree at a Saks Fifth Avenue last year, but the actress will likely avoid jail.

The prosecutor said she wouldn't try to put the 31-year-old behind bars, saying she would seek probation, community service and restitution at Ryder's sentencing Dec. 6.

Princess Diana's former butler to be London TV quiz show host

Paul Burrell, a former butler for Princess Diana, who has fascinated Britain with disclosures about her private life, will be host to a new TV quiz show called "What the Butler Saw."

The London show, devised by quiz show creator Stephen Leahy, will ask questions that focus on newspaper articles, social history, scandals and the British royal family, Burrell's personal manager, Dave Warwick, said Tuesday.

A court found Burrell innocent Friday of stealing more than 300 items from the princess and other members of the royal family. On Tuesday, the tabloid newspaper The Sun began publishing excerpts from a 39-page statement Burrell had given to police, saying how Diana had smuggled lovers into Kensington Palace and dressed scantily to greet one.

A Rally Monkey movie? Not so fast, the Angels say

The World Series champion Anaheim Angels aren't about to let anyone monkey around with their mascot, especially when it comes to a movie.

Larry Cano, an executive producer of the 1983 film "Silkwood" views the Rally Monkey as a role model for children.

Cano has filed a trademark application for the term "Rally Monkey" and a script treatment with the Writers Guild of America.

But the Angels and Major League Baseball say they have prior rights to the name, and have begun enforcing them against others looking to make a buck from the monkey.

LISTENING BOOTH

The Collegian wants to know what music you are listening to. If you are passionate about music and want to express your opinion, e-mail A&E Editor JJ Duncan at jduncan_80@hotmail.com.
This week we asked Anthony Palacios, custodian specialist, what he's listening to.

What five albums are you listening to and why?

1. Ani DiFranco: "Revelling/Reckoning"
It has a really personable, acoustic feel. I like the new stuff on this album. I listen to "Dialate" a lot, too. This is more jazzy. She has a good voice and a unique style. I like the second disc, "Reckoning," because it's more upbeat.

2. Sublime: "Sublime"
I listen to this album because it reminds me a lot of California. I lived out there for eight years, and the album has that vibe to it. It has this talented trashy feel. It's a good album.

3. Soundtrack: "Moulin Rouge"
I like a lot of the songs on the soundtrack because it's modern and classical music at the same time. I love the movie, too, but I like the music separate from the movie.

4. Tool: "Aenima"
This has more of a hard rock under it. It's not so straightforward, and that's why I like the group. This is the album I've been listening to recently, but I like all their stuff, and the videos are always unique. They're a very artsy group.

5. System of a Down: "Toxicity"
It's a step up from the band's last album because they show more control over the music, and it's more unique. They found their stride on this album. They have crazy stuff right with the melodies. It's open and free music.

STUDENT | Contest winner has strategy ready if game gets out of hand

was Kearney who came out victorious.

He said he didn't compete with the intention of winning.

"Just some of my buddies and I went out and gave it a try," Kearney said. "We were just out to have some fun."

But in the process of having fun, Kearney advanced through the bracket and eventually became the winner.

With the win, Kearney also received the title of the 2002 "Rudy." Kearney will have a better chance of getting into the game if fans chant "Rudy! Rudy! Rudy!"

The coach for EA Sports, Maz Trakh, isn't obligated to put Kearney in, but if the game is out of hand, courtesy of either team, then he might have a better chance, he said.

Kearney said he has a strategy for when or if he gets in, but it might change when that time actually gets there.

"Probably try to score," he said. "Or maybe foul so that I can get in the stat book."

EA | Wooldridge hoping to better dismal exhibition record tonight at Bramlage

the league.

"We're doing it in the best conference in the country," he said. "Steps that move us forward are coming against the best competition in the country."

But not since his first season here has Wooldridge been presented with such a void of returning talent.

In that statement lies true challenge. Have the Wildcats improved their program from a year ago, even after losing three of their top four guards?

Wooldridge said he thinks they have.

Tonight, he will have the opportunity to defend his claim.

K-State men's basketball will open the season with its first exhibition game tonight versus the EA Sports Southeast All-Stars

Wooldridge and the Cats hope to improve on what has become a dismal exhibition game record. Before they beat the NBC Thunder last season, the Cats had not won an exhibition game since the 1998-99 season. They are 1-3 during Wooldridge's tenure.

But, Wooldridge said, winning is only one objective.

"It's an opportunity to evaluate where we are with our team in every phase – conditioning, recognition, where we are offensively and where we are defensively," Wooldridge said. "The guys are wanting to compete against other people besides themselves, so it's a time to compete, it's a time to evaluate at the same."

Rather than line up the best five players and run them the entire game, Wooldridge said tonight's contest will be about learning new things about his team.

He said the Cats will be trying new things out in hopes of figuring out what works best with which players, so that everything can be ready when the regular season starts.

"We're going to look at different combinations of players, so in that sense it is a bit different than the regular season," he said.

In fact, there will be a new combination of players from the start. Wooldridge named his starters, including three returning forwards: Pervis Pasco, Matt Siebrandt and Gilson DeJesus, along with new guards Frank Richards at the point and Jarrett Hart on the wing.

One thing Wooldridge won't change is the triangle offense.

He said the new guys have taken to it rather well, and should know it well enough to try it out for the first time against real competition.

"The triangle in itself is not that difficult – it has got some reputation that it is, but it's really not," Wooldridge said. "But that's our basic format. We have other varieties of offenses that we show, but we're really just on the surface of that now."

For K-State, the exhibition game tonight is about getting off on the right foot for the long season ahead, Wooldridge said.

In his continuing endeavor to turn the program around and stay above water in the Big 12, he said he knew that this season will be an important one.

"I think the program is in solid condition but I also know that the program has to move forward," he said. That's our challenge. Can we move it forward during this season?"

we kick ads.

Kappa Theta fraternity and Phi Gamma Delta fraternity won in the greek division.

Hannah Mueldener, freshman in elementary education and member of Chi Omega, said the win is bittersweet after all the hours of practice.

"It feels really great – we put a lot of time in. We have come out here every night for the past couple weeks in the cold for a couple hours at a time to practice," she said.

Decker-Heidrick said the rules for the competition changed this year in order to shorten and simplify the event. The event also changed venues from Ahearn Field House to Memorial Stadium.

"We tried to put it back to the days when the yell competitions were out at Memorial Stadium – we are trying to go back to that this year," she said.

Aside from the cold air, Mueldener said she liked the location change.

"I like having it at East Stadium," she said. "It ties our history and our new traditions together."

Although her group didn't win, Rebecca Thrasher, sophomore in human resource management and member of the Moore-Marlatt residence hall team, said she liked the atmosphere at the event.

"I love all the creativity and seeing what everyone can do," she said.

"Memorial Stadium looks awesome, especially with the new Alumni Center."

Chico Crichlow, an alumnus and judge of Wednesday night's competition, said the event was judged on three criteria: originality, participation and morale.

He said the students are what make the event popular and exciting.

"They give the support and the morale to show that K-State can be number one," he said.

Decker-Heidrick said the event was designed to draw in members of the community and to bring students together.

"We encourage members of the community to come out – faculty, staff, parents, young people, old people – everyone to come out and experience it, because it really is a neat event. The students have a lot of excitement and spirit built up over the course of the evening, and it really does carry over Homecoming week and into Saturday," she said.

Can the 'Canes repeat? Can the Sooners make it two out of the last three? Who will win the Heisman? How many polygons does a Butkus Award winner get? Where is Berkeley? The answers to these (No. No. Look to Texas. Thousands. Take I-80 west and follow the signs.) and other pressing questions can be found in this year's College Football Top 25 poll:

1 CAL

So they went 1-10 last year. Big deal. Serious time spent in the Blue Chip Recruiting Mode has made this team into a rough bunch on the gridiron. That combined with a new Power I formation adds an unexpected threat for this turn-around team.

2 MIAMI (FL)

How good is this team? Eight or nine of their starters should be in NFL GameDay™ next year. The 'Canes may have the toughest schedule in football, with games against the Florida Gators, Tennessee Volunteers, Virginia Tech Hokies and Florida State Seminoles. About the only quality teams not on their schedule are in the NFL.

3 OKLAHOMA

New Hot Routes can put the 2000 NCAA champs right back at the top. Which means almost as much to this Oklahoma Sooner team as beating their heated rival, the Nebraska Cornhuskers. But, kicking game may be a chink in the armor.

4 COLORADO

Will the Buffs defend their Big 12 crown using the wishbone? The flexbone? The full house? Only the coach controlling the playbook knows for sure.

5 TENNESSEE

New high-low tackling may allow the Volunteers to field their toughest defense in years. And defense wins championships. The question is: will their offense underachieve? A 0-0 game doesn't go down in the win column.

6 TEXAS

Can their quarterback capture the Heisman against what may be the toughest conference in Division I football? Can the defense come up Texas big? Not even our highly evolved artificial intelligence can answer that one.

7 FLORIDA STATE

Same coach. Same expectations. Same potential: Nothing but a national championship will do.

8 FLORIDA

New coach. Same expectations. Same potential: Nothing but a national championship will do.

9 UCLA

Look for the Bruins to utilize a sensational receiving core and Hot Routes to vie for a national championship. Then expect the Bruins to vie for a championship all over again in the NCAA® Final Four® 2003 edition.

10 UNIV. OF TOLEDO

A great run in Career Mode gets these overachievers a major BCS Bowl bid and a Top 10 finish. And their coach the chance to take over a major college powerhouse. Enjoy that animated contract, coach.

11 WASHINGTON STATE

A strong passing offense makes them a team to beat. Explosive gameplay makes this perennial Pac 10 little brother into a legitimate head-turner. WAZZU is ready to play with the big boys.

12 ALABAMA

The Crimson Tide not only has the polygons but also the offensive line to outmuscle anyone in college football. Not to mention an impressive amount of depth in the backfield. If that's not enough, new high-low tackling gives their defense the bite it needed. Roll, Tide, roll.

13 OREGON

Blue Chip recruiting made the loss of their 2001 Heisman candidate easier to stomach. A new wishbone offense could help the 2002 Ducks rain on just about anyone's parade.

14 OHIO STATE

More control over the running game puts them at the top of their conference. But they must beat archrival Michigan for the Big 10 Conference title first, which won't be easy, but definitely a possibility for the Ohio State Buckeyes.

15 WASHINGTON

Unproven defense must come through for a Rose Bowl berth. Total Control Passing gives this Husky team a very potent attack.

16 LSU

Tigers are looking to claw their way to another SEC title. Louisiana State University's pass- and run-blocking is top-notch this year.

17 NEBRASKA

Just avenge the CU mauling and beat the Oklahoma Sooners for all to be right in Huskerland.

18 USC

Must turn off "Injuries" for the thin Trojans to succeed. Controlling the playbook is crucial with USC's quarterback.

19 BOISE STATE

Say hello to the first "Houston Bowl" winner. Increased frame rates show that this year these boys are on their way up.

20 AUBURN

Old coach sacked in Career Mode. Team should improve.

21 SOUTH CAROLINA

Lots of excitement building for 'Cocks this year. Volatile offense could be a threat with the addition of a full-house formation.

22 MARSHALL

A weak schedule equals strong wins. Will Keith Jackson, in GameBreaker's booth, call them "rumbling" or "bumbling"?

23 TEXAS A&M

Several players converted to defense. Too bad they're in the country's toughest conference.

24 LOUISVILLE

Gamebreakers on both sides of the ball. Look for the Louisville Cardinals to go to their Wing T offense for big points.

25 PENN STATE

Same classic CGI uniforms. Same classic spot in polls.

2 wounded in Aggieville shooting

Verbal confrontation escalates to violence; 2 male suspects remain in custody

By Dana Strongin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A shooting early Thursday morning in Aggieville wounded two and resulted in two arrests.

Riley County police officers responded to 911 telephone calls reporting gunshots at about 1:39 a.m. at the intersection of Laramie Street and North Manhattan Avenue, according to a Riley County Police Department press release.

When officers arrived at the scene, they found one gunshot victim and were told another had taken private transportation to the hospital.

Michael Wade, 20, of Fort Riley, was wounded in his right forearm. He was treated on the scene and declined transport to a hospital.

Darrel Smith, 21, of Manhattan, was shot in his right foot and transported to Mercy Health Center. He was released Wednesday.

Arrested in connection with the shooting were Ronnel Williams, 22, of Fort Riley, and Reginald Carter, 18, of Manhattan.

Both were still detained Wednesday evening, according to Riley County jail records.

Early investigation reveals two groups of people were involved in a verbal confrontation that escalated to the shootings, according to the press release.

The reason for the conflict still is being investigated, said Capt. Gary Grubbs of the police department's criminal investigations division.

However, Carter and Smith both are listed as living in the same residence, 517 S. 15th, Apt. C.

Williams and Wade both reside at the Fort Riley military base.

Grubbs did not say if this information is relevant to the cause of the shooting.

Search uncovers weapons, drugs

3 women arrested for cultivation of marijuana

By Dana Strongin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department's Pro-Active Drug Unit served four search warrants and made three arrests Wednesday as a result of a drug investigation.

The search resulted in the seizure of 58 marijuana plants, paraphernalia used for the cultivation of marijuana, a small amount of processed marijuana, drug paraphernalia items for personal use and one 9 mm handgun, according to a Riley County Police Department press release.

The three women arrested reside in an apartment complex at 701 Allison, where police held the warrants.

Shirley Burrow, 25, Apt. 11, faces a felony charge of criminal possession of a firearm and misdemeanor charges of endangering a child, possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. Her bond was set at $2,500.

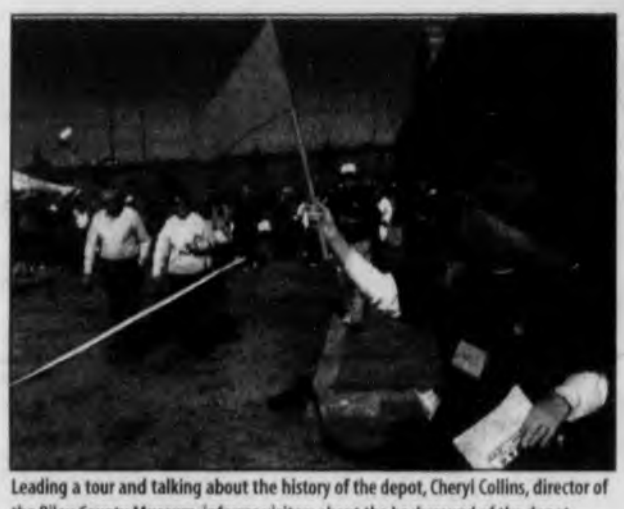
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The dedication ceremony for K-State's Peine Gate will be at 3:30 p.m. today at 17th Street and Anderson Avenue.

The campus section of 17th Street from Anderson Avenue to the south parking lot entrance of the K-State Student Union will be closed from 3 to 4 p.m.



Ron Downey, associate provost and ceremony emcee, said the event is open to the public and should last about 15 minutes.

Downey said speakers include President Jon Wefald; Lee Borck, the KSU Foundation's executive committee chairman; Perry Peine and his sister Cardine of the Peine family.

Gary Hellebust, KSU Foundation president and CEO, said he had discussed with Wefald the gate as a finished

Local depot to become multi-use facility

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Union Pacific Depot is getting back on track.

After 26 years of being closed, renovations are planned to transform the old train station into a public meeting hall. The depot was built in 1901 by the Union Pacific Railroad Company and was used for passengers, often K-State students entering Manhattan. It was shut down in 1976.

Bonnie Lynn-Sherow, executive board member of the Depot Whistle Stop Campaign, said the building will become a multi-use facility.

"It will be open to the public because there is so much public money used," Lynn-Sherow said.

"A lot of people wanted to turn it into a restaurant. It is going to be a multi-use facility where people can hold meetings, hold receptions, art displays and parties.

"There will also be space for people who are visiting Manhattan to pick up brochures, maps and other advertising, including K-State."

Local organizations are working to raise more than $150,000 in order to obtain a Kansas Department of Transportation grant for the renovations.

The project began in 1999, when former Mayor Roger Reitz organized a group of historians, businessmen and interested citizens to plan a future for the building.

Money was contributed starting in 1997, and the foundation of the building was stabilized along with a reroofing project. The Manhattan Riley County Preservation Alliance raised $11,000, the city of Manhattan contributed $111,644, and two federal and state grants totaled $478,496.

Now, it is up to the Preservation Alliance to raise $156,000 by fall 2003, which would be matched by a Kansas Department of Transportation grant. The grant requires local organizations to raise 20 percent of the money and then the grant will fund the remaining 80 percent.

The total depot grant would come close $750,000, Lynn-Sherow said.

However, the grant also requires that the government support the project. At a meeting earlier this year, city commissioners expressed concern on the necessity of the project.

"To put it mildly, the city government does not have the money to be investing at this time," City Commissioner Brad Everett said. "We have already put in a significant part of the money to stabilize the depot. With the fiscal forecast not only of the state, but also the uncertainty of where the city is going to be financially, it doesn't make good sense to spend dollars on non-essential projects."

Jason Hilgers, redevelopment coordinator for the city of Manhattan, said the resolution presented to the commission was the controversial issue, but it is required to obtain funds. The resolution stated that the local government supports the project and will be responsible for providing maintenance and continuing operation of the building.

"That seems to be the sticking point," Hilgers said. "They don't want to see that as a burden on the city and they are looking for the depot committee and local groups to take that over.

Everett said the city should not be responsible for maintenance of the depot when other needs are not being met.

"We asked to have the grant very specific that those dollars being provided are privately funded," he said. "We have more urgent and critical issues within the community that need to be addressed."

Lynn-Sherow said that despite the commission's reluctance, the project will go on.

"The city commission says they aren't going to give any more money," she said.

"They wouldn't even let us apply for the money. Because their excuse was it will take some staff time to write the grant."

By 2005, Manhattan's 150th birthday, the project should be complete.

"It will be a very pleasant corner," Lynn-Sherow said.

Senate turns down enrollment welcome center proposal

Enrollment center plan advocated by Wefald, other university administrators voted down 28-26

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a vote of 28-26, Student Senate failed a resolution Thursday night that proposed an enrollment center be constructed in the east side of Memorial Stadium with money from the City/University Fund.

President Jon Wefald and other administrators had recommended that money from the fund be used to start the construction of a Student Welcome Center, which would combine the offices of admissions, financial aid, the registrar and the controller now located in Willard, Fairchild and Anderson halls.

Reasoning behind the proposal came from numbers indicating Kansas high school enrollment will decline in coming years and K-State will be forced to recruit more aggressively to maintain the current enrollment rates.

Volunteer dedicated to 'sister'

By Pete Elsasser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three hours of community service a week isn't enough for Marissa VanDover.

VanDover, junior in family studies and human services, participates in the Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc.

She said she began working with her little "sister" about two months ago after seeing an advertisement in a newspaper. She said she previously had worked with the organization at her home in Columbia, Mo.

"I saw the ad in the paper here, and I thought, 'Why am I not doing this?'" she said.

She said Big Brothers-Big Sisters is really easy to work with, and the organization makes planning activities with the children easy.

"All kids need direction from someone that's not their parents," she said. "I think it's good for them to get perspectives from people who aren't their family or their classmates in school."

Bill Meredith, director of the School of Family Studies and Human Services, said students completing the family life and community services major are required to do directed field experience. He said volunteer opportunties range from the American Red Cross to the Manhattan Emergency Shelter and various public schools.

"Students learn that they have the ability and skills to do things they never thought they would," he said. "They learn about helping people, communication and the professional world."

VanDover said the program requires her to spend three hours a week with her "sister," but she said she usually spends about 12 hours a week doing activities.

"I try to incorporate school, homework, projects into the time we hang out together," she said.

"We also talk a lot, and I have to be careful of her feelings because she's opinionated about everything."

Students find time for service

By Brad Vogel
WISCONSIN BADGER HERALD

MADISON, Wis. - In a tight job market, community service may increase chances of landing a job.

However, some University of Wisconsin students think they get more than just a competitive advantage out of service.

The Wisconsin Union Directorate's Community Services Committee meets weekly to brainstorm service-project ideas and methods of implementation.

Kristi Voegtline, WUD Community Service Committee member, said she originally got involved with the committee as a resume-building exercise. However, she said she has come to see other benefits.

"You get outside the college atmosphere into the real world," Voegtline said, referring to experiences with an after-school program for homeless children.

"Our students are able to find the time. We find that people have time but don't know where to go," he said. "Campus is too large, and some people need a link to show them where to go and how to do it."

The blotter | Arrests in Riley County

Students with disabilities benefit from new equipment

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For many disabled students, typing a one-page paper no longer requires hours of painstaking work. With the help of the Adaptive Technology Lab, school work gets done in a fraction of the time.

The Adaptive Technology Lab, in Hale 213A, uses computer programs to help students with physical and learning disabilities. The recently upgraded equipment uses voice command technology and scanners to type a paper, use the Internet or read a book.

Gretchen Holden, director of Disability Support Services in Holton 202, said the state-of-the-art equipment gives disabled students a greater sense of independence.

"Rather than waiting for a reader to record a book or read to a student who is blind, for example, a student is able to scan a book into the system and then listen to it on the computer," she said.

Jason Tomlinson, adaptive technology specialist and graduate student in college student personnel, trains 10 to 15 students each week, helping them use programs like Dragon NaturallySpeaking and OpenBook. Dragon, one of the top dictation programs available, allows the user to control the computer by voice.

"The program learns how to recognize your voice," he said. "It teaches itself over time to know different dialects and the tiny differences in the way you say things. You can do basically anything with the program except turn on the computer. You just put the headphones on and speak."

Since coming to the lab in June, Tomlinson has helped students with a variety of disabilities, including traumatic head injury, visual impairments, motor skill problems and learning disabilities.

"A lot of students find it hard to write papers because it has to go through so many different mediums to get it all down on paper," Tomlinson said. "This is essentially straight from the brain to paper."

And there's OpenBook for those who have difficulty reading.

"OpenBook takes a book and scans it into a file. Then it reads the book back to you," Tomlinson said. "It really is remarkable technology."

Holden said the lab has come a long way during the past 20 years.

"Hopefully, we'll keep the pace as technology continues to improve," she said

Tomlinson said such technology is valuable for everyone.

"A lot of what we use today stems from adaptive technology," he said.

Holden said the technology changes lives.

"While the door to education and employment has been opening wider every year for the disabled, this equipment opens the door wider than ever before," she said.

World Tour continues with showcase of cultures

Homecoming theme featured during event in Union Courtyard

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Singers, dancers and a magician highlighted the Wildcat World Tour Showcase on Thursday afternoon in the Union Courtyard.

"We didn't know much about this," Laura Jordan, freshman in graphic design, said. "We're learning about different cultures, and it's really just a lot of fun."

The showcase featured dances presented by Latiritmo, African Student Union and India Student Association, and singing performances by Cadence and United Black Voices. Devin Henderson, senior in family studies and human services, performed a magic show.

There also were booths set up by the Japanese Appreciation Alliance and Japanese Student Association, African Student Union, and Paraguayan Student Association.

"We are promoting our culture," said Manuel Gonzalez, president of the Paraguayan Student Association and junior in finance.

Gonzalez said the showcase provided an opportunity to show students some aspects of Paraguayan culture.

"It's important because a lot of people come to Homecoming activities," he said.

"They come to see, come to know. It's part of our mission to inform students of KSU about our culture."

Emily Bell, member of the All-University Homecoming committee and director of the showcase, said the multi-cultural aspect of the Homecoming theme is important.

"We want to emphasize the world aspect and diversity we have at K-State," Bell, senior in education, said.

The showcase, formerly the Cats Carnival, was more focused on diversity than in past years, Bell said. But, she said, attractions like tattoos and free food and drinks helped maintain the carnival atmosphere.

Student groups have taken the Homecoming theme, "Wildcat World Tour," in different directions – from vacations to band tours.

Bell said the showcase was a way of highlighting the different cultures at K-State, and also an opportunity to get groups involved in Homecoming that otherwise might not be.

"I hope the university realizes the diversity and unique students and qualities we have here," she said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Depot project should receive city's support

Restoration of the Union Pacific Depot, near Fort Riley Boulevard and Kansas Highway 177, might be put on hold.

Manhattan's city government does not want to spend money to support a project seen as a "burden on the city."

But organizations, such as the Depot Whistle Stop Campaign and the Manhattan Riley County Preservation Alliance, volunteered to shoulder the burden.

This is a noble effort on behalf of the preservation societies – they agreed to raise the $156,000 needed to match the Kansas Department of Transportation grant received. If the go-ahead is given, the project will improve Manhattan.

The city should support these organizations in their endeavor.

While contributing tax dollars is not appropriate at this time, the Manhattan government could at least voice its backing of the project.

We see no reason why the city is reluctant to support something that would make the view coming into Manhattan less unpleasant.

Restoring the Depot is worth a try. If nothing else, the city should see this project for its aesthetic value.

You never know – it could turn into something great.

PURPLE PRIDE

K-State's good side isn't hard to discover

ANDREW LAWSON

Many people on this campus do not need to read this column. Chances are, they already know what I have come to understand.

But every time I see someone wearing a Texas Longhorns baseball cap, I am reminded there are plenty who don't share our purple pride.

They are the ones missing out.

In only a year and a half, I have experienced more feelings of loyalty and pride in my life than ever before.

Take last weekend, for instance. As a member of the marching band, I was treated to front-row seats at the annual whipping of the Jayhawks. The weather was abysmally cold, the game was obviously decided, and the KU fan support was anemic, as usual. Somehow, though, the purple ocean remained excited.

You could see it in Terence Newman's eyes as he conducted the band. You could see it in President Wefald's eyes as he gave all the trombone players high fives. You could see it in band director Frank Tracz's eyes as he called out first downs.

You could even see it in Willie's body language as he taunted the Jayhawk mascot.

Purple pride is a very intangible thing, but you know it when it's there. Everyone in Memorial Stadium Saturday could probably remember when K-State was on nobody's map, when the football program was poor and this institution could not compete in academics.

None of us envied KU then. It didn't matter how inferior the Jayhawks were on the field – none of us would ever apologize for exalting in those moments.

I felt the same thing last year when the women's basketball team fell to Old Dominion in Milwaukee and Oklahoma in Kansas City, and when the football team lost to Syracuse in Phoenix.

Win or lose, there is solidarity among those who bleed purple.

It isn't just limited to athletics. I feel the same thing when I hear about our Rhodes, Truman, Marshall, Goldwater and Udall scholars, or the Pacemaker and Best-of-Show awards the Royal Purple yearbook won last weekend.

K-State is the finest institution in the world.

I mean it when I say this is a special place. Attend one of Wefald's State of the University speeches.

He will tell you K-State does more with less money than any of its peer universities, and he'll do it with a gleam in his eye.

I know plenty of alumni who have told me they didn't truly understand how profoundly their years here affected them until well after they graduated.

Whenever I forget to appreciate this university, though, I always see something remarkable that reminds me how lucky we are.

Tracz is always telling the band how we will never find a president at any other university who attends our practices, addresses us personally and constantly levies on our behalf.

When the band needed an assistant director, Bill Snyder said he would take care of it. Not only does the athletic department pay Scott Lubaroff's salary, they also provide us with lunch every home game.

On no fewer than three separate occasions, Tim Weiser has personally helped serve us barbecue for lunch.

It isn't only through my experiences in band that I have witnessed these amazing acts. During one of my campus visits as a high school senior, my tour ran late. My family was unable to eat lunch before our meeting with Pat Bosco, and we were all starving.

So he bought us all lunch in the K-State Student Union.

Lori Bergen, journalism professor, Al Hamscher, history professor, and Jerry Reeck, a dean in the College of Arts and Sciences, have never had a problem with me coming to speak with them about my dilemmas, goals or plans.

I hope I have opened some people's eyes. I might be preaching to the choir, but you can never be reminded too much about how good you have it.

Mostly, though, I just wanted to thank the many wonderful people who have sacrificed so much to help me.

This is one opportunity for me to give back.

Random road trips can be fun, liberating if you follow unwritten rules

KATHRYN HOLLINGSWORTH

Everyone should try it at least once.

It's liberating, pleasurable and might cause guilt, but it's worth it.

Road trips are vital to the sanity and completeness of college life.

It's an opportunity to lose all pride, inhibition and go crazy. I don't suggest packing your trunk with ether and cocaine and picking up hitchhikers, as portrayed in "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas" – although that would be fun.

Here are some guidelines every basic road trip, fueled by insanity and the desire to break free of one's comfort zones, should follow:

1. Take the bare necessities

First, leave the map at home. Having a map takes away from the adrenaline rush. There is nothing more exciting than flying down the interstate and taking the exit that "looks" right. Sure, you might not get to the destination you decided on after a game of eenie, meenie, minie moe, but who cares?

A map symbolizes organization, and once you purchase one and start calculating miles and cost, the joy of jumping in the car and conquering unchartered territory is diminished.

Second, limit your car load to one cell phone – for emergencies only. What is the point of liberating yourself from the constraints of home when you are constantly calling home to check up on what's going on? Believe me, if you leave for three or four days, Nelly is not going to show up at Rusty's and give a free concert with free drinks for everyone with no age limit.

Focus on the next five minutes. Forget about the past and future, and concentrate on making the best of the crazy, insane things you are about to do.

2. Leave your comfort zone

Go somewhere you haven't been, or didn't even know existed. Visiting your grandparents is a nice, responsible venture in essence, but this is missing the point of breaking free of your logical constraints. As a steward of a pending spontaneous journey, you should use common sense and not attempt to make it to a Cancun fiesta in two days.

However, if you have the option and the finances to just drive east, drive east. Pick a road and explore the towns you normally wouldn't give a second thought to.

3. Pick your travel mates wisely

The best road trips include a few random people, left at a party that died, who spontaneously have the desire to go somewhere. If you need more people to pay for gas, or there isn't anyone with a car, find some random acquaintances who can be trusted and who you would like to get to know a little better.

Don't call your best friend and the other three people you always hang out with. Go with someone you don't feel comfortable around, because you are opposites on every end of the spectrum. This will aide in the road trip not consisting of typical activities you are comfortable with. Take a deep breath, and open your mind.

4. Use common sense

"Psycho" was a great movie, but don't be the star. Avoid seedy hotels and dark rest stops.

Call at least one person before you leave so someone has an idea of where you are.

We all need at least one story we can tell our kids when they are making fun of us for being so old-fashioned. "I spent the weekend studying for this really hard chemistry test" is not going to be one of them.

Breaking free of our self-induced barriers is a difficult task, but when you come home with stories to tell and a new outlook on life, you know it was all worth it.

Kathryn is a junior in public relations. You can e-mail her at krh5588@ksu.edu.

TO THE EDITOR

Administrators' salaries should mirror faculty's, extra benefits need to be reported

Editor,

I have found that the best way to be treated with contempt and given the run-around at K-State is to ask about administrator salaries.

One day, I was sent to five different administrators, none of whom answered my question. All I was asking for was a report that listed the salaries of each of the campus' administrators. I assumed this information was readily available, since it is public record.

The only place on campus to find salary information, I was told, is in the budget book, which lists the salaries of all K-State employees.

It is much easier to find information on faculty salary ranges, averages, rankings and gender pay differences.

And it is well-known that K-State faculty have the lowest pay out of the Big 12 schools, and have since at least 1990.

But when it comes to administrators' salaries, there are no such reports. I talked to the Office of Administration and Finance, the Department of Planning and Analysis, the Provost's Office and the Department of Human Resources, and could not find any reports showing administrators' salaries.

Gary Leitnaker, director of human resources, gave me information he uses to compare administrators' salaries to institutions of the same size. President Jon Wefald's salary of $209,820 per year, compared to peer institutions' median salary of $201,159, does not appear to place Wefald anywhere near last in the Big 12.

Granted, there are a few administrators who are paid a little less than the median, but there are others who are paid more.

The administration is also given additional unreported money and benefits from the K-State Alumni Association and the K-State Alumni Foundation, according to an Aug. 6 article in the Manhattan Mercury. Because it is private money, none of it legally has to be reported.

According to the article, Tom Rawson, K-State's vice president for administration and finance, said, "Some of the deans and administrators are provided with cars."

We all deserve to know what our administrators are being paid. These reports should be created every year and made as accessible as faculty salaries.

If we want to keep quality faculty here, we need to start working harder on paying them better.

One step is to have adequate administrator salary reporting. Another is to focus on bringing faculty salaries to the level of administrators.

Forensics team, speakers ranked high nationally

Team members say competition helpful

By Amy Link
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nathan Jackson is a national champion.

He didn't win a race or outrun a linebacker for a touchdown. Jackson did something many would find more scary than the Wildcats' defensive line – public speaking.

Jackson, senior in theater, is a member of K-State's forensics team, Speech Unlimited.

Last year, he won a national prose interpretation event. So far this year he has qualified for nationals in four events. Jackson has been on the team for four years and said the team has helped him in his classes.

"I'm in theater and most of the stuff you do in forensics is like a long monologue, which is often what you do in auditions. It (forensics) helps me with auditions," Jackson said.

Cortney Moriarty, another four-year member of Speech Unlimited, agreed.

"Forensics has given me an opportunity to participate in the (speech) department. It helps apply what we learn in class," said Moriarty, senior in speech and political science.

Craig Brown, director of forensics, said K-State has six people qualified in 20 events at the national competition this year. He said the team has been one of the top 10 teams in the nation since 1991.

"That success says a lot about our students and our administration," Brown said.

Jackson and Moriarty agreed that the support of the K-State administration and President Jon Wefald have contributed to the success of the team.

"The support received is comparable to the best teams in the nation," Moriarty said. "Just talking to other schools has shown that not every university president knows who their speech team is – we are very fortunate."

Even with support, the team members still have a challenge.

Speech Unlimited's season lasts from September to April, Moriarty said. Since tournaments are on the weekends, team members often have to miss some K-State events.

Moriarty said she has had to miss the All-University Homecoming, Family Day and other important events.

Friendships can make the sacrifices easier, though.

Moriarty said she has gotten to know her team members well, since they travel together. She also has developed more personal relationships with her instructors.

Brown said Speech Unlimited uses judges' comments to prepare for tournaments. He said the comments will depend on how difficult the competition was at a particular meet.

"We will have students who get low scores but the judge will write 'you did good, it was just a tough round,'" Brown said. "We compete against good teams every weekend, which can be a double-edged sword because it's great competition, but there is rarely an easy weekend. But it pays off."

And this year proves that. Moriarty said Speech Unlimited is further along this year in getting team members qualified for nationals than in years past.

Brown said there are still some members of Speech Unlimited who need to qualify for nationals, but they will have plenty of tournaments left to do that.

Along with his success, Jackson said he will take the skills and lessons he learned as a member of Speech Unlimited with him after he graduates.

"The biggest thing is the power of communication," Jackson said. "You learn how important communication is every day."

An enrollment center, administrators said, would consolidate the offices into a one-stop shop for prospective students, increasing the attractiveness of the university.

The City/University Fund is generated from sales taxes on items sold on campus. Past projects have included the University Gardens, a rock wall around campus, sidewalk repair, additional lighting and the resurfacing of Claflin Road.

Senate was asked to prioritize a list of projects to be funded in 2005. In committee, senators proposed legislation that called for $2.5 million to be used during the next 15 years – $260,000 per year – for the Student Welcome Center.

The remaining money needed to complete the center would come from a $2 million allocation, during four years, from the university's repairs and renovations account. About $50,000 would be left in the fund each year once the allocation was removed.

Jeremy Stohs, arts and sciences senator, said he was hesitant to tie up the majority of the fund for the next 15 years.

"For 15 years into the future, from now until 2018, the hands of the students, the hands of the administration and the hands of the community are going to be tied," Stohs said. "When projects arise, we won't be able to do it. We are leaving ourselves with very little money. I am not comfortable putting K-State in that situation."

But, Business Administration Senator Damian Lair said, the cost of not putting in the enrollment center is too great.

"If you just look at numbers, to maintain our enrollment, we have to attract more students from Kansas," Lair said. "The other option is out of state. In order to do that, we have to have something more than we do now."

Although Pat Bosco, dean of student life, cites atmosphere as the No. 3 reason students come to K-State, David McCandless, governmental relations director, said K-State's atmosphere has more to do with people than buildings.

"Atmosphere is not an enrollment center," he said. "I didn't come to K-State because of Anderson Hall. I came to K-State because I knew the atmosphere here. It's where I wanted to be, because of the people.

"We do a great job of finding people who can continue that atmosphere. Let's continue to look to the people of K-State. I think we are up to the challenge."

Julie Quackenbush, governmental relations committee chair and author of the resolution, said the administration was committed to listening to Senate's opinion.

"We've been assured that whatever we don't pass will not be implemented," she said.

Chiefs game should be fun

Good offense, bad defense entertaining

COLBY GORDON

The greatest show on Earth returns to action Sunday afternoon as the Kansas City Chiefs start the second half of their season against the 49ers in sunny San Francisco.

Kansas City's combination of a nearly unstoppable offense and a defense that can stop no one makes them one of the best entertainment values in the country.

The Chiefs have the league's third-best offense spearheaded by a potent running attack ranked No. 1 in the NFL.

Behind it all is Kansas City workhorse Priest Holmes.

Holmes already has racked up 857 yards and 15 touchdowns in eight games this season.

Barring an injury, Holmes should continue to put up spectacular numbers in the season's second half.

What makes Holmes so effective is that defenses can't just focus on him. They also have to worry about covering All-Pro tight end Tony Gonzalez.

Wide receivers Johnnie Morton and Eddie Kennison, are also adequate targets for quarterback Trent Green. Despite some bone-headed throws, Green still has a QB rating of 91.3.

So focusing on one aspect of the Chiefs' offense will only lead you to get beat by the other.

The other half of the equation that makes the Chiefs just as exciting to watch is that the defense is the worst in the league and can stop no one. It's quite remarkable – giving up an unbelievable 30 points and 438 yards per game.

The linebackers are slow and have trouble covering tight ends and running backs coming out of the backfield, while cornerbacks William Bartee and Eric Warfield struggle to cover anyone.

If the Chiefs were smart, they would somehow find a way to acquire Terence Newman and Texas' Rod Babers in the draft to help out their secondary next year.

Game Over

EA All-Stars down Cats

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sometimes winning isn't everything.

Maybe even more so when the loss doesn't go against you.

K-State dropped its first contest of the season Thursday night, a 91-81 exhibition defeat at the hands of the EA Sports All-Stars.

The Cats dropped to 1-4 under Coach Jim Wooldridge in exhibition games, but forward Matt Siebrandt said coming out on top isn't always the biggest focus in these contests.

"You want to win, but you need to have your priorities," he said.

"This doesn't count on our record, and we need to get these new guys into a game atmosphere and comfortable.

"I'm concerned about winning and losing, but I'm not going to be real concerned until the 23rd."

Cats drop opener

Here are some of the statistical leaders from Thursday's game.

- Matt Siebrandt 17 points
- Tim Ellis 15 points
- Frank Richards 13 points 10 assists

Siebrandt led the Wildcats with 17 points, but it was the "new guys" that spearheaded a K-State comeback in the second half.

Juniors Jarrett Hart, Frank Richards and Tim Ellis all scored in double figures for the Cats, most of which came in the second half.

Ellis shouldered most of the load in the second frame, scoring 12 of his 15 points coming out of the locker room.

It wasn't enough, though.

K-State was down 22 early in the first half – and 14 after 20 minutes of play – but rallied within four before the EA Sports squad finally pulled away.

Wooldridge said he was pleased with the team's play coming out of the locker room.

"I thought we came back and played well," he said.

"We still made some mistakes that were costly, but I'm not discouraged at all with what I saw out there tonight.

"It was a difficult start, but I don't know if that was a big surprise. But I thought we came back and played a lot better."

K-State shot a sizzling 52.8 percent (19 of 36) from the field in the second half. The Cats also shot 40 percent from behind the arc after halftime.

Richards, K-State's point guard, said the flow of the offense was much better in the second half.

That, he said, can be attributed to the team being more comfortable on the court together.

And it's that kind of productivity he said he expects of the team down the

New players impress in opening game

Richards racks up double-double night

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It didn't take very long to figure out what kind of role Coach Jim Wooldridge envisioned for his four newest players.

Two of them started the game, and the other two were the first Wildcats off the bench, including first-year point guard Frank Richards.

"We recruited him with that in mind – that we were losing a senior point guard and he was going to have an opportunity to step in and play big minutes and play a major role.

"We will count on Frank much like we counted on Larry. He's got to play 30-plus minutes."

Richards, along with Jarrett Hart, Tim Ellis and Marques Hayden, had to be counted on at some point in K-State's 91-81 loss to EA Sports on Thursday night.

For guards Richards and Hart, it was by getting assists. Power forward Hayden grabbed rebounds, and Ellis hammered home his first dunk and drained his first three-pointer.

The three junior college products all scored in double figures in their first action as Wildcats, and Hayden came close to a double-double, with eight points and 10 rebounds.

Richards was able to record his first double-double, with 13 points and 10 assists, and Hart was only one assist away from joining him.

But while the foursome put up some impressive offensive numbers in its first game, Ellis said it was a lack of defense at times that allowed the game to slip away.

Women eye improvement in 2nd exhibition contest tonight

Patterson expects strides in rebounding, positioning, aggressiveness against Swedish professional team

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Totally overwhelming, dominating, relentless.

Describe K-State's display of complete and total superiority over Team Concept in last Saturday's exhibition game at Bramlage Coliseum, and any of these terms are useful.

Or, you could just point to the score – 110-63.

And it's probably a good bet the women of the Solna Vikings are well aware of the possibility of a sound thrashing tonight.

Solna is a Swedish team that plays in the First Division, Sweden's top league. The Vikings will match up with K-State at 7 tonight in Bramlage Coliseum for the first game of a three-state Midwest tour.

Coach Deb Patterson said the Wildcats' focus against Solna is continued growth within the same system that dismembered Team Concept.

"As we head into this game, we're just continuing to look at becoming more and more comfortable with the system," Patterson said.

"It's getting comfortable with offense, where we are when we're there, what to do when we're there and getting a little bit of timing and synchronized play. This early in the season you're just still evolving relative to your timing and your understanding."

Against Team Concept, sophomore Kendra Wecker led all K-State scorers with 31 points and was one of three players who had double-doubles.

Wecker said the Wildcats' most potent weapon is versatility.

"We're just going to go out and try to stay within the framework of our offense," Wecker said. "If we do that, I think we'll put up a lot of points.

"There are a bunch of people on our team that can put the ball in the hole," she said. "We can put Ohlde out on the perimeter or Megan (Mahoney) down low, posting up a 3 guard. It's just everyone being able to handle and shoot the ball."

Junior Nicole Ohlde, who had 20 points, 15 rebounds and nine assists against Team Concept, said K-State is a good team just trying to get better.

"We want to work on some of the things we maybe struggled with a little bit in the last game," she said. "We need to work on defense and really crowd the lane.

"We just need to continue to improve in all areas – rebounding, getting to our positions on the floor, offense, all that stuff."

Patterson said that while improvement is indeed needed, K-State isn't a team that's struggling.

"We're pushing the ball up the floor well and rebounding at a higher level than a year ago," she said.

"We've got better attention to the ball, especially right now on the defensive end of the floor. I think we're very fundamental now on the boards.

"I would hope we can build off that and continue it. And I'm pleased with how that leads to transition game for us. Hopefully, defensively, we can create a few more easy basket opportunities by being a little more aggressive."

It's a good possibility Solna is going to face some aggressive adversity against the No. 5 ranked Wildcats.

Wecker said K-State's play against the Vikings will "hopefully be good."

Totally overwhelming might be a better forecast.

MLB | Zito claims first Cy Young award

Oakland's Barry Zito edged Boston's Pedro Martinez to win his first American League Cy Young Award on Thursday.

Zito, who went 23-5 with a 2.75 ERA to help the Athletics win the AL West, received 17 first-place votes, nine seconds and two thirds for 114 points from a panel of the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Martinez, a three-time Cy Young Award winner, got 11 firsts, 12 seconds and five thirds for 96 points after going 20-4 with a 2.26 ERA. Boston teammate Derek Lowe, 21-8 with a 2.58 ERA, was third with 41 points, and Anaheim's Jarrod Washburn (18-6, 3.15) got one point.

"It's amazing just to be mentioned in the same category as guys like Pedro," Zito said.

"He's one of the greatest pitchers by far, of my era at least. To be mentioned in the same category is mind-blowing."

While saying Zito deserved to win, Martinez said he was "disappointed about all the excuses I have heard about why I didn't win."

NCAA | Michigan men's basketball team puts itself on probation

Michigan punished its men's basketball program Thursday because of a scandal involving a former booster. The school will impose a postseason ban for 2003 and will forfeit all victories from six seasons.

Michigan also will remove four banners from Crisler Arena: for the 1992 and 1993 Final Four, the 1997 National Invitation Tournament title and the 1998 Big Ten tournament title.

The school announced the penalties in a letter to the NCAA on Thursday. By imposing the sanctions, Michigan hopes to avoid a more severe action by the NCAA.

NCAA | Court dates set for two Nebraska athletes

Nebraska quarterback Jammal Lord pleaded innocent Thursday to disturbing the peace. His trial was set in Lancaster County Court for Dec. 20.

The misdemeanor charge carries a possible penalty of up to a $500 fine and six months in jail.

Lord was cited in October for disturbing the peace after Lincoln police were called to his apartment around 3 a.m. on a Sunday morning.

Also charged with disturbing the peace and failure to obey a police order is Nebraska volleyball and basketball player Greichaly Cepero, who was at Lord's apartment when police were called.

Cepero is scheduled to appear in court Wednesday for her arraignment.

Zoë Lewis brings unique, silly style to BirdHouse concert series

By Courtney Duffield
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Zoë Lewis' album cover for "The Fishbone Wishbone Funnybone" claims "if you believe that things can be very important and very silly at the same time, then you'll like these tunes."

Lewis, who will be featured in Saturday's BirdHouse series at the Manhattan Arts Center, said her main philosophy in life is not to take herself too seriously. She also said not to skate over the little stuff, because that is what is really important.

David Kamerer, director of BirdHouse, said Lewis has an undeniably fun optimism.

"She has this infectious enthusiasm that is contagious," Kamerer said. "She has something to say, and she really has done some living."

Kamerer said Lewis will be performing with her Rubber Band, consisting of Kate Wolf on bass, Sylvie Richard on percussion, and Roxanne Layton, of Mannheim Steamroller, on recorder.

Lewis said her music could be classified as world beat grooves.

"I suppose I am a bit of a traveler, a gypsy of sorts," Lewis said. "I really like traveling, because when you are far away, you notice things differently."

Lewis said she left her home fishing town in England at 23. Her life has been filled with adventure ever since.

"My music is filled with stories I pick up on the road," Lewis said. "Even the smallest thing that might seem mundane can be a strange story that makes a great song."

Lewis said she loves adventures, especially strange ones.

"Recently, I went to Thailand to play with The Elephant Orchestra," Lewis said. "I like to have strange adventures."

Kamerer said Lewis has won awards such as the 2002 Kerrville New Folk Award, the 2001 Falcon Ridge Showcase Audience Favorite, and the 2001 Rocky Mountain Folks Festival Finalist.

"The Kerrville New Folk is a very prestigious award," Kamerer said. "Many past winners are famous now, including Lyle Lovett."

Lewis said she takes her life experiences and transforms them into music.

For instance, on her album "Sheep," she sings about working on a sheep farm.

Penny Senften, executive director of Manhattan Arts Center, said Lewis brings something unique to her performances.

"She is not your typical folk musician," Senften said. "She plays eight instruments and she has a very accomplished wide range."

Lewis said her show is enjoyable for all ages. She admires children and the way they see even the smallest things in life as important.

Senften said they are hoping to fill the 160 seats available Saturday night.

"We are competing with the football game, but we hope a lot of people will come to the performance," Senften said.

Meat Purveyors reunite, find success with various cover songs

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Name a bluegrass band that can cover Abba, Ratt and Madonna in the same set and keep straight faces while shifting seamlessly back into its own material.

If you thought of the Meat Purveyors, you thought of the only correct answer. The four-piece Austin, Texas bluegrass band, features Pete Stiles on mandolin, Bill Anderson on guitar, Cherilyn diMond on bass, and Jo Walston on vocals. Devoid of percussive instruments, the band will come back into town Sunday for an appearance at Auntie Mae's Parlor.

The Meat Purveyors and the Pembertons

When and Where: 9:30 p.m. Sunday at Auntie Mae's Parlor
Cover charge: $5

The band had broken up, but got back together to make this spring's release, "All Relationships are Doomed to Fail," and has been touring steadily since the album's release, guitarist Bill Anderson said.

Anderson noted that the band was in Manhattan, N.Y., on Sunday, making this Sunday's performance a weeklong trip from the Big Apple to the Little Apple.

Q: It seems like you've been more widely received since releasing "All Relationships are Doomed to Fail." How has it felt to come back to the band and tour behind that album after breaking up and getting back together?

Anderson: It's almost like we got more popular while we were broken up. We've been having fun this year touring, and it's been going really well. In fact, we haven't had to sleep on as many floors this time around, and sometimes we've actually gotten motel rooms.

People have been enthusiastic about the shows. It seems like sometimes, the only draw back is that, quite often, we'll get multiple shots sent up to the stage. And it's great for a while but then like two-thirds of the way through the set, you realize you're just trashed.

The show in Manhattan got pretty crazy, but the Midwest is like that. People like to drink a lot.

Q: How do you think the band has evolved since such extensive touring?

A: I think we've gotten better. We've gotten tighter and faster with more endurance. The band is doing what it's always done, though. We're still the same thing as we've always been, and I don't think this band will ever change that much. If we wanted to do something different we'd, have a different name.

Q: Why do you play the covers?

A: We make records that sound good, but it's always simple and stripped down. I've played in lots of bands, and this is the most stripped down music I've done. I think that's why we're able to cover the songs we do, because we make them as simple as we can. We get down to the good part of a song.

When you start listening, there are a lot of great songs that are hidden behind questionable production, over production, and sometimes when you take away that other stuff, the song underneath is really catchy and fun to hear.

It's fun to do the covers, too. Half the fun in making albums has been to figure out what songs to cover. Between me and Pete, we write enough songs that we wouldn't have to do any covers, but then it wouldn't be the Meat Purveyors. That's part of our thing. We pick out good songs that most people don't expect to hear from a bluegrass band.

Like when we play "Round and Round," most people don't even realize it's Ratt until the chorus. Then sometimes people will start to laugh, but they love it.

Disney asks court settle Pooh dispute

The Walt Disney Co. filed a request for declaratory judgment in federal court late Tuesday, asking a judge to decide whether an agreement the company reached one day earlier with the heirs of the writer and illustrator of the Pooh books is valid. On Monday, Disney said the granddaughter of Pooh creator A.A. Milne and the granddaughter of Pooh illustrator E.H. Shepard decided to reclaim the international merchandising and movie rights granted to Disney as well as North American merchandising rights given to Stephen Slesinger Inc., and grant them exclusively to Disney starting in 2004.

BOX OFFICE

'Santa' sequel rings in early Christmas with $29 million debut

Kriss Kringle's latest sleigh ride took off at the box office.

"The Santa Clause 2," with Tim Allen returning as St. Nick in search of a wife, debuted as the No. 1 movie with $29 million in its opening weekend.

The horror flick "The Ring" remained in second place with $18.1 million, while Eddie Murphy and Owen Wilson's action comedy, "I Spy," opened as a weak third with $12.8 million.

look to go along with the K-State Alumni Center. He said the discussions with the Peine family concerning donations were completed in July.

"We wanted to have the gate completed while it was still fall," he said. "The construction folks and facilities did a marvelous job to complete it so quickly."

Hellebust said the total cost was in excess of $400,000 and was supported by the Peine family.

The Peine gate is much more massive than the Higinbotham Gate at the southeast corner of campus at North Manhattan and Anderson avenues, he said.

"The Peine family has been very supportive," he said.

"Their involvement with the university dates back to the turn of the century. They've been extremely generous."

DRUGS | Search uncovers drugs

The handgun was found during the search, said Capt. Gary Grubbs of the Riley County Police Department. The endangerment of a child charge was directly related to the weapon's close proximity to a child, he said.

Naomi Read, 23, Apt. 3, faces felony charges of cultivation of marijuana and no drug tax stamp, a felony/misdemeanor charge of possession of drug paraphernalia and a misdemeanor charge of possession of marijuana. Her bond was $4,000.

Tiffany Lewis, 21, Apt. 4, faces misdemeanor charges of possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. Her bond was $500.

All three women had been released from jail by Wednesday afternoon, according to jail records. Police also searched Apt. 7, according to the press release. More arrests are expected in connection with this investigation, Grubbs said. The Pro-Active Drug Unit specializes in cases related to vice and narcotics, Grubbs said.

said he expects of the team down the road.

"That's kind of how we want our team to be like," Richards said.

"Pushing the ball, being aggressive, that's what we want to be like."

With 6:54 left in the game, the Cats were within striking distance after an Ellis 3-pointer closed the deficit to four.

But K-State would get no closer.

Too many timely shots by EA Sports, coupled with untimely turnovers by the Cats, led to a double-digit victory for the All-Stars.

Hart said coming back to get that close, though, is what the team will take with it when preparing for their next exhibition.

"We stepped it up," he said.

"Coach gave us a challenge and we went out there and showed what we can do.

"We had the first-game jitters but we picked it up and showed a lot of character."

COLUMN | Chiefs lack defense

Spending every draft pick on linebackers and cornerbacks should not be out of the question for Kansas City.

One can't help but think of how good the Chiefs would be if they had even a sub-par defense instead of a terrible one.

The Chiefs usually save the best for last, as fourth quarters are usually track meets for Kansas City and its opponents.

The Chiefs have outscored opponents 109-102 in the final quarter this season.

Jeff Garcia and Terrell Owens must be drooling this week over the chance to play against the Chiefs' secondary.

However, the 49ers only have the 17th ranked defense in the league, and with the Chiefs' powerful offense, all of this should make for another great show on Sunday.

"I just wanted to play hard and play good defense," he said. "There was some stuff I could have improved on, like my defense. I could have played a little harder when I was in the game."

Besides that, Ellis did his part. He scored 15 points, including a pair of three-pointers in the Cats' second-half rally and a monster dunk earlier in the game.

"I though he played pretty well tonight," Wooldridge said. "He was pretty active. There were a few shots right around the rim a little bit. He did a pretty good job."

Getting the first game out of the way might prove to be the most important thing the group did Thursday night.

Afterward, forward Pervis Pasco said he could tell the guys were just a little nervous stepping onto the Bramlage Coliseum floor for the first time.

"We take this as a learning experience for the new guys," he said. "You could tell there were a couple of butterflies for the new guys.

"Hopefully, they'll go into the next game and get a chance to notice how the atmosphere is and the crowd"

UNFORESEEN FUTURE

3 important games round out K-State's regular season

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Once again, K-State's season boils down to three games.

Although not in the same situation as last year – the Cats are already bowl eligible – K-State is playing for an outside chance at the Big 12 Championship and a better bowl.

In order to accomplish the first goal, and realistically the second, K-State has to win out, offensive lineman Nick Leckey said.

"With the way we are playing, we are just now seeing what we can achieve," he said. "Knowing we've got this three-game stretch ahead of us against some very good teams, it's going to be a true test to see how much we want it as a team and see where we want to go with our postseason. But it all starts one day at a time."

Those days, for now, involve preparing for Saturday's game against No. 21 Iowa State.

It will be the first in a stretch of three games against traditionally tough Cat opponents.

After Iowa State comes long-time rival Nebraska.

Then the Cats travel to Columbia, Mo., to do battle with the Tigers.

If K-State can win out, they still don't control their own destiny.

Colorado must lose three games in conference play in order for the Cats to go to Dallas to play in the Big 12 Championship.

Because of this, the pressure isn't on K-State, it's on everyone else around them, quarterback Ell Roberson said.

"We somewhat control our own destiny, but pretty much we just have to win and let it all fold into place," he said.

"Like Coach Snyder said, if it happens, it will happen.

"We still have a task at hand of going out and getting wins."

K-State has been able to take care of business the past two weeks, routing Baylor and Kansas.

Against Kansas, fans finally were able to see what K-State can do when they put it all together, center Steve Washington said.

And even though they didn't play like they wanted against Baylor, he said they gained the confidence last week that will propel them into their matchup with the Cyclones.

"Those teams aren't really anything to go with Iowa State," Washington said.

"But in those games we kept everyone healthy and got everyone ready for these next three games because these next three games are very crucial for us."

Whether it was last year to get to six wins or this year trying to get to 10 wins, the road always seems to go through Iowa State, Nebraska and Missouri.

Linebacker Terry Pierce said this stretch normally defines the team's season because they find out just how good they really are.

"We get to the point where we've gotten through the bulk of our season, then we have those three tough games," he said.

"In these last three years, it has been Iowa State, Nebraska and

GAMEDAY NOTES

Football tickets — As of Tuesday, there were 1500 tickets remaining for this weekend's game with Iowa State. If interested, call the K-State ticket office at (800) 221-CATS.

Radio — Fans can tune into KMKF-FM 101.5 or KMAN-AM 1350 for pre-game, game and post-game coverage of the Cats' game against Iowa State. Mid America Sports Network will be the official network carrier for K-State Athletics. The network covers 25 affiliates throughout the state of Kansas. Wyatt Thompson will be the Voice of the Wildcats for 2002, with former Wildcat quarterback Stan Weber on color and Chris Allison on the sideline. Steven Weber is the producer of the Mid America Sports Network.

Television — The game will be televised nationally on TBS Superstation. Ron Thulin joins Charles Davis on the call, with Craig Sager and Erin Andrews on the sideline. Scott Cockerill is the producer.

Storyline — K-State faces its third ranked opponent of the 2002 season when it plays host to Iowa State in a nationally televised game of importance in the Big 12 Conference North Division.

The Wildcats return home after a brief two-game road trip for the seventh of a school-record eight-game home schedule. The Cats are 5-1 at home this year, with the only loss a 17-14 defeat to the now-No. 4 ranked Texas Longhorns.

K-State is also 1-1 against ranked teams so far this season, having beaten now-No. 9 USC 27-20, at home in the Wildcats' first appearance of the year on TBS, and losing to Texas.

K-State (3-2 in league games) remains in third place in the Big 12 North Division standings, a half-game behind Iowa State (4-2) and a full game behind division-leading Colorado (4-1).

The Wildcats are ranked 12th in this week's Associated Press and ESPN/USA Today polls. Among teams with two losses in the coaches' poll, the Wildcats are ranked behind only USC (9th) and Michigan (11th).

This week's rankings are the highest of the season for K-State in both polls.

Series — This will be the 86th meeting between K-State and Iowa State, with the Cyclones holding a 46-35-4 edge in the series. The Wildcats have won eight straight in the series, with the most recent Iowa State win coming in a 27-23 decision in Ames on Nov. 6, 1993. The Cats have won 11 of the last 12 meetings.

K-State holds a 21-20-1 edge in games played in Manhattan, including a six-game winning streak. Iowa State's last victory in KSU Stadium came on Nov. 12, 1988, when the Cyclones went home with a 16-7 win.

The Wildcats have scored at least 28 points in each of the games during the eight-game winning streak in the series.

K-State and Iowa State have played in each season since the series started in 1917.

Last season, Josh Scobey and Ell Roberson each rushed for more than 100 yards and accounted for five touchdowns in the Wildcats 42-3 win in Ames. Scobey carried 32 times for 172 yards and scored on runs of one and three yards.

The last time ...
The last time K-State allowed two players to rush for more than 100-yards a piece was last year when Nebraska's Eric Crouch (106) and Daharran Diedrick (108) did so in the Huskers' 31-21 win over the Cats in Lincoln last year.

Defense will stop Wallace, repeat last year's near-perfect performance

CHRIS SHANK

During the past two years, Iowa State, under the leadership of Coach Dan McCarney, has been compared to K-State. In fact, it has almost seemed like the Cyclones have wanted to be the Wildcats.

And who can blame them?

K-State locked up its 10th-consecutive bowl appearance last weekend and is still in the hunt for the Big 12 North title – nothing too out of the ordinary.

ISU fans, however, are dancing in the streets after two consecutive bowl games.

Although the Clones have those two winning seasons under their belts, they still haven't reached the level of the Cats.

Remember, also, since Snyder's first year in Manhattan, ISU has only one victory against K-State. That was back in Ames during the infamous 1993 "streaker game."

Let's just say it's going to take more than a naked Iowa State student running around for the Clones to win Saturday night.

'Tis the season

You know it's a Saturday in November when the Dev Nelson Press box on the west side of Wagner Field is filled with guys wearing different-colored blazers. No, they aren't all wannabes of TBS sideline reporter Craig Sager – they're bowl officials with Big 12 ties.

This Saturday, representatives from the Cotton, Holiday, Alamo and Independence bowls will be on hand. And although they will be there to see both teams showcase their talents, something tells me they will be remembering only the purple and white by night's end.

Sproles takes the fifth

Last Saturday during a 64-0 thrashing of Kansas, Darren Sproles had his fifth consecutive 100-yard rushing game.

Sproles finished with 110 yards in the game, virtually all of which came in the first half. This weekend, Sproles looks to tie the K-State record for most consecutive 100-yard rushing

See TALKING SMACK Page 6

K-State's shortcomings could open door for Cyclone upset Saturday

ZAC REICKS

So let's get this straight.

K-State has beaten Iowa State eight consecutive times. The Wildcats have outscored the Cyclones during that span by an average margin of what seems like 114 points.

And the last time Iowa State won in Manhattan, Dennis Eckersly was serving up gopher balls to a lame Kirk Gibson who enjoyed about as much mobility as K-State students in their fanciest pairs of Wranglers.

And I am supposed to write about how I think Iowa State is going to win on Saturday?

Well, here goes.

For all the disillusioned K-State fans who still think the Cats will win the Big 12 North, wake up and smell the Buffalo chips.

Top guns

Heisman hopeful Seneca Wallace is more than enough to handle the Wildcat tandem of quarterback Ell Roberson and running back Darren Sproles. Not since the WWF's tag team of Nikolai Volkoff and The Iron Sheik have I seen a more disgraceful duo who can't win the big ones when it counts.

Since the 2001 season, Roberson has lost to Oklahoma, Colorado twice, Texas Tech, Texas A&M, Nebraska, a worthless Syracuse team and a Chris Simms-led Texas squad. And the teams he has beat, well, we all know Bill Snyder's tendency to schedule the best early season competition in the country (pause for every knowledgeable college football fan laugh robustly).

Kicking game

Iowa State is bad once again this year, so there is no reason to talk about that. K-State, on the other hand, is uncharacteristically enjoying choke jobs that would make Scott Norwood proud. Word has it that after the Texas game, Cat fans pleaded with Snyder to make Jared Brite wear brightly colored leg warmers and change his first name to "Rainbow."

Collegian Insight

K-State's offense exploded against KU last week, amassing nearly 500 yards of total offense. Darren Sproles has just less than 1,000 yards for the year, and is also looking to extend his streak of 100 yard rushing games to six straight games.

Defense

30 — Tank Reese, defensive tackle
62 — Corey White , nose tackle
90 — Henry Bryant, right end
4 — Terence Newman, cornerback
9 — Randy Jordan, cornerback

15 — Seneca Wallace, quarterback
45 — Joe Woodley, fullback
4 — Michael Wagner, tailback

Collegian Insight

K-State's defense has held four straight opponents to less than 100 yards rushing. This week, they will have to deal with Heisman hopeful Seneca Wallace. Wallace is third on the Cyclones' all-time career passing yards list and first in career passing efficiency.

Cats' Roberson, ISU's Wallace share similar characteristics

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To the naked eye, Iowa State senior quarterback Seneca Wallace is better than K-State's Ell Roberson.

After all, Wallace has 1,628 more passing yards than Roberson and is ranked No. 8 on the Heisman watch list.

But Roberson is closer to Wallace in a number of areas.

For example, in terms of passing efficiency, Roberson's rating of 131.1 is just 5.4 points lower than Wallace's. Roberson, at No. 4 in the Big 12 in passing, is just two spots away from Wallace at No. 2.

Roberson, on paper, is the better rusher – averaging 76.1 yards per game. Wallace isn't present in the Big 12's leading rushers category.

While Wallace has started and played in all 10 of Iowa State's games, Roberson is only statistically present in eight of K-State's nine contests.

Regardless of the similarities or differences between the two quarterbacks,z however, Coach Bill Snyder said K-State is going to give Wallace the attention any quarterback in the running for the Heisman deserves.

"You probably need to shadow him with about five guys," Snyder said. "And obviously there's a built-in problem with that. He's not a guy that one guy can follow all over the field.

"That's like taking ten guys off of the field and giving Darren Sproles the ball with one guy left. Darren would win most of those battles and so would Seneca Wallace."

Snyder said Wallace, who K-State handled in a 42-3 trouncing of Iowa State a season ago, has confidence to burn.

"He's 11 games better," Snyder said. "Or 12 games. Whatever the number is, it's the experience of being on the field. He's as quick as he always was. He's experienced enough to make improved decisions.

"Seneca was always an accurate passer," he said. "The confidence level has risen to the point where it can be scary sometimes."

Confidence aside, Roberson and Wallace are very similar in how often they get their team into the endzone.

Iowa State's signal caller has guided the Cyclones to paydirt 13 times this year. So has Roberson.

However, Iowa State has three losses to go with seven wins on the season while K-State has just two losses.

Linebacker Terry Pierce said the only difference between Roberson and Wallace lies in arm strength.

"You're dealing with the same type of speed and the same type of talent," Pierce said. "Ell throws the ball a little harder, but you're dealing with the same type of quarterback.

"They're in two different systems and they go about things a different way, but as far as talent and as far as skill level, you're going against the exact same thing."

Roberson said he's going to leave the similarities between him and Wallace to the eye of the beholder when K-State is host to Iowa State on Saturday.

"I know he's a good player," Roberson said. "And I feel I'm a good player, too, so it's just going to be a battle.

"We're trying to get to 10-2 and get to a good bowl. And Iowa State is in our way."

Cats not counting on series history

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State football teams don't overlook people, Coach Bill Snyder said.

Even when preparing to play the Western Kentuckys or the Eastern Illinois of the world, the players still talk with respect and take the games seriously.

But in the last few years, Iowa State has become a doormat for the Cats.

K-State has scored 98 points on the Cyclones during the past two seasons, and they have only allowed 13. The Cats have won 11 of the last 12 meetings, and have dominated the series since Snyder arrived in Manhattan.

In fact, Snyder set up the tradition of beating Iowa State early in his tenure. They were the second conference team he beat on his way to the top, 28-14, back in 1990. Snyder has a better record, 11-2, against Iowa State, than he does any other former Big 8 team.

But only concentrating on those numbers means missing the story of the modern series. Rather than consistently trouncing the Cyclones, K-State actually has had significant trouble with them, Snyder said.

"I can remember going up there and being ranked in the very early years," he said. "We got hammered up there then."

Snyder is referring to 1993, when K-State battled to attend its first bowl game in more than a decade. They also basked in the glow of their first top-25 ranking in more than 30 years, but Iowa State was there to ruin the party.

The 27-23 stunner sent Chad May and the Cats to the Copper Bowl, and dropped them back to No. 24 in the rankings.

Then again, this time in 1999, K-State found itself in the midst of an upset at the hands of the Cyclones.

Iowa State scored 21 unanswered points in the first half, and went into the locker room holding on to a shutout of the then-No. 15 Cats.

"They busted us on a lot of big plays that we hadn't really concentrated as much on, that we didn't think would hurt us," linebacker Terry Pierce said.

Pierce was a redshirt freshman at the time, but he said he remembers how the Cats turned things around.

"We went in at half time and adjusted to it and came out and played just fine in the second half," he said.

K-State scored 35 points in the second half behind backup quarterback Adam Helm and won the game 35-28.

"That was just a lesson learned for us," Pierce said. "I think you have to learn that you can't just come out and win every game, you have to come out prepared and you

Cats' success against Jayhawks allows Alsup to gain experience

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Matt Stamey | COLLEGIAN
Carlos Alsup jumps past a University of Kansas defender Saturday during K-State's 64-0 shutout of the Jayhawks. Alsup has seen action in all nine games this season and is averaging 3.9 yards per carry.

In K-State's 64-0 dismantling of KU, the Wildcats walked all over the Jayhawks for 337 yards on the ground.

As usual, Darren Sproles and Ell Roberson led that attack, carrying the ball 15 and 13, respectively.

But there was a new back carrying the ball in Lawrence last weekend.

Freshman Carlos Alsup carried 11 times for 35 yards against KU, eclipsing his previous number of carries by nine.

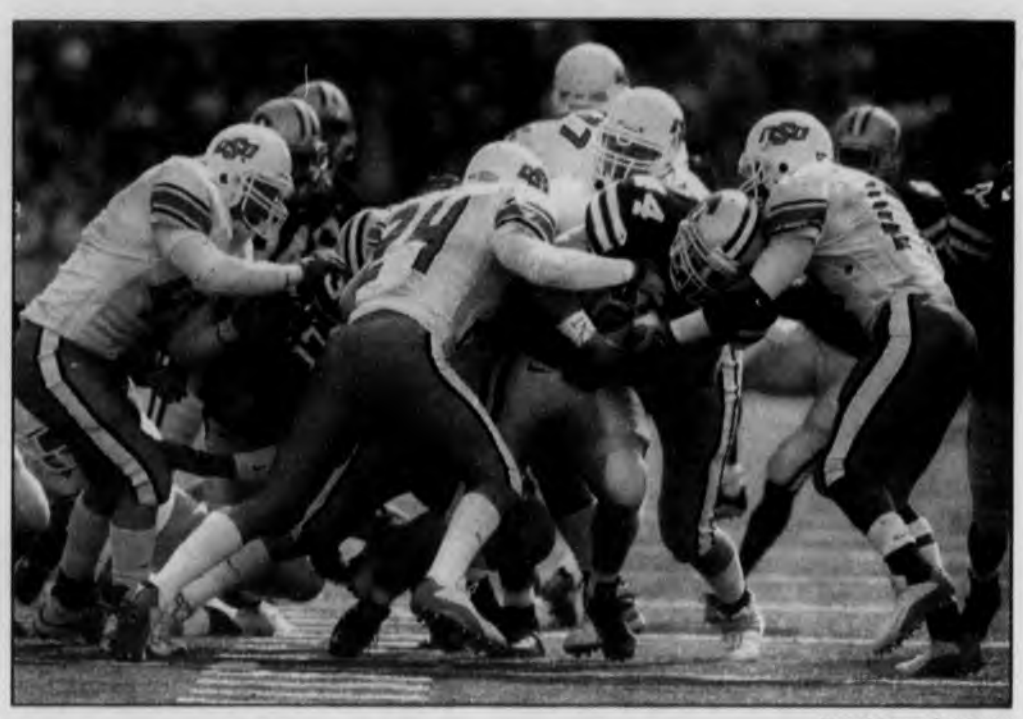
The main reason for Alsup's low repetition numbers is Roberson's and Sproles' ability to carry the Wildcats' rushing load.

Part of the reason Alsup hasn't seen more rushing time has to do with him being a defensive back. At least that's what he was until about three weeks ago.

Running backs coach Michael Smith said Alsup's move to running back, was a decision Alsup made himself.

"He just decided he wanted to play running back and coach is always giving those guys an opportunity to play what they want to play," Smith said. "It's been a smooth transition for him.

"We thought he was a tremendous running back out of high school, and I still feel the same way. The thing Carlos is doing now is learning the nuances of the position at this level and trying to get better every day."



Alsup said the reps he saw at Kansas were gratifying.

"The carries I got against KU were exciting for me," Alsup said. "I'd never carried the ball that much since I'd been moved back over to running back. To have that experience, to hold the ball in my hands, was really exciting."

Alsup's credentials at running back may be part of the reason the freshman was allowed to change positions.

A four-year letterman at Liberal High School in southwest Kansas, Alsup started for three years and scored 43 touchdowns on his way to rushing for more than 3,000 yards. He also won state titles in the 100

Fullback Travis Wilson recovers a kickoff in the Oct. 12 Oklahoma State game. K-State won the game 44-9.

Fullback content with going unnoticed

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Being a fullback is sort of like being an offensive lineman or tight end.

No one seems to notice you until you mess up.

At least that's the experience K-State's Travis Wilson has had.

Wilson, a transfer student from Michigan State, spent a quiet first year on the K-State campus.

He was required to sit out a year of football after transferring and spent the season working with the team. While doing so, he earned the Red Raider Award for performance on the Wildcat scout team.

But no one outside the program noticed.

Wilson was highly respected by his teammates. So much in fact, that they voted him a team captain for the 2002 season.

Again, few took notice of his accomplishments.

Then he was arrested during the summer for battery, battery of an officer, criminal damage to property, obstruction of the legal process and aggravated intimidation of a witness.

And everyone noticed.

"It is tough to think that because you're a player that anything negative gets blown up more than anything positive," Wilson said. "I didn't get much press until I got in trouble, and then I got so much because of that. It has really overshadowed everything good."

Wilson was forced to face the media storm that quickly built around him, his coach – who had asked for a private meeting with him – and the team, which had just elected him as one of its leaders.

After meeting with Coach Bill Snyder, Wilson was forced to give up his position as team captain.

He then had to apologize to the team.

"It was real hard," Wilson said of the experience.

"It almost brought me to tears the first couple times I had to talk to the team about it."

One of the hardest parts, Wilson said, was standing in front of the team he knew he had let down.

"You know they voted –

Gameday breakdown

Here is a look at the top four matchups for this weekend's game between K-State and Iowa State.

Iowa State key components

Seneca Wallace
IOWA STATE QUARTERBACK

Wallace has been a one-man wrecking crew for the Cyclones this season. Wouldn't it have been interesting if Wallace would have come to K-State instead of Marc Dunn? It could have happened. But K-State probably would have had more QB controversy than they did at the beginning of the season.

Clone receivers
LED BY LANE DANIELSEN

The main reason Iowa State's receivers are good is because Wallace has been able to make them look good. Danielsen leads to the team with 41 catches, but three other receivers have 30 or more grabs. This shows there are more threats than just Danielsen that Wallace can choose from.

Opportunistic Defense
LED BY BRANDON BROWN

As a defense, you want to create turnovers. Iowa State's defense has been able to do that. The Cyclones have amassed 25 sacks already, while also forcing 15 fumbles and picking off nine passes. Brown leads the Cyclones with 103 tackles, but has a nice supporting cast of Matt Word and Jeremy Loyd.

Dan McCarney
IOWA STATE COACH

McCarney has turned Iowa State into a nationally recognized program. Although he may not stick around to help continue the tradition, his work has been noted. The Cyclones' nine wins in 2000 were the most by an ISU team since 1906. Old friends reunite here, but McCarney hasn't been to get that win over Snyder.

Advantage

Reason: Wallace may have said bye-bye to the Heisman, but he's still good.

Reason: This is where Bob Elliott's knowledge pays off.

Reason: Sproles is in the zone.

Reason: 11 out of the last 12 is a big stat here.

K-State key components

Ell Roberson
K-STATE QUARTERBACK

Last week against Kansas, Roberson showed just how capable of a quarterback he can be. The junior completed his first five passes against the Jayhawks, and was able to run the offense effectively as the Wildcats ran circles around the in-state rival. But Iowa State's defense is just a little better.

Cat Secondary
LED BY DEFENSIVE BACK TERENCE NEWMAN

The Cyclone receivers aren't quite as fast as the Texas receivers were, but they are decent. K-State's secondary is still a little battered and bruised, but they welcome back Bobby Walker to the starting rotation. Expect defensive coordinator Bob Elliott to continue to rotate his men in and out.

Darren Sproles
K-STATE RUNNING BACK

What began as a wish and a prayer that Darren Sproles would be half the running back Josh Scobey was last year have now turned into praises that perhaps one of the best rushers in K-State history is in the backfield right now. Sproles is going for his sixth straight 100-yard rushing game, which would tie the Cat record.

Bill Snyder
K-STATE COACH

A rarely satisfied coach is probably the best kind. Snyder has continued to stress consistency with his team, which they will need going into these last three games. Only once has K-State's general lost to Iowa State. His attention to keeping a strangle-hold on the series has probably stemmed from his days at Iowa.

WILSON | Fullback leaves off-season legal troubles behind, proves worth in Wildcat backfield

I'm the captain. For me to mess it up like that – that really hurt me to do that to the rest of the team," he said.

The situation that had developed out of Wilson's arrest changed him in several ways, but in several others he didn't change at all.

He said that afterward, he grew up.

"It made me grow up, made me only trust certain people and just stay out of trouble and keep to myself a little bit more, and keep myself out of certain situations – really grow up as a person," he said

But the arrest didn't affect how Wilson played or how he leads his teammates.

As time passed and the media once again forgot Travis Wilson, he began to work on reshaping his image and reestablishing his teammates' trust.

He was able to do that by being a leader, just like he always had. Only now, he wasn't officially a team captain.

Snyder said he was impressed with how Wilson handled the adversity.

"That's the right way to respond, and that's what I expect of him. He's a good young guy, and I think he was really remorseful about the harm he could have done to this football team," he said. "It is not diminishing his leadership role. He was a vocal leader prior to that, and he's a vocal leader now."

When the season finally started in August, Wilson had regained his respect and was named the starting fullback.

To finally be back on the field was a relief for the fullback plagued with off-the-field problems.

"Just to be into the season and get all that stuff from the summer behind me was great," Wilson said. "It's good to get it behind me and be playing football again."

Wilson has spent the majority of his time blocking for the shifty Darren Sproles. In his first eight games, he carried the ball 11 times for 43 yards and caught just one pass for 10 yards.

Meanwhile, Sproles danced for more than 850 yards behind Wilson's blocking.

Then, everyone noticed him again.

Wilson exploded for 75 yards on just four plays against Kansas. He ran the ball two times for 40 yards and caught two passes for 35 yards.

He more than doubled his entire season production in just one game, four carries.

"It was (a breakout game) as far as carrying the ball is concerned, definitely," running back coach Michael Smith said.

"He got an opportunity to carry the ball. For him to have this opportunity to get the ball and to break out in the secondary and show people that he can run with the ball was very gratifying for both he and myself."

But Wilson remains unsatisfied – such is the life of a K-State fullback.

"Most of the time, it's an unheralded position. Really, you're almost a part of the offensive line the way you're trying to block people for Darren," he said. "I go out and think about it blue collar, just trying to make my blocks, and get what I get done, and if I get a chance I just try to step up, (I'll) do the best with it.

"It's not about me carrying the ball. If the team's winning, I don't care if I touch the ball one time in the game. But if I can help the team out, then yeah, I really want to."

and 200-meter dashes as a senior at Liberal – and as a junior.

Fast or not, capable or not, Coach Bill Snyder said Alsup's role is limited at this point.

"He's playing well," Snyder said. "He had a carry in the Baylor game I was pleased with and ran the ball fine against the University of Kansas. He's beginning to get himself a little closer to being able to get himself on the field a little bit more.

"But he's still got Darren Sproles ahead of him and Darren Sproles is the guy."

Smith said Alsup is a part of the depth that makes K-State dangerous to defend.

"Right now he's progressing well and I think it's showing in his play," Smith said. "It's been competitive. I think that's good for he and Daniel (Davis) and Darren. That's a luxury I've been able to have since I've been here. Depth makes it a competitive position.

"It's just going to make us better. One thing I don't want Darren to do is be content. Carlos is a part of that."

IOWA STATE | Players, not history, to decide game

have to take your best game to every game."

It's a lesson the elder Cats – the ones who remember – won't let the newer guys forget, he said.

Half of the K-State starters have never played a close game against Iowa State.

That may very well change this year.

Iowa State impressed a lot of people in losing their first game to Florida State on the last play of the game. They then steam-rolled into the top 10 before losing games to Oklahoma and Texas. When the Cyclones gave the Cats such a fight in '99, they did so without the likes of Heisman hopeful Seneca Wallace.

Do Wallace and his teammates have the attention of the Cats, or have some of the guys who have yet to play a tough Iowa State team already notched this one in the win column? That is a bit of a concern, junior offensive lineman Nick Leckey said.

"(The young guys are) maybe a little bit delusional because Iowa State is a great team, and they've shown that from the beginning of the season to the end," he said.

Both Pierce and Leckey agreed the best way to handle the Cyclones and Wallace is to focus on them now and concentrate on presenting a solid performance. Pierce said the older guys will strive to make sure the newer players don't overlook this team because he knows what can happen.

"I think for our young guys, we put into their heads it's not what Iowa State comes out and does, it's about how Kansas State plays," he said.

"If we come out and play our game the way we are supposed to, we shouldn't have to worry about what Iowa State does. If we can do what we need to do, then I think all the younger guys and everyone else will be just fine."

The outcome will be decided on the field Saturday, and not in the history books or among the scores of games played several years ago, Leckey said.

"You can only use the history for so much," Leckey said. "You can use it for motivation, but it's not really good to look too much at the past because teams vary week to week, and the difference in teams within a year is just tremendous. You never know what you're going to get.

"It all depends on what's going to happen Saturday, on what team comes out to play, and I know what team is going to come out and play for us and them," he said.

CLASH | Cyclones will find way to upset favored Cats

Brite has combined with Joe Rheem to miss seven extra points and four field goals so far and still has three games remaining to add to those totals. Good luck, fellas.

Passing Game

Iowa State's receivers have speed, big play ability and sure hands, while K-State's are used to blocking for the Wildcat running game.

Wallace has thrown for 2,495 yards and has four different receivers with more than 30 catches. Roberson, meanwhile, has accounted for 867 yards through the air, and wideout Taco Wallace will need a hard shell to absorb punishing hits from ISU safety JaMaine Billups.

The one area Iowa State will struggle with is its porous run defense. The Cyclone front seven will give away first downs like Wildcat resident assistants handing out cowboy hats and belt buckles to the incoming freshmen.

But it will be two keys that will decide Saturday's affair.

First of all, ISU running backs need to prove they can keep pressure off of Wallace and the passing attack.

Don't be surprised if you see No. 32 Wet Paper Bag showing up on the K-State tackle chart with two solos and three assists.

Secondly, Bill Snyder will outcoach ISU head coach Dan McCarney and his staff for the umpteenth straight year. The Wildcats even took our best coach Bobby Elliot and now have him commandeering one of the best defenses in the nation.

To save time, McCarney and his assistants should just mail a copy of Iowa State's playbook to the Wildcat coaching staff because the coaches pretty much know everything the Cyclones run anyway.

Despite this, look for Wallace and company to overcome a superb Wildcat defense and send K-State fans back to the barn for a long night of milking.

Just don't pull a Dusty Mangum on me and chant "We hate you, we hate you."

TALKING SMACK | Cats will end Heisman talk

games. The nearly 20-year-old record should fall Saturday against an Iowa State defense ranked 62nd in NCAA Division I-A.

McCarney moving?

Recent rumors swirling out of Detroit have McCarney taking over the Michigan State job vacated by Bobby Williams on Monday.

Rather than saying he wasn't interested in the MSU job, McCarney said earlier this week, "There are no guarantees in life," and wouldn't say he was 100 percent sure he would be back in Ames next year. This could definitely be a distraction for the cardinal and gold Saturday.

Hand back the Heisman, Seneca

The recent trend in college athletics is to spend a couple hundred thousand on hyping a star athlete.

Blame Oregon last year for leading the charge by purchasing a billboard in Times Square featuring QB Joey Harrington. Unfortunately, Harrington couldn't live up to the hype of his Heisman campaign.

Iowa State's athletic department joined in this year by foolishly starting up a "Seneca for Heisman" Web site at www.gosenecago.com.

Rather than putting up a billboard, the Web site featured pictures (the Sphinx with Wallace's face superimposed on it. Now that's productive).

After losing to Florida State, Wallace was instantly anointed the front-runner for the Heisman. The hype was ratcheted up even further when the Clones beat Nebraska in September.

Wallace then had one impressive run against the "vaunted" defense of Texas Tech, and it was referred to as "His Heisman Moment."

The Wallace "Walks on Water" talk reached its peak the week leading up to an Oct. 19 trip to Oklahoma.

Throughout the week, the Wallace bandwagon got so big even Mark Mangino could have hopped on board. ESPN did a segment on "Gameday" featuring Wallace draped in a toga. He was supposed to be dressed like the Roman philosopher with whom he shares his first name.

He spouted off some of the philosopher's quotes, and they showed highlight clips of Wallace this season.

Later that day, Wallace went four for 22 with three interceptions and only 43 yards passing. What a Heisman performance.

Iowa State got blown out 49-3.

All of Seneca's hype really helped him out on the gridiron, didn't it?

The point is, Iowa State has made a huge mistake this year by glorifying the individual. A D-1 football team is composed of 85 players.

Iowa State does have something the Cats lack this year – a player receiving attention as a possible Heisman Trophy candidate.

But K-State has some things ISU lacks. First, a defense. Second, a coach not looking into leaving. And finally, a rock solid program.

The moral of the story is Wallace is beatable and when you take him out of the game, Iowa State is toast.

You can bet the defense is ready – ready to end Wallace's Heisman Trophy campaign.

Missouri, and they're always going to be tough because Missouri is going to mark us as a game, Nebraska is going to mark us as a game and Iowa State always marks us as a game, so we have to be up for every one of the games."

If the Cats can get through these three games with wins, the rewards could be great.

K-State could sneak into the conference title game, pending what Colorado does. They could also ensure they would play in one of the Big 12's top four postseason bowls.

This is why the team stays focused and motivated, Leckey said.

"They say the cream rises to the top in the right situations," he said. "We're going to see who's ready and who's not, we're just going to come out hopefully on fire each Saturday."

Ogden teenager dies

Police blame alcohol consumption, arrest 1 in connection

By Dana Strongin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An Ogden teenager died early Sunday morning in what police said could be the result of forced drinking at a party.

Emergency workers found Curtis McCracken, 17, unconscious while responding to a 911 call that was made from an Ogden address at about 5:30 a.m. Sunday, according to a Riley County Police Department press release.

McCracken was transported to Irwin Army Community Hospital, where he was pronounced dead at 6:37 a.m.

Police have determined McCracken's death may be the result of consuming large quantities of alcohol. McCracken had attended a party in Ogden, where he was allegedly forced to drink a large amount of alcohol, according to the press release.

Police have made one arrest in connection with the death. Aaron Lewis, 22, Ogden, faces a felony charge of second-degree murder and misdemeanor charges of endangering a child and furnishing alcohol to a minor. Bond was set at $100,000.

Police are still investigating the death, according to the press release. They will likely forward additional charges to the Riley County Attorney's Office for consideration of prosecution.

Capt. Gary Grubbs of the police department's criminal investigations division could not be reached for comment on the investigation Sunday.

An autopsy will be performed at the Shawnee County Coroner's Office in Topeka. Funeral arrangements will be managed by Irvin-Parkview Funeral Home.

Kimball almost finished

Project expected to be complete in next few weeks

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The construction at the intersection of Kimball and North Manhattan avenues is nearing completion, a city official said.

The expected date for completion was supposed to be this week, Chuck Williams, acting director of public works, said, but a combination of problems has slowed the project. Williams said he expects the project to be completed within the next two to three weeks.

"Recent rains certainly have not helped us any," he said.

The weather has been the only big setback in the last few weeks, Williams said, but earlier in the process, unexpected soil conditions and late delivery of materials prevented timely project completion.

If the weather cooperates and the final materials arrive on time, Williams said the project's final stages should run smoothly.

Kay Shanks, Manhattan resident whose back yard is adjacent to the construction, said that for her, there are two sides to the project's completion.

"We didn't miss the traffic," she said, "but it's been kind of a pain in the neck."

Shanks said she used the Holiday honors veterans

Local veterans remember, celebrate with community

Veterans Day – a time of remembrance, honor and for many veterans, celebration.

John Hubbard, commander of the local Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 1786, served in the Air Force during Desert Storm. Hubbard joins other veterans of various wars each month at VFW meetings, remembering peers who didn't make it home.

"Veterans Day is a day to remember our veterans – what they gave of their lives to help maintain freedom for their country, but it's mostly a celebration," he said. "It's not a celebration of war – it's a celebration of peace."

Hubbard said Veterans Day is a time to remember and honor all those who have served in the military and celebrate their accomplishments, while Memorial Day is set aside to remember those who died while serving their country.

Veterans Day originated in 1926, when Congress recognized Armistice Day, as a time to celebrate the signing of the armistice that ended World War I on Nov. 11, 1918. In 1954, after World War II and the Korean War, Congress changed the name to Veterans Day to honor veterans of all wars.

Today, local veterans'

Bauer, Achilles elected by student body as ambassadors

Pair looks for challenges, excitement during term

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State student body elected two new student ambassadors.

Mandy Achilles, junior in public relations, and Blake Bauer, junior in agribusiness, were named the new student ambassadors prior to Saturday's football game.

"I was extremely excited I had been given the opportunity to represent the student body to alumni throughout Kansas," Bauer said of the announcement.

Achilles agreed.

"I was just really excited," she said. "The first thing I did was run over and hug Blake."

Achilles, daughter of Scott and Connie Achilles of Inman, Kan., said she looked forward to talking to prospective K-State students.

"I love to do that – just talking one-on-one and answering questions," she said.

However, Achilles said, there will be some challenges.

"Talking to students who are very, very unsure and getting across to them what K-State has to offer and why K-State is a great place – or proving to skeptical alumni that K-State is great – will be challenging at times," she said.

Bauer, son of Kyle and Lisa Bauer of Clay Center, Kan., also said he was looking forward to the upcoming year.

"I feel working with Mandy and the Alumni Association will be a great experience, and I look forward to showing how great a place K-State really is," he said.

Bauer said while he was excited about being named an ambassador, he knew he would have to work at managing his time and activities.

"Portraying K-State in a positive manner is my main objective," he said.

Missy Decker Heidrick, associate director of alumni programs and adviser to the ambassadors, said they will begin their jobs next semester.

"They'll be going to any events across the state as well as anything via the president's office. They'll be helping Dr. Wefald with any special events and working with events on campus," she said.

Decker Heidrick said she looks forward to working with Achilles and Bauer.

"They're both extremely bright, successful students," she said. "They'll be great representatives of the student body. The really enjoyable part will be getting to know them and watching them work in front of alumni and prospective students."

Australian workers protest, speak out for gorilla's dignity

By Chuck Shepherd
UNIVERSAL PRESS SYNDICATE

Among issues in the months-long labor-management strife at the Taronga Zoo in Sydney, Australia: Workers have resisted managers' alleged solution for getting Kibabu the gorilla to mate, which was to have the keepers sedate him, stimulate him manually and collect his sperm in a container. It now appears zoo officials are resigned to use technology instead, by a process called electro-ejaculation. Earlier, workers had announced a partial strike for a 3-percent pay increase, in that they would stop picking up animals' droppings.

On Nov. 2, skydiver Ron Sirull performed at the Air and Space Show at Vandenberg Air Force Base north of Lompoc, Calif., accompanied by his Dachshund, Brutus the Skydiving Dog, to the protests of animal-rights activists, but, according to Sirull, to the delight of Brutus, who was "totally turned on."

Lower than a snake's belly

In August, Brian Lynch of Scotchtown, N.Y., was convicted of stealing $8,000 in donations intended for a Sept. 11 FDNY widow.

Also in August, Vernon Coleman, 32, and Dane Coleman, 28, were arraigned on charges of stealing $35,000 from a donation fund for Afghan children displaced by the war.

Also in August, New York City landlord Denise M. Lyman announced she would not allow the family of Sept. 11 victim Danielle Kousoulis into Kousoulis' old apartment to secure DNA to help detect her remains because Danielle had breached her Sept. 1, 2001, lease by failing to give three months' notice before "abandoning" the apartment.

Chutzpah!

According to a September New York Times report, New York City homeless-shelter workers believe "50 to 75 percent" of the current population of 8,000 families are "unreasonably picky" about moving into permanent assisted housing, thus remaining in temporary apartments at an average cost to the city of $2,800 per family per month. Sara Kelly, a mother of six and eight-year assisted-housing client, said she could not accept a three-bedroom apartment because "you had to walk through one bedroom to get to another bedroom to get to a bathroom (and) I can't live like that. (I am) choosy about where I live."

In White River Junction, Vt., in October, Stewart Fuller, 41, was charged with looting about $30,000 worth of goods from the house of neighbors Roger and Shirley Labelle and holding a three-day yard sale nearby so that when the Labelles returned, they couldn't help but notice some of their neighbors had their stuff.

Earlier this year, 89 wives, daughters and lovers of wealthy or powerful Mexican men posed chicly in extravagant settings with complete lack of inhibition about their opulence for photographer Daniela Rossell's coffee-table book, "Ricas y Famosas," thus appearing to taunt the 53 percent of Mexicans who live in poverty. Rossell, who comes from the upper class herself and is thought to have made the book in part because of conflicted views of her upbringing, has since received threats from the embarrassed wealthy, who apparently miscalculated how their pictures would be perceived.

Life as a Dangerfield joke

Herbert Toney, 36, and Latisha Washington, 29, were arrested in October in St. Bernard Parish, just outside New Orleans, and face several charges, including deserting their 8-year-old son. According to police, the couple instructed the son to go into a Winn Dixie supermarket and steal groceries and beer. When a security guard stopped him, the boy pointed out his parents nearby, but Toney and Washington matter-of-factly denied knowing the kid and walked away. Deputies brought the couple in again a while later, but Washington said only that maybe she had seen the boy around the neighborhood a few times. Finally, she admitted he was hers.

Effective clothing

According to a July Reuters photo dispatch from the mountains of northeast Colombia, U'wa Indian girls' traditional "cocora" hats, designed to encourage chastity from puberty until marriage, consist of oversized cones made of layers of large sheets of green leaves, all completely covering the girls' heads, except for narrow eye slits.

intersection frequently before the construction began and looks forward to being able to use it again.

"I have no idea whether it will be better than it was before they started," she said, "but it certainly will be more convenient than it is now."

Besides the annoyance of having to detour, Shanks said the construction and crew have not caused any trouble.

"The workers have been very helpful and courteous when we go down to poke our noses in and look around," she said. "And they've been very careful."

Shanks maintains a garden in her back yard, and she said the workers have taken care not to disturb it.

"We had one tree come down, and they replaced that," she said. "And it was when one of those big cables came down and landed on it – it wasn't just carelessness."

SALARIES | Faculty salaries rank among lowest in Big 12; professors stay for other reasons

cost of living factored in, K-State did better – but not by much. Professors ranked 11th, associate professors ranked eighth, and assistant professors ranked fifth.

The low cost of living has some advantages, but offering competitive dollar salaries to faculty is still crucial, Downey said. And, the bulk of salary funding is determined by the state.

"If you don't offer anything that's close to the market value, you are not going to attract anybody," he said.

He said K-State is able to offer more competitive salaries to assistant professors because the market value for that position is lower than a higher rank, such as professor. K-State's dollar salaries for professors are the lowest in the Big 12.

"We just don't have any choice," Downey said. "We just have to come very close in market hiring, and we hire most everyone at the assistant professor level."

However, Downey said recruiting faculty is not K-State's main problem.

"Our problem is in retention," he said.

K-State cannot afford to provide salary increases that mirror those available in other states.

The state funding simply is not there – especially during a fiscal year when state funding already has been reduced twice.

"Their salaries are generally limited by what the state can provide, and they don't generally provide salary increases of what you see in other states. So, each year they are here, they are behind more," Downey said. "Each year they stay as an assistant professor, they are losing increases and falling behind in the market."

And, the main difference between costs of living is housing costs – not in day-to-day living. So, Downey said people often will choose a higher cost of living for a higher salary because they will get the return on their house.

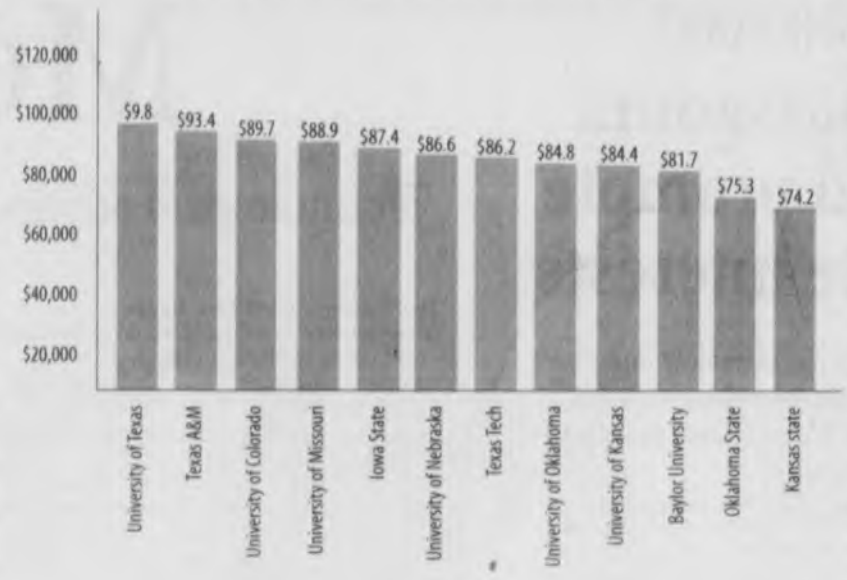
So what does attract and retain K-State's faculty?

Michael O'Shea, physics professor, said good research and teaching attracted him to K-State 19 years ago as an assistant professor.

What retains him is not the salary, he said, but it is a good working environment and the magnetics lab he began after his hiring.

"It's the high quality of the physics department – definitely not the salary," O'Shea said.

He said the low salaries are discouraging, but the problem is not within K-State. It lies within the amount of state resources allocated to K-State.



O'Shea said he considered leaving K-State several times for somewhere with a higher salary, but every time he decided to stay.

"I already had a lab here that was working, and I think it would be difficult to go to another department where we have such a good atmosphere as we do in the physics department," O'Shea said.

The cost of living was a minor influence in his decision to work at K-State, he said.

"Once you've been at an institution for several years and you start a research program, a huge amount of effort has been put into that," O'Shea said. "So, if you left to go somewhere else, it would be a huge undertaking. You've invested a lot of time into building things up, and that's a major investment and a major factor that keeps people in places."

Big 12 professors' salaries, dollar income 2001-02

K-State professors' salaries are the lowest in the Big 12. Associate and assistant professors' salaries fare better. The salary of associate professors at K-State ranks seventh in the Big 12 and assistant professors are ranked fourth. The cost of living in Manhattan is lower than many other Big 12 locations, but many say that doesn't offset the effects of low faculty salaries.

TO THE POINT

Ambassadors should promote K-State interests

Ambassadors are extremely important in the recruitment of college students.

During these tough budget times and amidst the complaints about teacher salaries, ambassadors can point out to potential K-Staters the many positive aspects this university has to offer.

With nationally recognized engineering, agriculture, animal and feed science, and architecture programs, K-State provides top-notch curricula in a multitude of fields.

We're a leader in Rhodes, Truman, Marshall, Goldwater and Udall scholars, and we have some of the best-of-the-best when it comes to sports talent.

The many clubs and organizations provide plenty of opportunities for students to get involved, meeting a variety of different people and making lifelong friends in the process.

K-State is a great place for higher education, and student ambassadors can help others realize this. It's important to keep the Wildcat tradition alive, especially with fewer students graduating from Kansas' high schools.

We challenge the K-State ambassadors to find creative ways to sell the university, even though highly publicized problems do exist.

When you look at the big picture, the positives far outweigh the negatives.

MORAL ISSUES

Technological advances alone don't make people act differently

MICAH HAWKINSON

The Internet. Television. Radio.

Is our society too dependent on technology? Are we becoming slaves to the devices that should be our servants?

I think we aren't.

It's easy to get taken aback by the sheer power of what we have created.

Take the cellular phone, for instance. Most models give users access to addresses and phone numbers on demand. Others enable people to check their e-mail. Still others incorporate digital cameras or MP3 players.

In short, these are some serious electronic devices, yo.

A few centuries ago, it would have looked like sorcery from the pit of the Dark Realm to have a device no larger than a pack of playing cards that could do all that stuff.

Today, however, we incorporate cell phones into our lives with no more thought than we would give a large caterpillar.

The question seems to be whether the convenience of new technology is worth the price of using it and making it part of our lives. Some argue the cost is too high, and that we must avoid becoming too dependent on cool new gadgetry.

Of course, that's what people probably said about the wheel.

I can just picture it – two cavemen are sitting around the dirt circle (fire hadn't been invented yet) discussing the latest technology:

Ugh: Crogh see new invention?

Crogh: Yes, Crogh see invention. Invention called wheel. Wheel bad like woolly mammoth hindquarters. Wheel too difficult to use. Wheel make Crogh too dependent on wheel.

Ugh: But wheel transport roots, berries and other commodities of hunt-gather lifestyle. Why Crogh no like?

Crogh: What if wheel break? Berries and commodities get squish or go away down rabbit hole. Then Crogh and Ugh get pounded by wives with monster rock of ouchie.

Ugh: Wheel no break. If wheel break, Ugh or Crogh fix it. Or, better, get new one.

Crogh: Crogh scared that Crogh's nature be changed by wheel. Crogh no want to be slave of wheel. Wheel no control Crogh, Crogh tell Ugh! If Ugh try make Crogh use wheel, Ugh lose face. Crogh say this literally.

Ugh: Crogh dumb. Ugh hit Crogh with rock.

What can we learn from this touching prehistoric scene, other than the fact that prehistoric people desperately needed to invent the pronoun?

Hopefully, the scene helps us realize that new technology is always there, regardless of how we feel about it. How it affects us depends on our response to it.

Certainly, new technology can cause more problems than it solves. For instance, what do you do with the cell phones that ring at inopportune times? What if you become addicted to checking your e-mail – or voice mail, for that matter?

These are important problems, but it is equally important to realize that they are caused by people's decisions.

The Internet can be used to promulgate depravity and ill will. Radio is a good agent for spreading propaganda. Television can demagnetize people's moral compasses. Gene manipulation could introduce fatal elements into the human gene pool.

But some Web sites are devoted to helping people. Radio can feature valuable public service announcements. Television can be informative and harmless. Gene manipulation could be the death knell of many modern diseases.

Technology in and of itself is not bad, although it can help people do bad things. But it also gives us the opportunity to do an enormous amount of good. Let's encourage technological advances and determine to use them wisely.

Researchers must consider morality when making technological advances

NASRINA BURNETT

Technology seems like a brilliant way to make our daily lives just that much easier, but this is not the reality of the situation.

While some technological advances like electricity and flushing toilets have my full support, more recent technological advances cause me to fear for the future of humanity. In order to explain my concerns on this matter, I will address three problems I identify in the modern-day pursuit of the new technological frontier.

One problem with technological advancement is the immoral way in which it is brought about.

Research and development teams spend time figuring out advancements but never question if they should make it. Because technological advancement is about the next frontier, morality is pushed to the wayside.

Maybe it is not morally right to clone an embryo. Just maybe atomic, chemical and biological weapons weren't a great idea.

Why is technology allowed to circumvent examinations of right and wrong? Should everything we are capable of creating be used? This violates the sanctity of nature and of life.

I'm concerned we are sacrificing our humanity for technology.

Technology is used to reduce human interactions. Why leave your home to take a college course when you can take it on the Internet? The dialogue and stimulation that occurs in a real classroom is not possible on the World Wide Web. Education isn't the only process I object to being technologically tainted.

Relationships between people are being affected by technological advancement.

If you can't handle real, live social interaction, the modern age allows you to avoid it. Why meet people face to face when you can engage in a live chat or e-mail? When people can proofread their communications to you, it is a bet some authenticity is lost, not to mention the risk involved. What is to stop a rapist from lying about his appearance and identity to meet someone?

Dependency is another problem.

When I lost my cell phone last weekend, I not only lost my primary means of communication, but I also lost all the phone numbers I saved. Take my advice: Keep a paper address book as a back-up.

Another example is the way professors use the Internet as a means of communication. If I don't check my e-mail at least twice a day, it is very likely I will not be prepared for my classes. Whereas professors previously had to utilize class time optimally, now they can rely on the Internet for discussion, assigning homework and distributing reading material.

While this may seem to be simply convenience, it really just serves as a crutch. I do appreciate the paper-saving aspect, but I have a problem with the way it allows professors to wait until the last minute to give assignments. Last Thursday afternoon I sat down to write a paper for my Monday morning class so I would be able to relax during the weekend. However, I was unable to do so because the assignment had not yet been posted on the Internet. When I tried to do the assignment again Sunday evening, my Internet service wasn't working. This made me explain why I was unable to turn in my assignment on time.

Technology is a danger and needs to be addressed. Don't let the lure of convenience cause you to sacrifice your values.

We risk the loss of morality, humanity and independence when we go too far in our embrace of technology.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

You be the judge as to what is outrageous: a gallon of 87-octane gasoline at $1.49 or an 8.3 fluid-ounce can of an energy beverage selling for $2.19. Folks, that comes out to $33.47 a gallon.

Layton Ehmke, I agree with your comments about the Fourum and calling in stupid things, but Dead Lemon does not suck.

Homecoming Week makes me sick. We glorify using roofies and being a slut.

I heard a dirty little rumor that the Student Governing Association will be debating a bill that could possibly prohibit all cigarette smoking on campus. I want to know what everyone else thinks about this.

OK, let's play Eminem all day because that's the only CD we have and sing "Strawberry Wine" at the top of our lungs because we suck.

If you want better Fourum calls, get edgier opinion columns. Paul White has been the only one willing to create controversy around here, and his creepy obsession with G.W. got boring long ago.

To all pedestrians on campus: Stay off my bike lanes. There are only two short ones on campus with sidewalks right beside them. Get over where you belong. You have been warned. If I run over you from now on, it's your own fault.

This is Joe. I just wanted to let Layton Ehmke know that I'm the person who's been calling into the Fourum about Dead Lemon, and I am not in Dead Lemon.

Help control the idiot population: Have your roommate spayed or neutered.

Just when I thought all hope was lost in the world, I remembered, "Oh, yes, Paul White is mortal." Then my hopes were lifted.

Layton Ehmke is hot. Layton, is that against the rules?

I don't pay $70 for a parking pass and leave my house more than 30 minutes early to come and find 150 spots are reserved for Senior Day. I pay good money to be here. I should be welcome to have any spot I want.

Quit reserving spots for Senior Day, and make them walk like real college students.

The Collegian butchered my friend Gabe's column, and he's not dumb. Well, not that dumb.

9-8-9 sports needs to learn some new marketing techniques and not display them at K-State.

How come my roommate's the one who gets all the messages on the phone? What about me, huh? We pay the same amount of rent.

Who glues dollar bills with people's names on them to the wall? I was the one who stole your dollar bills. I'm not a guy. I'm not from Johnson County or Riley County. Eat it.

A girl on my floor is the neighborhood sex therapist.

We're half-hearted creatures, fooling about with drink and sex and ambition when infinite joy is offered to us, like an ignorant child who wants to go on making mud pies in the slum because he cannot imagine what is meant by the offer of a holiday at the sea. We are far too easily pleased.

Don't blame me. I voted Libertarian.

TO THE EDITOR

Threats from Iraq don't merit unilateral U.S. action; Bush right to work with U.N.

Editor,

It is heartening to see the Bush administration working through diplomatic channels on a U.N. resolution regarding Iraq ("U.N. gets final Iraq plan," The Washington Post, Nov. 6, page A1).

While Iraq does pose a threat, that threat does not rise to the level of justifying unilateral U.S. action.

Such a lone offensive should be rejected on strategic and moral grounds. Strategically, the costs simply outweigh the benefits. Attacking Iraq would continue to sour relationships with our allies in the war on terror, further destabilize the Palestinian-Israeli situation and make future alliances with groups and countries well positioned to aid us in the war on terror next to impossible.

If an invasion were deemed necessary to root out Iraq's government, we would transform potential Iraqi reformers into embittered enemies defending their homeland instead of collaborators welcoming the overthrow of a despotic regime. Furthermore, such an invasion would almost necessarily come to urban warfare, where our military superiority would be disadvantaged.

But perhaps the worst strategic damage might already be done: Our threatening posture might serve to forge a link between terrorists and an Iraqi government with "nothing to lose" where no such link existed before.

Attacking Iraq now should also be opposed on moral grounds. Some might assert that security in today's world requires new, tougher rules. Tempting as it might be to abuse our might as the world's sole superpower, nothing in our world today changes the old maxim that ends do not justify means.

Just as stealing money to do a community service project cannot be considered moral, our desire for complete "homeland security" – however illusory a concept – cannot justify attacking a country whose leadership refuses to comply with a U.N. mandate but who has otherwise given no provocation.

The moral line between terrorists and those who hunt them would then grow far too blurry for comfort.

For these reasons, the Bush administration is right to pause before acting on its aggressive posture toward Iraq.

Let us hope the U.N. resolution under consideration passes and grows into something more substantial, or we might be brutally confronted with the costs, both strategic and moral, of such unilateralism.

Eminem makes '8 Mile' worth seeing

"8 MILE"
★★★½☆
Movie review by JJ Duncan

This had to be the easiest movie in the world to write.

Using Eminem's life as a general road map and taking certain artistic liberties to make him look like a foul-mouthed saint in a stocking cap, "8 Mile" is given a hero everyone can like.

Then use the trajectory of a sports film like "Rocky" and replace instances of competitive sports play with rap competitions. That's about how the movie plays, but the thing that makes "8 Mile" worth seeing – and it is worth seeing – is Eminem himself.

Whether you love him or hate him, Eminem's presence and skill at playing himself and rapping give the movie an authentic feel.

Eminem plays Jimmy Smith, a.k.a. Bunny Rabbit, a rapper who's dope, and he knows that, but he's broke – living in a trailer park with his sister and mom and no hope.

When he competes in a rap competition, he gets on stage, but when he opens his mouth, the words won't come out – he's chokin, but the movie's bank rollin', on his Detroit skills that make him sound like an English major on some little red pills.

Jimmy is presented with a conflict. On one hand, his friend Future (Mekhi Phifer) wants him to rap in his competitions he hosts to gain street credibility.

On the other hand, Wink (Eugene Byrd) wants Jimmy to use the right connections, 'cuz he's talkin' about Benjamins and Bentleys.

While making bumpers in an assembly line, he tries to take advantage of every opportunity, but he gets wise.

He decides to make it on his own because he can't get by with his 9 to 5, and it can't provide the right type of life.

Along the way, Jimmy makes Eminem look like the embodiment of blue-collar hard work and righteousness.

At one point, he uses his rhyme skills to defend a gay co-worker and makes sure to show everyone who thinks he's a homophobe that when he uses the word "faggot."

Wasn't it enough that Elton John got on stage with him at the Grammys and hugged him? Is Eminem so insecure that he has to bring up his homophobia again? Let it go.

Other than the liberties taken with Eminem's image, the movie is pretty good.

Eminem's acting skills work well enough, and his performance should clear up any doubt as to the quality of the movie. Of course, it probably helps that "8 Mile" is produced by Brian Grazer, who produced last year's Best Picture winner, "A Beautiful Mind," and the movie is directed by Curtis Hanson, who worked on the Oscar-nominated movies, "L.A. Confidential" and "Wonderboys."

The shining gems of this movie are the rap-competition scenes.

The film leads up to a well-rhymed denouement that will impress Eminem's fans and critics alike, reinforcing the final line of the movie's anthem "Lose Yourself," that "you can do anything you set your mind to."

Transplants rock to punk, rap

Band's latest album borrows from 2 genres

"THE TRANSPLANTS"
Album review by JJ Duncan

Tapping into the two most aggressive genres of California music, the Transplants blend punk with rap to make a frantically driven yet complex album.

After working behind the scenes with A.F.I. and Rancid, this is lead vocalist Rob Aston's first outing as a singer.

Travis Barker of Blink-182 and Boxcar Racer is on drums, and Rancid's frontman, Tim Armstrong, takes on the responsibility of backing vocals, guitar and musical mastermind.

The result blends hip-hop raps and beats, synthesizers and loops, bass players, punk-rock vocals and guitar into one surprisingly coherent album.

The message is similar to that of Rancid. Stories about junkies, dead friends, malicious authority figures and scene loyalty spice this album the way "Let's Go" did in 1994.

This time, Armstrong and his cohorts realized something simple.

All those same themes run through hip-hop music.

From ghetto upbringings to questioning authority to an exposure to drugs and violence, hip-hop and punk rock are closer to each other than many think.

Of course, this isn't the first time the two have met.

Joe Strummer brought the occasional spoken word rap to Clash songs like "Magnificent Seven," though he came at the style through a reggae approach.

Sublime mixed punk, ska and hip-hop with excellent results in the mid-to-late 1990s.

The Transplants are set apart by a willingness to embrace loops and synthesizers and keep it all sounding as raw as the cheapest punk rock recordings.

"Diamonds and Guns" has been well-received as a single, but the real highlights of the album are the punk "Tall Cans in the Air," the extended eulogy of "Sad But True" and the Dre-esque synth parts of "D.R.E.A.M."

If punk has ever been appropriate party music, it's now.

The Transplants' debut album is packed with tracks that would be equally at home in a room full of mohawks and combat boots or in a DJ's collection between The Coup and Dr. Dre, and that's the beauty.

Space rock band releases ambient record with no name, song titles

"SIGUR ROS"
★★★★½
Album review by Adam Lee

It's hard to find a balance between the embellished, the streamlined and the underdeveloped.

Reykjavik's kings of ambient rock, Sigur Ros, explore superficial minimalism with their new album titled "( )."

All eight tracks on the album remain unnamed, frustrating critics and file-sharers alike.

When and where
9 p.m. Friday at Liberty Hall, 644 Massachusetts, Lawrence
Tickets
$25, available through Ticketmaster

Vacancy carries over to the album's packaging. Save the band's name, no text is found on the album sleeve, which consists of tracing paper lightly adorned with blades of grass and leaf-stripped trees.

The first minutes of the introductory track leads you to believe the sparseness will dominate the album.

The listener is led blindly into "( )" by a hesitant piano and ghostly white noise. But slowly the layers mount, and Jon Thor Birgisson enters with his haunting falsetto, creating the absorbing sound that helped the band's 1999 album "Agaetis Byrjun," go platinum.

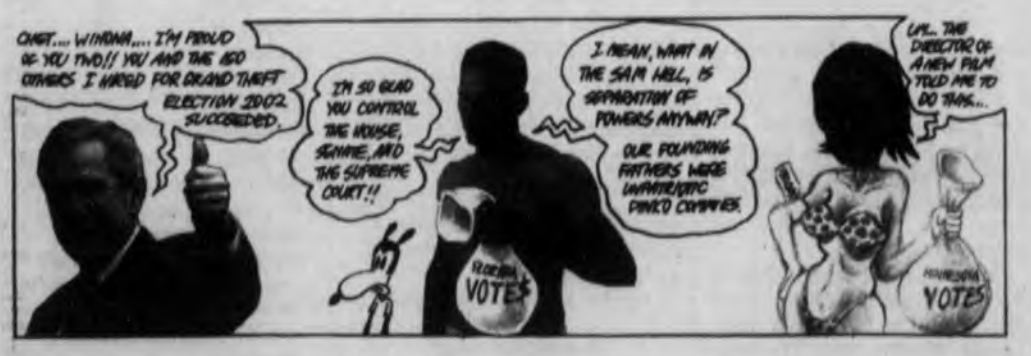
"Agaetis Byrjun" invited listeners to explore through music the landscapes of both Iceland and human emotion.

It soared over crystalline glaciers, down vast fjords, through vaporous geo-thermals and into the heart.

With "( )," Sigur Ros summons listeners to a Viking funeral.

The album's stoical, oceanic songs come in waves. When the songs culminate, they create an increased sense of tension rather than being climactic.

It's almost unwelcome to hear heavy guitar over a rock drumbeat six minutes into the final track.



These songs are cruel enough to swamp even the most elated. This is not morning music, unless you plan on spending the whole day in bed.

Using a 30-second snippet on TV likely would result in the entire populace being prescribed to everything from Aderal to Zoloft. As sorrowful as "( )" is, it's not fair to label the album as a depressant. Beauty streams through the sonic somberness, giving the album two ways to wet the eye.

Birgisson's vocal contributions in his made-up language of "Hopelandic" manage to surpass his previous work.

His voice and the band's musical composition create a sound that makes other space-rockers sound uninspired or incapable.

Well-oiled Machine

Defense stops Wallace

Heisman hopes dashed after rocky outing

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Prior to K-State's 58-7 shellacking of Iowa State, there was a question.

People wanted to know what Seneca Wallace was capable of doing against the Wildcat defense.

And when it was all said and done, people had their answer.

Wallace went 11 of 26 for 162 yards through the air and managed just four yards on the ground.

The Cyclone quarterback also fumbled twice, threw three interceptions and was sacked twice.

Iowa State Coach Dan McCarney said Wallace and his team struggled to execute against a nearly flawless K-State defense.

"Kansas State was just an outstanding football team today," McCarney said. "On the day we played them, I thought that was the best team we played all year long.

"They were just dominant on both sides of the ball. In all phases – offense, defense and kicking game."

McCarney said Wallace would bounce back from the poor performance.

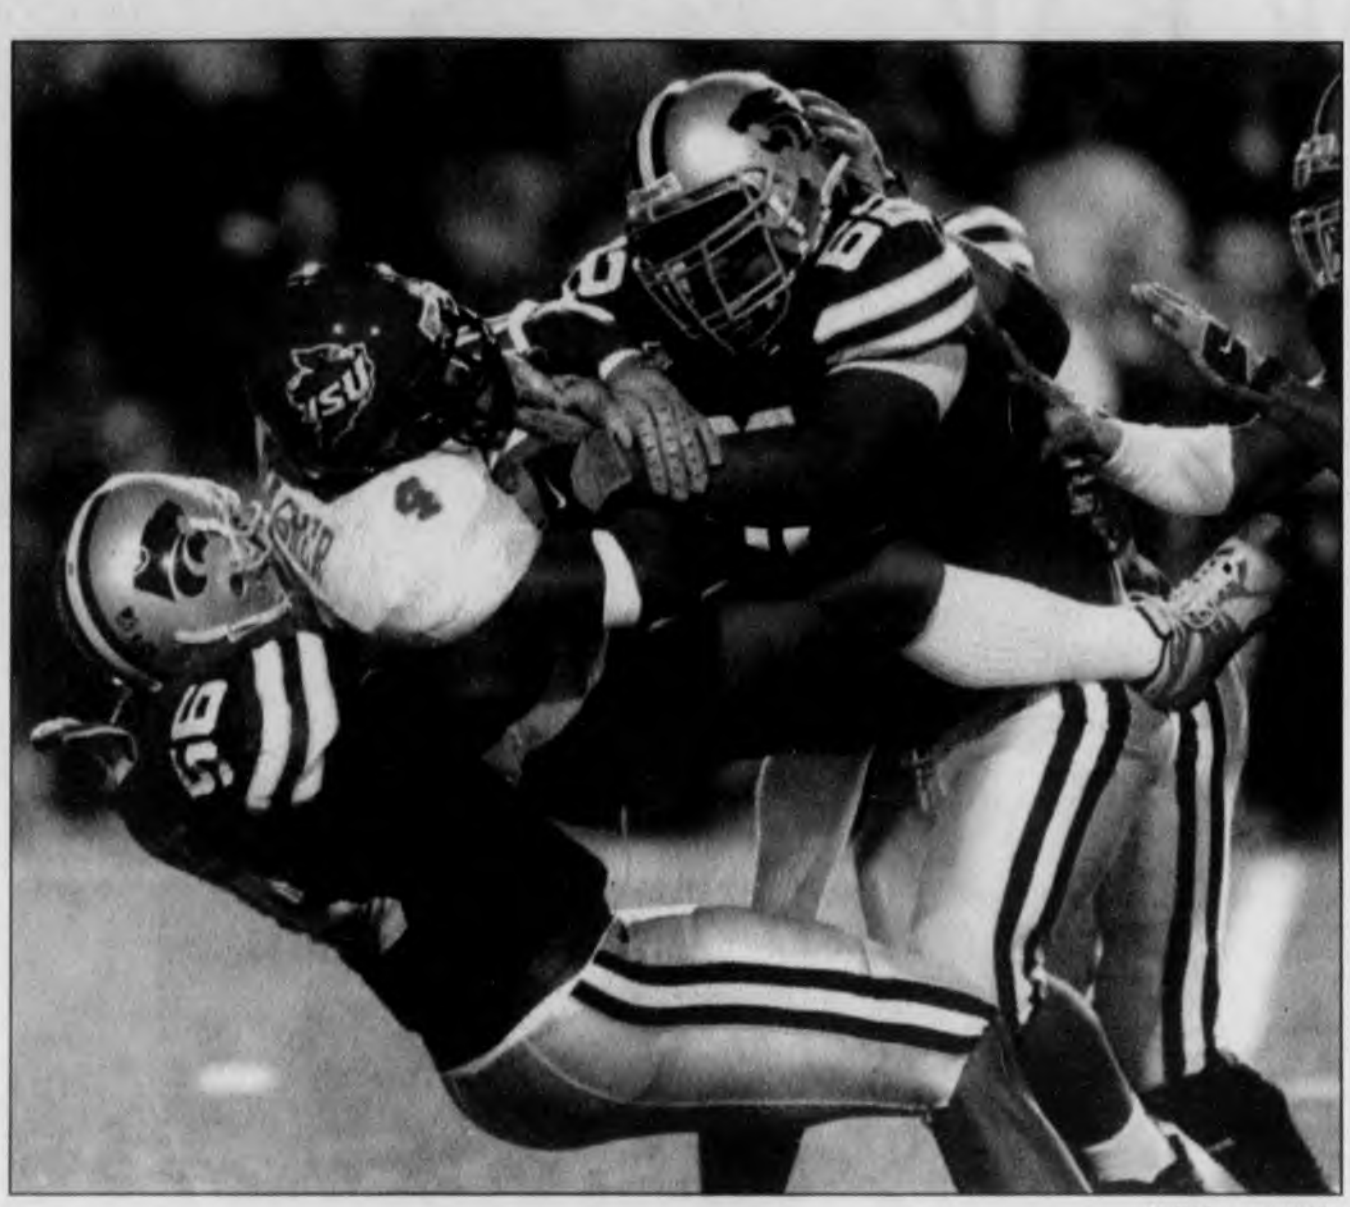
"He's got to learn from it and put it behind him," he said. "He's a winner, he's a warrior, he's a competitor and I'm sure he'll learn from it and come back better next week."

Wallace was able to connect with wide receiver Lane Danielsen for a 33-yard pass that set up the Cyclones' lone touchdown at the 4:42 mark of the first quarter.

The strike made the score 13-7 and gave the Cyclones new life.

But the Wildcats came back with 45 unanswered.

Wallace said the loss was tough to swallow.



"I played sorry," Wallace said. "I take full responsibility for what happened today. It shouldn't have been that bad. I made a lot of mistakes I usually don't make and they capitalized on them."

But linebacker Terry Pierce, who had eight tackles, a sack, a fumble recovery and two tackles for loss, said the Wildcat defense was a factor in Wallace's struggles.

"After the first series, he realized this was a team that was ready to play," Pierce said.

"I'm happy he feels like it

Offense clicks, defense disrupts in Cats' 58-7 romp over Clones

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After handing out a 42-3 whopping to Iowa State in Ames, Iowa, last year, it was conceivable to think the Wildcats could do the same to the Cyclones again this year.

But now, a season later, playing against a Heisman trophy candidate on a top-25 team, the word blowout might have just been wishful thinking.

It turned out it wasn't.

K-State jumped out on the Cyclones early and never looked back, thrashing Iowa State 58-7 at KSU Stadium on Saturday.

Coach Bill Snyder said it was a stretch, initially, to think the Cats could repeat the performance they had last year against the 'Clones.

"You've heard me saying that nothing ever surprises me," Snyder said. "But I could tell you that I didn't expect that."

K-State's defense set the tone early, forcing Iowa State to go three-and-out on its opening possession.

After a Terence Newman return of 21 yards, the Cat offense started in Cyclone territory. Four plays later, K-State was in the endzone, courtesy of a 28-yard run by quarterback Ell Roberson.

Roberson said it's easy to get motivated to score when the defense and special teams units put them on the opponent's side of the field to start the drive.

"When you're getting the ball at the 50-yard line, it gives us confidence to put the ball in the endzone," Roberson said. "If they keep doing that, we'll keep striving as an offense."

The well-oiled machine of K-State's defense giving the offense opportunities to score, and the offense taking advantage of those opportunities, began to surface last week against Kansas.

K-State opened drives in KU territory eight times.

This week just continued that trend. The Wildcats started drives at their own 45-yard line or better eight times.

K-State scored on six of those drives.

Offensive coordinator Ron Hudson said a lot of credit goes to the defense for putting the offense in good situations.

"The game was obviously dictated with their six turnovers and our zero turnovers," Hudson said. "We took advantage of it. We executed, didn't put it on the ground and did it all against a good football team."

For the game, K-State's offense raked up 385 total yards. Roberson was 12 of 17 passing for 162 yards.

However, once again it was Darren Sproles who headlined the offensive attack.

The sophomore back rushed for 103 yards, his sixth straight game with at least 100 yards on the ground. He is now tied with Isaac Jackson for the most consecutive games with 100 rushing yards. Jackson accomplished the same feat in 1973.

Snyder said he is proud of the way Sproles has gone about getting the job done.

"I like the way he gets 100 yards," Snyder said. "You go back and look at all of those, he may have got 20 of them with somebody's help.

"But the other 80-plus, he got on his own. I love the way he runs – he's such an aggressive runner."

It was the six turnovers, though, that put the game out of reach.

Iowa State's quarterback, Seneca Wallace, was picked off three times, and the Cyclones lost three fumbles – all of which led to 34 points for the Wildcats.

Kelly Glasscock | COLLEGIAN

K-State defensive back Jerry McCloud breaks up a pass to Iowa State receiver Jamaul Montgomery in K-State's 58-7 win over Iowa State on Saturday night at KSU Stadium. The win marked the largest margin of victory in series' 86-year history.

Linebacker Terry Pierce said Saturday's performance might have been K-State's best in terms of the offense converting on good field position and the defense containing a threatening opponent.

"That's what you play for," Pierce said. "You hope they aren't going to get it in one play – you hope it takes three or four plays so you can get your breath back. But if it happens that way, it happens that way.

"But when you can complement each other, it's great."

K-State struggled early against the Solna Vikings on Friday.

Solna came out of the gates hot, and at the 17:42 mark of the first half, led the Wildcats 8-3 at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats, whose early struggles likely had something do with having to adjust to a bigger starting lineup after guard Chelsea Domenico was injured prior to the game, eventually got things settled down.

Led by Kendra Wecker's 31 points, K-State caught back up quickly, dominated the rest of the game and won easily, 99-49.

Wecker said her team showed good resiliency throughout the contest.

"We were down," Wecker said. "We had a couple of missed shots at the beginning and they went up 3-1 and then 8-5. But we kept our composure and didn't get rattled.

"We showed great composure tonight early on in the game. We stuck with our offense and executed like we need to."

Wecker was helped mightily by a 22-point game from Nicole Ohlde, 21 points from Laurie Koehn and 11 from Megan Mahoney.

Mahoney said Friday's win over Solna, and an earlier one over Team Concept, gave K-State an opportunity to prepare for the season by seeing two different types of teams.

"I think it was good for us," Mahoney said. "The two teams we played were pretty different. This team we played tonight was really smart. They had good outside shooters and they could penetrate.

"Tonight we worked a lot of different combinations. I think, at one time, we had four posts in there playing the guards. We got some good experience out of this and we're ready to get rolling."

In Friday's win, K-State, without Domenico, was able to experiment with a number of looks at point guard.

Koehn started at the point,

VETERANS DAY | National holiday pays tribute to service, sacrifice of American armed forces veterans

organizations, like the VFW, the American Legion and Disabled American Veterans, help the Flint Hills Veterans' Coalition educate the community during Veterans Day weekend, visiting schools, displaying wartime memorabilia and having parades, meals and entertainment. Barrett Walker, member of the VFW and the Legion, fought in the Korean War and now serves as chairman of the Korean's Commemorative Committee. Walker joined other veterans in Veterans Day festivities last weekend.

"There's all kinds of different emotions and feelings when I go on the float," Walker said. "I'm amazed at the people that salute us, the people that hold their hand over their heart and the children most of all. The children respond great and show all sorts of emotion."

Walker said he has seen an increased response to Veterans Day since Sept. 11.

"Veterans have come into a new fame since Sept. 11 and slightly before that," he said.

Eighty-five-year-old Charles Arthur, member of the VFW and secretary for the Flint Hills Veterans' Coalition, was 23 and attending the University of Kansas when he enlisted in the Navy Air Corps during World War II. Arthur said Veterans Day reminds people of the importance of national security.

"We certainly want to emphasize that we don't want any wars, but we have to protect our country, particularly after what happened in New York."

Hubbard said the VFW is sponsoring soldiers fighting overseas in a conflict area.

"We send them care packages, including everything from sunglasses to water bottles – anything we can manage to get shipped to them," he said. "We hold high hopes for the young people that are threatened with going into the conflict – it may cost them dearly."

Walker said he remembers what it's like to be in that position.

"I'm lucky enough to remember what it's like to be 19 or 20 and go overseas into a combat zone," he said.

"Believe me, a 19- or 20-year-old doesn't go over there thinking, 'I'm going to save the world.' The thought comes afterward, when you realize what you've done."

Walker said people should think of those who have given their lives and limbs to protect the United States.

"If you know that you're raised in the greatest country, and if you know that freedom is a rare thing, then that is enough," he said.

BASKETBALL | Wildcats 2-0 in exhibition with lopsided win

then Mahoney took over at times and even Wecker and Ohlde both brought the ball up the floor on occasion.

Mahoney says she's comfortable bringing the ball up herself, or leaving the job to her teammates.

"What's dynamic about our team is we have a lot of different looks where different people are entering," she said.

"If that's what the team needs from me – to bring the ball up – then I'm comfortable doing that. It's just good for me to get some good experience."

Coach Deb Patterson said it was good to get some experience as a team.

"Our victory tonight occurred because we had great contributions across the board," Patterson said. "It was tremendous to see the contribution we had from some of our bench players tonight."

Patterson said no matter what the lineup looks like, she expects the kind of effort displayed in Friday's blowout win.

"It's just, go hard baby," Patterson said. "Believe you have to play hard, don't hold back, you've got to be you, you've got to put in on the line and end of discussion. That's just K-State basketball."

was all his fault but our defense had something to do with it. I feel bad for him because he's a really great player. But our defense came ready to play today."

All told, the Wildcats forced six turnovers, allowed just 71 rushing yards and held ISU to three of 11 on third down.

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said the speed of his defense had a good deal to do with Saturday's outcome.

"We've got a fast team," he said. "Especially on defense, up front on defense. We're very good up front on defense and we've had good days and bad days in the back end. But this was one of those good days."

Elliott said the questions about Wallace posed to the Cats were answered due to his defense's preparation.

"All 11 guys have to play well versus him because he's so talented and so good," he said. "And their scheme is good. They've got a great scheme, so it's not easy either. Our guys just came to play tonight."

K-State to voice budget concern

Students to speak out for higher education

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Carrying signs, writing letters and lobbying are all ways that students will have an opportunity to take the future of K-State into their own hands tonight at the Pack the Library Night: Rally for Higher Education.

Speaking out
- 9:45 p.m. – Demonstration outside Hale Library
- 10:45 p.m. – Letter-writing campaign on the second floor of Hale
- 11:30 p.m. – Pizza, subs and pop available
- Midnight – Program with speakers

The event, sponsored by Student Governing Association, is intended to raise awareness of the effect legislative funding cuts are having on higher education. K-State has experienced two large budget cuts, resulting in a $9.3 million reduction in spending power.

"Obviously, the state budget crisis continues to affect us as college students and as a university," Vicki Conner, Student Senate vice chair, said. "We were looking for a public way to show our support of funding for higher education. Most students know that the library has been effected, and we decided that it was an appropriate place to hold the event."

John O'Hara, Student Senate chair, said the event will give students a chance to voice their concerns about budget cuts.

"We need to let legislators

Hard work pays off for winners

Homecoming champions announced Saturday

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's All-University Homecoming has come to an end, and the winners have been announced.

The overall winner in the residence life division was the pairing of Strong Complex, Smurthwaite Scholarship House and Smith Scholarship House.

"We were very happy that the work that each of the groups put in paid off," Jessica Heier, president of Smurthwaite, said.

Heier, junior in industrial engineering, said she enjoyed the opportunities Homecoming provided.

"My favorite part was having the opportunity to work with people in other halls – to get to know them," she said.

In the greek life division, the pairing of Alpha Chi Omega sorority and Delta Upsilon and Acacia fraternities took first overall.

Aaron Siders, president of Delta Upsilon, said that Changing Catholic Tradition

'Year of the Rosary' begins with additions to custom

In perpetual Eucharistic adoration at St. Isidore's Catholic Church, Leslie Ahlvers, senior in family life and community services, prays the Joyful Mysteries of her daily rosary. In an apostolic letter published Oct. 16, Pope John Paul II introduced a new set of mysteries, the mysteries of light, to add to the existing three. "I think the new mysteries are beautiful," Ahlvers said. "I'm excited every Thursday to pray them."

By Kari Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A centuries-old Roman Catholic traditional prayer, the Rosary, was changed last month.

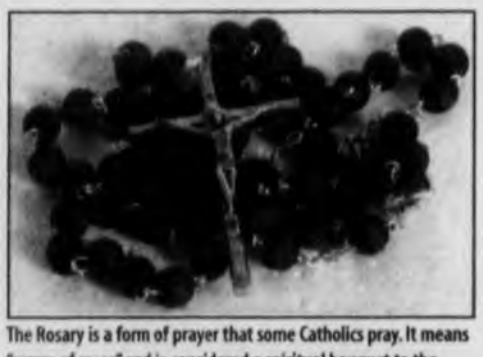
Pope John Paul II announced in an apostolic letter Oct. 16, that there will be an addition to the traditional prayer of the rosary.

To mark the beginning of his 25th year of service, the Pope designated the period between October 2002 and October 2003, as the Year of the Rosary and added new mysteries, the mysteries of light, or luminous mysteries, to the prayer.

"The Rosary is a prayer form that is used for meditation purposes," said Father Keith Weber, chaplain of St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center. "Due to this purpose, we use different parts of Jesus' life to meditate on."

The basic three prayers used are the Lord's Prayer, Glory Be, and the Hail Mary.

Before the addition, the rosary incorporated 15 mysteries of the life of Jesus, along with these basic prayers. It now includes five joyful mysteries of Christ's birth, the five sorrowful mysteries of his crucifixion, the five glorious mysteries of his resurrection, and the five new mysteries of light.



The strand of beads is divided into five sections each with 11 beads. Each section represents a mystery in one of the four sets of mysteries.

Each set of mysteries is recommended to be prayed on designated days of the week, but only as a guideline. The new mysteries are suggested to be prayed on Thursdays, Weber said.

The luminous mysteries highlight Christ's baptism, the first miracle at Cana, the proclamation of the coming of the Kingdom of God, the transfiguration of Christ in front of three disciples, and the institution of the Eucharist as a sacrament.

"I like (the new mysteries) because they tell about Jesus' teachings," said Garrett Ridder, freshman in secondary education and member of St. Isidore's. "Our lives are supposed to follow his teachings, and the new mysteries put an emphasis on the guidelines on how to live as Christians."

The Rosary is a form of prayer that some Catholics pray. It means "crown of roses" and is considered a spiritual bouquet to the Blessed Virgin Mary. The first historical reference is found in the life of Saint Dominic, who preached about it in France. Catholics use the beads to pray and meditate about the life of Christ.

Jewish student integrates ideas with everyday surroundings

Student shares religious beliefs, knowledge of Reformed Judaism

By Rachel Krier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Finding faith
This is the second of five stories on different faiths present at K-State. Watch the Collegian every Tuesday to learn more about what these religions mean to the students who practice them.

When Aaron Brown tells people his religious affiliation, the usual response is, "Really? You don't look Jewish."

No, Brown does not have two curly locks of hair hanging down in front of his ears or a long beard. Nor does he wear a top hat or all black clothes, all stereotypes people may have about the appearance of a Jewish person.

Brown does, however, wear a small pendant of the Star of David around his neck.

Brown, junior in architectural engineering, was raised according to Reformed Judaism, the most liberal sect of the Jewish religion.

"Reformed Judaism is the integration of Jewish ideas into modern society – that's how I see it," Brown said. "We follow a loose interpretation of the Torah."

Some of the Jewish ideas Brown values most are the Ten Commandments and the Golden Rule, or treating others as you would have them treat you. Brown also lives by the Jewish teaching that people are called to give back to the community.

Brown used the example of when he loaned his friends money to buy books while they were waiting for their financial aid checks. He said not helping his friends wasn't an option.

"I never know when it will be me in that situation, when I will be the one who is going to need something," Brown said. "It feels good helping others."

Since Brown arrived at K-State, he said he has continued practicing these teachings even though he has stopped attending synagogue on Friday nights, and he only goes to services on High Holy days.

However, Brown said he gets his dose of Jewish fellowship by attending Hillel, the Jewish student organization at K-State, on Thursday nights at Java Espresso and Bakery.

"Hillel helps Jewish students maintain traditions and allows an avenue for Jewish students to be around others with the same beliefs," said Andrea Blair, Hillel adviser and learning disabilities specialist. "It helps students to foster their Jewish growth as

Iraqi lawmakers angered over U.N. resolution

By Sameer N. Yacoub
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Iraqi lawmakers denounced a tough, new U.N. resolution on weapons inspections Monday as dishonest, provocative and worthy of rejection – despite the risk of war. But parliament said it ultimately will trust whatever President Saddam Hussein decides.

One after the other, senior lawmakers rejected the resolution, the latest in a long effort to ensure Iraq scraps its weapons of mass destruction. This time, however, the United States and Britain have made clear they will attack Iraq if it does not fully comply.

Parliament speaker Saadoun Hamadi said the resolution was stacked with "ill intentions", "falsehood", "lies" and "dishonesty."

Oprah donates generously to college scholarship fund

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Talk show host Oprah Winfrey stunned a college audience with a scholarship donation.

While giving the keynote speech at Cuyahoga Community College's scholarship luncheon, Winfrey offered to match the $600,000 the event was expected to raise for scholarships.

She said her donation was a tribute to the dual forces that have shaped her life.

The two-year college has more than 20,000 students. Winfrey has been friends with the Rev. Otis Moss, a Baptist minister who co-sponsored the luncheon, for 15 years.

WB 'Creek' star arrested

Joshua Jackson, Pacey on the WB series "Dawson's Creek," was arrested and charged with drunkenly assaulting a security guard at a hockey game.

Jackson, 24, was arrested Saturday night at a game between the Carolina Hurricanes and the Pittsburgh Penguins. He is scheduled to appear in court Dec. 4.

Arrest warrants allege that Jackson grabbed 40-year-old guard Drew Grissom around the neck and struck him.

In jail, tests showed his blood-alcohol content registered 0.14. He posted $1,000 bail early Sunday and left.

Weatherman cuts the fat

There's nothing wrong with your TV set – Al Roker really does look different. That's because he lost 100 pounds after undergoing gastric bypass surgery.

The 5-foot-8-inch weatherman on NBC's "Today" show weighed 320 pounds before the operation in March.

A segment documenting Roker's surgery is scheduled to air Tuesday night on NBC's "Dateline."

Glover honored for work

Danny Glover received the Marian Anderson Award, which honors artists whose leadership benefits humanity.

The 55-year-old actor, who received the award and $100,000 prize Sunday, was given the honor for his work as an artist and humanitarian who has fought for causes ranging from abolition of the death penalty to fighting AIDS, Mayor John F. Street said.

The award is named after Marian Anderson, the late opera singer and Philadelphia native who was the first black performer to sing at the White House.

Leno rides with the pack

Jay Leno led a pack of rumbling Harley-Davidsons at the start of Love Ride 19, billed as the largest motorcycle fund-raiser in the world.

As the grand marshal of Sunday's parade, Leno took credit for the sunny morning that followed three days of rain in Southern California.

Navajo historian, war veteran relates stories

Zonnie Gorman, Navajo historian, gave a speech in the K-State Student Union's Forum Hall. Gorman's father was one of the original 29 Navajo Code Talkers and was a recipient of the Congressional Gold Medal.

Speakers explain code talkers' role in World War II communications

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Albert Smith, a Navajo code talker from World War II, and Zonnie Gorman, Navajo historian and daughter of a code talker, talked about the experiences and contributions of the Navajo Indians during the war at a lecture Monday night in Forum Hall.

The Marines used Navajos to develop and utilize a code in their native language to communicate during the war. The code allowed the Marines to communicate without enemy forces intercepting intelligence.

"It wasn't our everyday language," said Smith, veteran of Iwo Jima and other battles. "A lot of people make that mistake that we were interpreting our own language."

Instead, the code used words from the Navajo language to represent other things. For instance, a tank was referred to by the Navajo word for "turtle," and a hand grenade was referred to by the Navajo word for "potato."

Smith was the only code talker hired as a consultant for the movie "Windtalkers," which tells the story of the code talkers. Much of the movie is accurate, he said, but the movie does take some liberties with the facts.

"It's a movie – you know Hollywood," Smith said.

The first code talkers were recruited in April 1942 on the Navajo Reservation in New Mexico. Smith and Gorman's father, Carl, were among the original 29 to join the Marine Corps. These recruits went through basic training before they were given their assignment – to develop and use a code based on their native language.

The first code contained about 200 terms, but by the war's end, it had grown to 678 terms, including an alphabet similar to the military alphabet.

One of the greatest ironies of the war, Gorman said, is that the Navajo were not allowed to speak their native language at their boarding schools on the reservation. Even after returning from the war, code talkers who returned to these schools were harshly punished for speaking their native language.

Gary Walker, a member of the Marine reserves and senior in construction science, said learning about the contributions of the code talkers is important because communication is a vital part of any military operation.

> "We've been through many wars, paid many prices for it — for our freedom."
> Albert Smith
> NAVAJO CODETALKER FROM WWII

"It's great to learn about individuals' efforts to help win the war," Walker said.

During a cleansing ceremony following his time in the war, Smith's elders told him to let go of the smell, feel, taste and smell of the war. He said it is important even now to look at the bigger picture, to take care of the earth and each other.

"We've been through many wars, paid many prices for it – for our freedom," Smith said. "We're not really solving some of the problems. We're just going on."

Bush tells veterans Iraqi conflict might be necessary

By Ron Fournier
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In somber tribute to soldiers of wars past, President Bush said Monday he will commit "the full force and might of the United States military" against Iraq if Saddam Hussein refuses to disarm swiftly.

As the rubber-stamping Iraqi parliament condemned a U.S.-backed United Nations resolution, Bush used two Veterans Day addresses to underscore his impatience.

"The time to confront this threat is before it arrives, not the day after," he told several dozen veterans during an East Room ceremony.

Behind the scenes, Bush has approved tentative Pentagon plans for invading Iraq should a new U.N. arms inspection effort fail to rid the nation of weapons of mass destruction. The strategy calls for a land, sea and air force of 200,000 to 250,000 troops, administration officials said, as they sought to build up pressure on Saddam to relent.

"We have to keep, in a sense, a gun pointed to the head of the Iraqi regime because that's the only way they cooperate," Bush's national security adviser, Condoleezza Rice, told National Public Radio's "The Travis Smiley Show."

The talk of war grew to a crescendo just three days after the U.N. Security Council approved a tough new resolution with an unexpected 15-0 vote. Iraq has until Friday to accept the resolution that would send U.N. inspectors back to Baghdad after an absence of nearly four years with broad new powers to go anywhere at any time backed by the threat of force.

With the clock ticking, Bush traveled across the Potomac River to visit Arlington National Ceremony, lay a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns, praise America's veterans and pledge his resolve against terrorism and Iraq.

"We will not permit a dictator who has used weapons of mass destruction to threaten America with chemical, biological or nuclear weapons," Bush said. "This great nation will not live at the mercy of any foreign plot or power."

Standing beneath the marble dome of the cemetery's flag-draped amphitheater, the president drew cheers and whistles of approval when he declared, "The dictator of Iraq will fully disarm or the United States will lead a coalition to disarm him."

In Baghdad, Iraq's parliament condemned the U.N. resolution as full of lies, and a senior lawmaker urged that it be rejected – a prospect that likely would bring on war.

Rice dismissed the response and the parliament itself.

"I don't think anyone believes this is anything but an absolute dictatorship and this decision is up to Saddam Hussein," she told reporters at the White House.

Even if Saddam accepts the resolution, Rice said she will remain skeptical.

Bush himself said Iraq is behind the eight-ball.

"No enemy that threatens our security or endangers our people will escape the patient justice and the overwhelming power of the United States of America," he said in the East Room. "Should military action become necessary for our own security, I will commit the full force and might of the United States military, and we will prevail."

Bush began his day with a pre-dawn visit to the Vietnam War Memorial. As a chilly rain pelted his umbrella, Bush placed an American flag at the base of the black granite wall, where 58,229 names of those killed or missing in the war from 1959 to 1975 are inscribed.

Later, at the East Room reception, Bush said America owes its freedom to the ex-soldiers gathered before him and its greatness to their postwar service.

"Our veterans from every era are the finest of citizens," the president said. "We owe them the life we know today."

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Rally for higher education worthy of student support

Students will have the opportunity to make a difference in the future of K-State tonight.

The Student Governing Association is sponsoring Pack the Library Night: Rally for Higher Education at Hale Library starting at 9:45 tonight, and we encourage every K-State student to attend.

The event is being sponsored to raise awareness of the effects that legislative budget cuts are having on higher education.

The rally is an easy way for students to get involved with government. In the past, students have used petitions as a way to make their voices heard. The rally will be a much more visible way for students' opinions to be heard.

Along with student government representatives, administrators and state and local government officials, Gov. Bill Graves and Gov.-Elect Kathleen Sebelius have been invited to the event. One of the best ways to convince our newly elected state officials that higher education is a top priority is to make sure the event is well supported.

We need to make sure higher education is a top priority for our new governor and other state officials, so pack the library tonight and rally for the importance of higher education.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

BAD BOY OF RAP

Illustration by Ben Dolezal | COLLEGIAN

Musican knows power of lyrics but abuses natural talent

ANGEL WILSON

In the November issue of VIBE magazine, Zadie Smith writes, "Eminem has secured his place in the rap pantheon."

But he's a self-proclaimed agitator, as well as a magnet for controversy. These two things alone should be enough for me to love him to pieces, but I don't.

Eminem doesn't sit well with me. It's strange, because almost all of the things I dislike about him should be the things that make me like him even more: tight beats, witty lyrics, catchy hooks, cuteness.

Eminem says that during the past two years, he's grown up a lot and learned that you have to separate the truth from entertainment.

You mean entertainment is not the truth? Is Eminem saying that he only realizes this now? What was he doing on his first couple of albums?

Oh, I remember, talking about killing his wife and how he hates his mother and how he hates gays and hates boy bands and how he's down for his friends.

So that's all entertainment? Sounded incredibly true to me, especially considering he also said these things when he wasn't on wax.

What I can't comprehend is how at one moment he is talking about how Hailey, his 6-year-old daughter, is his everything, and everything he does is for her, and then at any given moment he talks about killing her mother.

Better yet, setting up beautifully guided imagery for us with lyrics like: "Mama said she wants to show how far she can float. And don't worry about that little boo-boo on her throat. It's just a little scratch – it don't hurt, her was eatin' dinner while you were sleeping and spilled ketchup on her shirt. Mama's messy isn't she?"

That's a little drastic, huh? Well maybe he didn't mean for it to sound like that. Maybe his "Kim" song sums it up better: "Ha! Go ahead, yell! Here, I'll scream with you! Ah, somebody help! Don't you get it b*, no one can hear you? Now shut the f up and get what's coming to you. You were supposed to love me! Now bleed, b* bleed!"

There's a popular expression about guys and how to tell if you've got a good one – look at the way he treats the women in his life, mainly his mother.

If this statement has any merit, the women in Eminem's life are doomed to ridicule, slander and vengeance.

He does offer an earnest apology, though. "I'm sorry mama. I never meant to hurt you. I never meant to make you cry, but tonight I'm cleaning out my closet."

The funniest part of this song has to be when he says, "Now I would never diss my own mama just to get recognition..."

Isn't that what he's been doing since his first album?

Before anyone gets the wrong idea, let me say that I don't hate Eminem. He's an artist, and all artists have a right to express their artistic abilities.

My problem is the hypocrite he has become.

How could he possibly want what's best for Hailey with this type of environment? She is not yet at the age to discern when her dad is saying things about her mother that he doesn't mean, or when he is merely "expressing himself."

Artists have to become more responsible when it comes to their lyrics. If they're singing or rapping about something that doesn't reflect them, why are they doing it? Why would they present something to millions of people that is false?

Music is more than just sounds, beats and lyrics. It is a powerful phenomenon that deserves recognition. Even Eminem himself raps, "You better lose yourself in the music, the moment, you own it, you better never let it go..."

Now that's one page we are on together, Em.

Eminem deserves respect for artistry, not personal life

JJ DUNCAN

I don't like Marshall Mathers III. I like Eminem.

Mathers is touchy and high-strung. He tried to pick a fight with a rubber dog at the MTV Music Video Awards, and he rarely speaks more than one or two complete sentences in interviews.

Mathers can act childish and insecure. Fame, negative press and a hard life are no excuse.

But that doesn't mean he can't make good music.

Eminem is astounding. Few rappers can stay in the spotlight and go platinum several times over with every full-length album and still maintain underground hip-hop credibility. Just ask Nelly and Jay-Z.

Eminem's lyrical skill is such that one would be hard-pressed to find any mainstream hip-hop albums that exhibit such talent.

Eminem recklessly assaults people and topics in his tracks. He talks trash on some people who simply annoy him, and some people who have literally hindered his early career. He has rhymed about killing his ex-wife in "'97 Bonnie and Clyde," assaulting school bullies in "Brain Damage" and his animosity toward imitators and psychopath celebrities in "The Real Slim Shady."

And no matter how many people hate Eminem, he just keeps selling albums.

That's because he approaches hip-hop in a way that many people are not accustomed to.

He takes on taboo subjects with no apprehension whatsoever. He is white. And his songs are so catchy that I've literally seen toddlers walking around singing them.

While some groups might argue that those qualities make him all the more dangerous, from a music critic's standpoint, it just makes Eminem one of the most talented artists working in the business.

Anyone who thought Eminem was a flash in the pan like Vanilla Ice has already been proven wrong. He is a force in hip-hop music who has changed the way the genre is approached. He is something like the straw that broke the camel's back. Eminem has been one of the new hip-hop artists who have made hip-hop a truly accepted mainstream form of music.

Yes, there have always been certain artists who took hip-hop to the mainstream, but hardline fans of popular music have often regarded it as a separate entity.

Hip-hop has only recently been given respect as a form of popular music, and Eminem was a key part of that process.

You can argue over the quality of the person all you want. Eminem has his good and bad traits, just like most people. But in the world of music superstars, the quality of Eminem's character is comparably good. After all, it isn't like he married his 13-year-old cousin like Jerry Lee Lewis or videotaped women going to the bathroom like Chuck Berry.

In July, Christian rapper Ja'Marc Antoine Davis, founding member of the Christian hip-hop group Raze, was charged in Tulsa, Okla., with five counts of lewd molestation, three counts of forcible sodomy and two counts of rape by instrumentation.

For a rapper who sings about the decidedly secular subjects of murder and retribution, Eminem lives a pretty decent life compared to the Oklahoma Christian rapper.

It just goes to show that the subject matter of most artist's material does not have any bearing on the way those artists live their lives.

Love him or hate him, Eminem's work deserves respect. Marshall Mathers III has earned at least that much.

JUDAISM | Jewish students individualize religion

young adults."

Brown agreed that it's important to relate to other Jewish people, although he said there are some debatable issues among Jews.

The seasonal time of Christmas is one such debatable issue for Reformed Jews.

Staci Feder, senior in hotel and restaurant management, does not celebrate Christmas at all.

"A lot of people ignore the fact that there are Jewish people in the world – they forget that not everyone celebrates Christmas," Feder said. "It happens quite a bit at K-State with such a small Jewish population."

Brown and Feder agreed that Judaism is both a culture and a religion.

In religious terms, Brown described his Jewish faith as a natural part of his life.

He said he prays at least once a day, which is usually very casual conversation, and he prays before he eats. Brown said he quite often asks for patience while he trusts in God's plan.

"I'm pretty sure the man upstairs has got something lined up for me," Brown said.

Brown said that, when praying, he has has a concept of a "forging being, like a father figure, yet intangible. He's there when you need him, when no one else is there."

Brown said he does not speak for all Jews or even for all Reformed Jews when he shares his faith. He said people have their own levels of spirituality and probably have a personal relationship with God even if they don't admit it.

Blair said that despite the individualizing aspect of Judaism, the Jewish people still are bonded together.

"Whatever they believe, the Jewish people are bonded by the Hebrew language, customs and participating in holidays," Blair said.

Learning about Judaism

- Common symbol

  The Magen David — the shield of David, or as it is more commonly known, the Star of David, is the symbol most commonly associated with Judaism today, but it is actually a relatively new Jewish symbol. It is supposed to represent the shape of King David's shield or perhaps the emblem on it.

- Three major holidays:

  Rosh Hashana, or New Year's Day on the Jewish calendar. It is in the month of September on the solar calendar.

  Yom Kippur, meaning "Day of Atonement," is a time of reflecting and asking for forgiveness. It is also in September.

  Pesach, the Passover feast, which is an eight-day event usually in April.

- Sects of Judiasm:

  Orthodox Conservative
  Reformed
  Reconstructive

- Jewish Beliefs

Judaism has no dogma, no formal set of beliefs that one must hold to be a Jew. However, the medieval Jewish scholar, Rambam, wrote a list of 13 basic principals of faith which is widely accepted today.

1. God exists
2. God is one and unique
3. God is incorporeal
4. God is eternal
5. Prayer is to be directed to God alone and to no other
6. The words of the prophets are true
7. Moses's prophecies are true, and Moses was the greatest of the prophets
8. The Written Torah (first 5 books of the Bible) and Oral Torah (teachings now contained in the Talmud and other writings) were given to Moses
9. There will be no other Torah
10. God knows the thoughts and deeds of men
11. God will reward the good and punish the wicked
12. The Messiah will come
13. The dead will be resurrected

- Holy book:

  "Torah" refers to the Five Books of Moses: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy.

  The word "Torah" can also be used to refer to the entire Jewish Bible, the body of scripture known to non-Jews as the Old Testament and to Jews as the Tanakh or Written Torah.

  In its broadest sense, "Torah" refers to the whole body of Jewish law and teachings.

because his fraternity had been in a pairing that won Homecoming in the past, the members were extremely competitive.

Siders said that because his fraternity felt they should have won the float competition in the past, it was poetic justice when they won that competition this year.

He said the float competition probably was members' favorite Homecoming event, although he thought all of Homecoming was fun.

"When it comes down to the end of it, it's all about fun," Siders said.

In the student organizations division, the overall winner was the Black Student Union.

Missy Decker-Heidrick, chair of the Homecoming Committee and associate director of alumni programs, said this year there were six or seven student organizations that participated in Homecoming, however BSU was the only organization to compete in all the events.

"They participated in everything, which allowed them to accumulate points to win the division," she said. "They were the only student organization at Pant the Chant. They did an excellent job."

Decker-Heidrick said she thought Homecoming 2002 went well.

"All the students did a wonderful job," she said. "They had a lot of creativity, and they spread a lot of K-State spirit in Manhattan and across campus. It was a very successful week."

ROSARY | Church modifies traditional prayer

Weber said the Pope has two main purposes for adding the luminous mysteries.

"One is to renew interest in praying the Rosary, and the second is to focus on different aspects of Christ's life that haven't been focused on before," he said.

The Pope said in his apostolic letter, which is posted on www.catholic.com, that the new mysteries are meant to give the Rosary a fresh life and start a renewed interest in the Rosary's significance.

"(The new mysteries) will help to renew our devotions, changing the feel," said David Voss, sophomore in music education and member of St. Isidore's. "It makes us look at the mysteries in a new light."

The Pope also cited an urgent need to counter the crisis of the Rosary becoming wrongly devalued and no longer taught to younger generations.

With current turmoil in the Roman Catholic Church, encouraged prayer might help people focus on their faith.

"The church is in a time of need because of over the past couple of months with the sexual cases," said Quenten Troyer, senior in elementary education and member of St. Isidore's. "The new mysteries have called us back to God."

Such a change in a traditional prayer might take some adjustment, but it seems the change is a positive one.

"There has been a lot of talk about it, and I've received a lot of questions, so it has definitely stirred a lot of interest," Weber said.

2 interceptions highlight blowout

Cornerback puts dent in school record books

Nicole Donnert | COLLEGIAN
Bobby Walker takes down Iowa State wide receiver Lane Danielsen in the second half of K-State's game Saturday night. Walker had two interceptions for 71 yards during the game against the Cyclones.

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first one was close.

In Saturday's 58-7 blowout of Iowa State, Bobby Walker intercepted a pass by Iowa State's Seneca Wallace at the 10:24 mark of the third quarter. Walker then returned the ball 45 yards for a touchdown – kind of.

In all actuality, Walker appeared to have fumbled the ball at about the three. Had there been an official swift enough to keep up with Walker on the return, Iowa State likely would have gotten the ball back on its own 20-yard line.

Instead, after a short conference in front of eager-to-celebrate Wildcats, an official gave Walker the touchdown, and that's how it went in the books.

The second one, however, was for real.

On Iowa State's very next pass play, Walker intercepted Wallace again.

Walker returned the pick 26 yards and and took it to the house to gain credit – this time deservedly – for his second interception return for a touchdown.

Coach Bill Snyder called the back-to-back interception returns unprecedented.

"I told Bobby he is the only defensive player in the history of college football to score on consecutive downs," Snyder said.

"I would like to think that's probably true. You might be able to prove me wrong, but we will labor under that assumption until proven otherwise."

Snyder said he had doubts about Walker's first return.

"Bobby was 75 percent on that because he fumbled the first one and I would have to see the replay, but I don't think he got in," he said. "To me, it looked like he didn't. That really is disturbing to me.

"On the second one, he had both of his hands and four or five other hands he borrowed – he was going to make sure that didn't happen again. It's being at the right place at the right time, which he was, and doing what he was supposed to be doing."

Walker's two interceptions were part of a defensive effort that forced Heisman candidate Wallace into three interceptions overall. Wallace also fumbled twice and was sacked twice as Iowa State committed six turnovers on the day.

Walker said the way he and the Wildcat defense were able to dominate Wallace was part of their plan.

BCS: If it ain't broke, it doesn't need fixing

Here is what I would do if I were in charge of college football's postseason bowl picture and asked to explore changes to the Bowl Championship Series system.

Nothing.

Sure, as a fan I would like to see changes, but as a businessperson, it would make little sense.

NICK BRATKOVIC

It just doesn't make sense right now.

Last Saturday, ESPN College Gameday ran a huge story on the BCS. They explored what happens if so and so loses, and if a certain team wins.

I won't talk about specifics because I know that you K-State fans have a much better idea of the BCS scenarios than I care to know.

But nonetheless, the BCS is a suspenseful roller coaster that never ends.

The nationwide debate goes year round. Here is a quick synopsis.

January to March

After New Year's Day, or whenever the championship game is played, people talk about how the winner didn't really deserve to be there. Sometimes they talk about that for a couple of months.

April to August

During this time, the talk continues after teams release their schedules – and how it will affect the BCS.

That's pretty much all the off-season talk. In the season, it really gets crazy. There is a never-ending list of scenarios, which is why it never ends.

September to December

This is the regular season. This is time when countless scenarios play out on your TV screen and even more are conjured up in your mind. Then the BCS teams are selected, and it starts all over again.

It's the "Who Shot JR" story line compounded, only there isn't just one shooter. It compounds a hundred different ways.

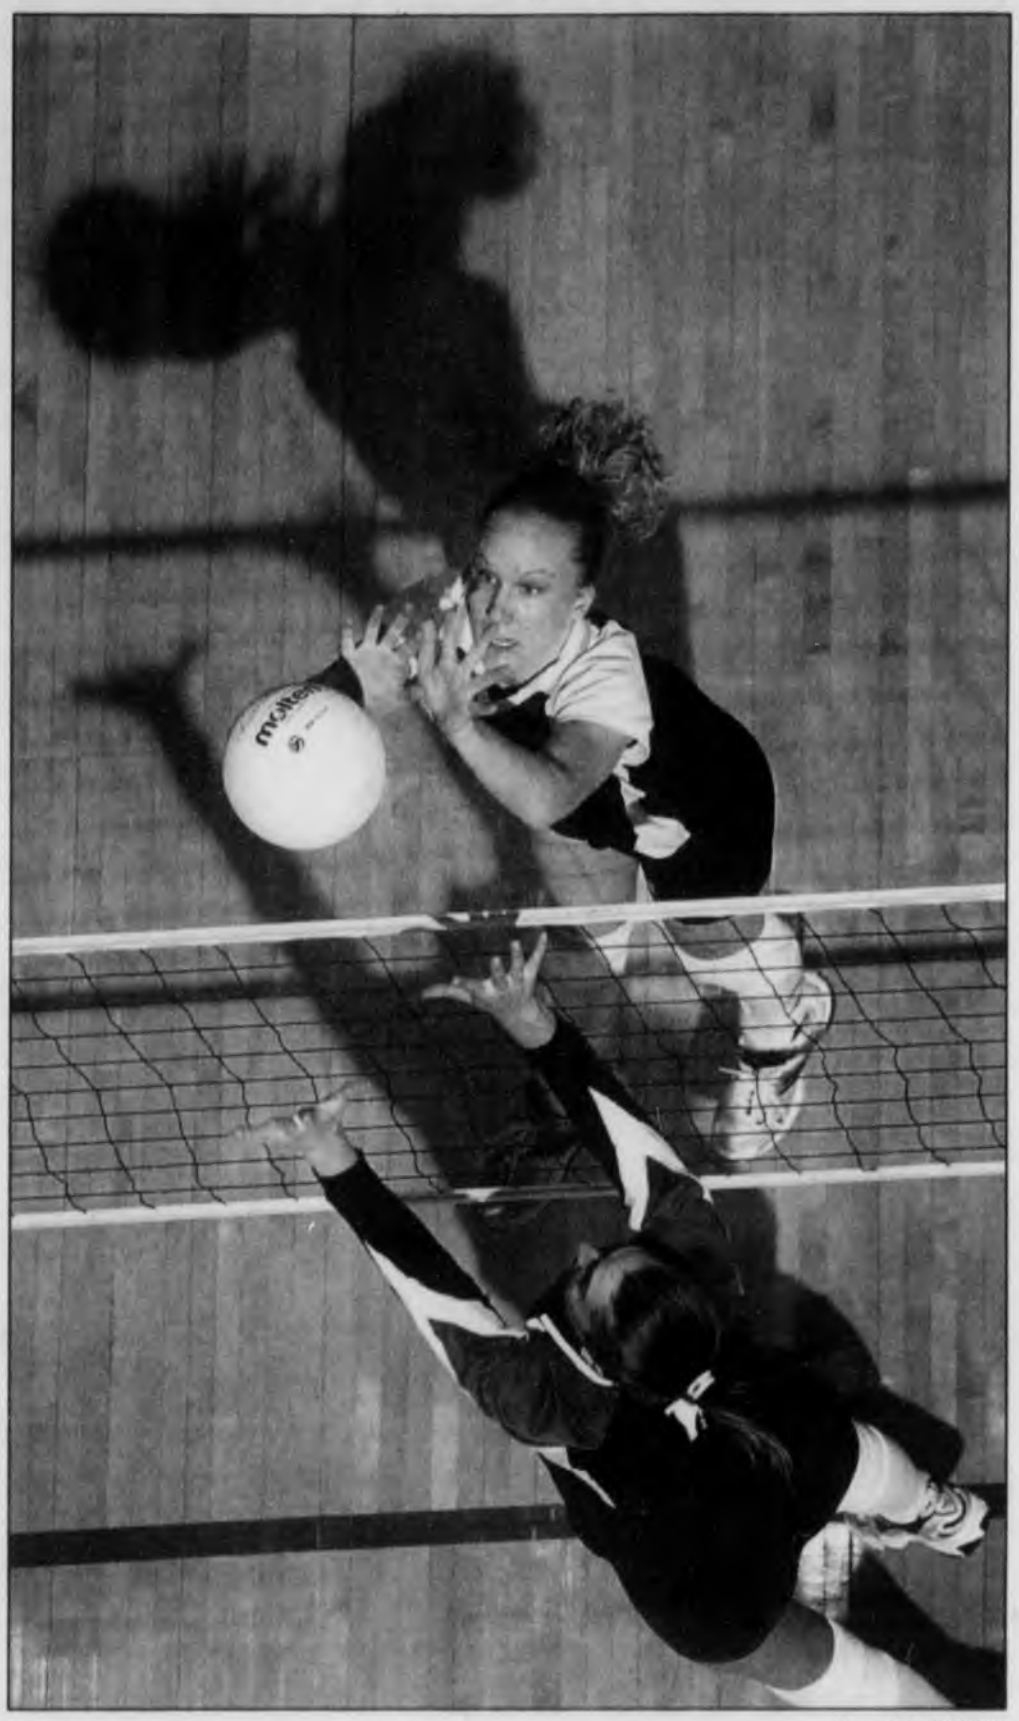
It's good drama. There is no reason to change it. The controversy of who should play for the national championship keeps college football in the forefront of the American sports world.

A playoff system might not be able to do that. It might end the debate.

How much fun would that be?

Some games might not count then. An Oklahoma loss to Texas A&M wouldn't send shockwaves through America. We might not care if Ohio State barely defeated Purdue.

There is one other reason we will not see a playoff. The current system is profitable. The Big 12 Conference, and other conferences, make a lot of money based on the current system.



In an era of Title IX equity, when football has to tug the ship for all other sports, it can't afford to tinker with a system that works. It has people talking year round and continues to line the pockets of universities.

I guess the only real solution would be to not watch the games, and stop discussing college football.

But how much fun would that be?

Wildcats' Saturday sweep over Baylor pushes streak to within 2 of school record

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sometimes executing the simplest of things can translate into the easiest of wins.

On Saturday, K-State's volleyball team was able to serve aggressively, which led to a three-game win over Baylor at Ahearn Field House.

The Cats had nine aces on the afternoon, led by outside hitter Jennifer Pollard's six, as well as many other tough serves the Bears couldn't handle.

"That's definitely one of our identities," Pollard said. "We're probably the toughest serving team, statistically, in the conference, so we want to continue that and know that when teams come in, they're going to expect tough serves from us."

Game 1: K-State 30, Baylor 25
Game 2: K-State 30, Baylor 15
Game 3: K-State 30, Baylor 16

Baylor fell into that category of expecting difficult serves from the Cats.

On Sept. 21, K-State used 10 service aces to breeze by the Bears in three games in Waco, Texas.

Setter Gabby Guerre said the team knew that if it could serve well, they would have a good chance to win against Baylor.

"They're an easier team to focus on because we know what to prepare for," Guerre said. "That team is pretty sporadic – you don't know what you are going to get."

But K-State was able to contain the inconsistency of the Bears. Baylor hit just .054 on the afternoon, committing 24 errors. They also had seven serving errors.

For the third straight match, the Cats held an opponent under .100 hitting.

K-State, on the other hand, was consistent, hitting .293 and committing just 13 errors. The Cats also had eight blocks in the win.

In game one, K-State needed a late surge to get past Baylor 30-25.

The Cats scored on four aces in the opening game, but allowed Baylor to get some untimely kills that enabled the Bears to stay in the game.

Pollard said the slow start was because the team was not focusing completely on the task at hand.

"I think we were expecting them to roll over," Pollard said. "It kind of gave us a wake-up call – a game 30-25 – so we had to get things together. We played with a sense of urgency after that, and we got better as the match goes on, which is important."

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN
A block falls off the arms of Jennifer Pollard during Saturday's match against Baylor. The Cats beat Baylor in three games to extend their winning streak to 11 matches.

K-State did improve over the course of the match, with its highest hitting percentage (.353) and kill totals (16), and lowest tally of errors (4) coming in the final game.

Coach Suzie Fritz said all of that came about because the Cats were able to serve effectively.

"We served very well – we've been serving very well," Fritz said. "We take pride in being an aggressive serving team and I'm really proud of Jenny Pollard. Six service aces, that's great."

With 11 straight wins, the Wildcats hold the

Big 12 | Walker earns Big 12 honor

Reggie McNeal of Texas A&M, Bobby Walker of K-State, Lannie Hopkins of Nebraska and Oklahoma's Trey DiCarlo were named Monday as Big 12 players of the week.

McNeal received offensive honors after leading the Aggies to a 30-26 win over then-No. 1 Oklahoma. The freshman quarterback carried the ball 16 times for 89 yards and threw for another 191 yards and four touchdowns in A&M's first win over a top-ranked team.

Walker, who plays free safety, returned two interceptions for touchdowns in K-State's 58-7 win over Iowa State and was named defensive player of the week.

Hopkins and DiCarlo were selected co-special teams players.

Hopkins partially blocked one punt and then swatted down a second punt that was returned for a touchdown in Nebraska's 45-7 win over Kansas. DiCarlo kicked four field goals against the Aggies — from 25, 22, 46 and 32 yards.

MLB | Bonds named NL MVP

Barry Bonds became baseball's first five-time Most Valuable Player, winning the National League award unanimously Monday.

Bonds received all 32 first-place votes and 448 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

St. Louis outfielder Albert Pujols was second with 26 second-place votes and 276 points, followed by Houston outfielder Lance Berkman (181) and Montreal outfielder Vladimir Guerrero (168).

Bonds also won the MVP award for Pittsburgh in 1990 and 1992 and for the Giants in 1993 and 2001, and is the first player to twice win the honor in consecutive seasons. No other player has won an MVP award more than three times, and only 10 others have won it in consecutive seasons.

Greg Norman will rejoin the PGA Tour next year, allowing him to play in as many tournaments as he wants.

Norman gave up his PGA Tour membership last year because he played in only 11 events, one short of the minimum. The two-time British Open champion was allowed only five sponsors' exemptions in 2002, along with whatever majors or World Golf Championships for which he was eligible. He wound up playing 13 times, and made the cut in all four majors.

Norman will not claim "home circuit" status for the 2003 season. Foreign-born players can use that to play their home tours without having to get a release from the PGA Tour.

MLB | Chicago vice president dies

Jack Gould, a senior vice president of the Chicago White Sox since 1981, died Monday at his home.

His age was not disclosed by the team.

Gould flew combat missions during World War II as a bomber pilot for the U.S. Army Air Force and was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross. Actor Jimmy Stewart was second in command of Gould's wing.

PAINTINGS WITH SOUL

Music-inspired pieces displayed in Union show artist's ethnic influences

"Holly Eagle," by Billy Williams hangs in the William T. Kemper Art Gallery in the K-State Student Union.

"A Song For You," by Billy Williams, depicts a jazz trumpet player. Other music references occur throughout the show, such as the prominent blue and black portrait of Miles Davis.

"A Starving Artist," by Billy Williams hangs in the William T. Kemper Art Gallery in the K-State Student Union.

With soul and R&B music playing in the background, Williams' pieces approach black culture in several ways. Beside "Starving Artist" is a realistic portrait of the soul singer Maxwell, showing the diversity of styles Williams commands with his acrylic paintings.

Williams dips more into somewhat abstract styles with pieces like "Sistas." In those pieces, Williams uses varying degrees of realistic color, sometimes using true-to-life skin tones, and other times opting for bright colors, such as the blue skin of "A Starving Artist."

Williams resides in the greater St. Louis, Mo., metropolitan area.

'Una y Media' to be shown by Paraguayan student group

By Adam Lee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The cultural climate of Paraguayan youth is examined in a film being shown tonight by the Paraguayan Student Association.

"Una y Media" ("Half Past One") chronicles a night in the life of Gonzolo, a middle class 18-year-old living in Asunción, Paraguay. While Gonzolo and his friends explore the night life of Asunción, the film examines the behavior and mannerisms of Paraguayan youth.

"The story is very simple, but what the film deals with is complex relationships and interactions between people," PSA member Boris Dedoff said.

The film was chosen by the PSA because they thought it offered an accurate depiction of life for young Paraguayans. They saw the film as a strong way to convey to the campus an understanding of their homeland and its culture.

The film was shot entirely in Asuncion by Esteban and Luis Aguirre. Luis said their goal in making the film was to create an authentic illustration of Paraguay's upper-middle class.

"We wanted our buddies to look at the film and say, 'I was there!'" Aguirre said.

This will be the first time the 32-minute film will be screened outside of Paraguay, and filmmakers are excited to have a foreign audience see their work. He said the film will expose Americans to how Paraguayans see life in their country, but many aspects of the film and its characters will be familar to those in the United States.

"I believe it's a universal story," Aguirre said, "Certain elements will vary according to the time and location, of course. But the smile on our faces when we were 18, drunk and with our friends – that's universal."

Dedoff produced the English subtitles for the film, first converting it from VHS to a digital format and then inserting translations. He had to learn all of the software applications from scratch, but Dedoff said the hardest part was getting the subtitles in sequence with the film's fast-paced editing.

"I had a little trouble translating slang, but not much," Dedoff said.

The smooth conversion of street talk from Spanish to English doesn't reflect similarities in speech patterns of Paraguayan and American youth, Dedoff said. Expressions used in the countries differ greatly from each other, he said, and these differences will be obvious to the American audience.

"The way they act together is different than people do here," Dedoff said, "I think it will create an understanding of life in Paraguay."

EU recruits pop stars to say 'no' to smoking

Techno artist Moby and Canadian pop boy band b4-4 will head a new anti-smoking campaign aimed at teens, the European Union announced in Brussels, Belgium.

Public Health Commissioner David Byrne said he hoped the new TV ads, which will be seen across the 15-nation EU and other European countries, would convince Europe's youth to "feel free to say no" to cigarettes.

"Tobacco multinationals are targeting our kids," Byrne told reporters Friday. "It is well known that eight out of 10 people who smoke start when they are between 12 and 18 years old. Once they are hooked on nicotine, these people no longer have a choice."

The ads will air on MTV Europe and national television networks. They'll also be shown in 5,000 theaters when "Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets" opens this Friday.

Former network chief Fred Silverman goes to the head of the class

Former TV programming chief Fred Silverman — responsible for getting shows including "All in the Family," "The Love Boat" and "Hill Street Blues" on the air — is going back to school.

Silverman, 65, has been named adjunct professor at the University of Southern California's School of Cinema-Television.

He'll teach a 15-week course next year, associate dean Larry Auerbach said last week.

Starting Jan. 15, classes in "Television Programming: Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" will include Silverman's insight into programming from the early days of Milton Berle to today's reality shows and digital television.

WALKER | Defensive back's 2-pick day highlights Cats' defensive effort

"It was just a zone read and I broke on both of them," Walker said. "We just wanted to dictate the tone much like we did in the first quarter.

"He's a good player, and we knew we would have to play good against him."

Wallace said K-State was ready to defend against him.

"They had a good game plan," Wallace said. "They played what we were trying to do and they played it pretty well. We had some things going in the first half and we just didn't execute."

The win over the Cyclones marked K-State's 13th straight homecoming victory.

Snyder said he attributed the win to an uncharacteristically shoddy ISU team and an excellent performance by his team.

"Six turnovers in the ball game is major, and I think they had 100 yards in penalties," Snyder said. "They are a better football team than that. We played extremely well.

"You can't get penalized like that and turn the ball over like that and expect to hang around too long. So it was a combination of them making some mistakes they normally don't make and us playing extremely well."

Walker all over Wallace

Bobby Walker set the school record for most interceptions returned for a touchdown in a game with two against ISU on Saturday. He had TDs of 45 yards and 25 yards early in the third quarter. Walker has also tied the school record for interceptions returned for a TD in a season with three (73 yards vs. Western Kentucky on Aug. 31). He shares the mark with Brad Lambert (1984). With Walker's five interceptions for 177 yards, he broke the school record for interception yards in a season (Jamie Mendez, 154 yards in 1990).

RALLY | Students will gather to show contempt for budget cuts

know that the students of K-State cannot absorb the shortfall of the state," he said.

Not only are students invited to attend the event, but a copy of the Student Senate resolution and an invitation to attend the rally were sent to Gov. Bill Graves, Gov.-elect Kathleen Sebelius, leaders of the Kansas Senate and House of Representatives along with K-State administration.

The event will kick off with students meeting at the front entrance of Hale Library for a demonstration.

"We will be holding signs," O'Hara said. "Any student should feel free to come and join us."

At 10:45 p.m., Student Senate will provide a base letter that students can address to their home representatives expressing their concerns.

"We are going to have a letter-writing campaign," he said. "Students can write to their representatives to tell them how they feel about the budget cuts."

Food, including subs, pizza and pop, will be available starting at 11:30 p.m. Domino's, Subs and Such, Subway and Pepsi donated food for the expected turnout of 500 people.

The event will culminate at midnight with a program of speakers, O'Hara said. Scheduled to speak are O'Hara, Senate Majority Leader Lana Oleen, University of Kansas Student Body President Jonathan Ng, Student Body President Zac Cook and district representatives Sydney Carlin and Roger Reitz.

After the program many of the Senate members plan to stay at the library all night, O'Hara said. The library will remain open as usual until 2 a.m. for studying.

second-longest winning streak in school history. If K-State can string together two more wins (Texas A&M in College Station and Oklahoma at home), they will tie the all-time school record for consecutive wins with 13.

"We're so fortunate to not have the injuries and problems that Baylor has had," Fritz said.

"That's emotionally and physically draining for a team like that. It's good we have this bye week so we can get our legs under us and get healthy for this last stretch."

WEAPONS | Iraqi officials angry with resolution

Salim al-Koubaisi, head of parliament's foreign relations committee, recommended rejecting the resolution but also advised deferring to the "wise Iraqi leadership" to act as it sees fit to defend Iraq's people and dignity.

"The committee advises ... the rejection of Security Council Resolution 1441, and to not agree to it in response to the opinions of our people, who put their trust in us," al-Koubaisi told fellow lawmakers.

Saddam has used parliament's action as cover for difficult decisions in the past, and harsh rhetoric does not necessarily mean parliament will reject the proposal. Saddam ordered parliament to recommend a formal response, and lawmakers were expected to vote on recommendations for the Iraqi leadership Tuesday.

Iraq has until Friday to accept or reject the resolution, approved unanimously last week by the U.N. Security Council. Exactly when on Friday was left intentionally vague in the resolution, U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard said.

There are numerous interpretations for the deadline – the minute the resolution was adopted, the minute Iraq was notified, the end of business Friday, or midnight on Friday. It is up to the Security Council to interpret its own resolution, Eckhard said.

If Saddam fails to follow through, a Pentagon plan calls for more than 200,000 troops to invade Iraq.

Parliament's advice on the new U.N. resolution, which demands Iraq cooperate with U.N. weapons inspectors or face "serious consequences," will go to the Revolutionary Command Council, Iraq's ruling body headed by Saddam.

Should parliament recommend acceptance, it would allow Saddam to claim the decision was the will of the Iraqi people and more smoothly retreat from previous objections to any new resolution governing weapons inspections.

In Washington, President Bush's national security adviser, Condoleezza Rice, rejected the legitimacy of the parliament debate.

"One has to be a bit skeptical of the independence of the Iraqi parliament from Saddam Hussein," she said.

"I don't think anyone believes this is anything but an absolute dictatorship and this decision is up to Saddam Hussein."

She also said Iraq has no right to accept or reject the resolution. "They are obligated to accept, but the U.N. thought it best to ask for return-receipt requested," Rice said.

On Sunday, Arab League foreign ministers ended meetings in Cairo, Egypt, with a final communique urging cooperation between Iraq and the United Nations. The Arab ministers also called on the United States to commit to pledges Syria said it received that the resolution could not be used to justify military action. They also put forward a united position of "absolute rejection" of military action.

Parliament is stacked with Saddam's allies. During opening speeches aired live on Iraqi television, lawmakers applauded every mention of Saddam's name in speeches praising "His Excellency Mr. President, the holy warrior leader Saddam Hussein."

Wafa Samir, a 30-year-old teacher, watched the speeches on television at a Baghdad shopping center.

"For how long will they keep issuing resolutions and expect Iraq to implement them?" she asked. "They have to stop some time for the Iraqis' sake."

Charges pending in sodomy case

Former Dean Liquor owner faces two felony charges; alcohol involved in incident

By Nancy Foster
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The man who owned Dean Retail Liquor in Aggieville will face two felony counts of aggravated criminal sodomy at a preliminary hearing Friday.

Kent Dean, who owned the liquor store for 11 years, will appear in court at 9 a.m. Friday at the Magistrate Court Room in the Riley County Courthouse.

Dean is being charged with two felony counts of aggravated criminal sodomy and two misdemeanor counts of criminal restraint in connection to a May 9 arrest.

Brenda Jordan, assistant Riley County attorney, said the prosecution must present probable cause evidence for both felony counts at Friday's hearing. The misdemeanor counts do not require a preliminary hearing.

Dean was arrested near his home May 9 for two felony counts of aggravated criminal sodomy and two counts of criminal restraint.

He was released from the Riley County jail on a $15,000 bond.

On Jan. 6, 2002, police allege Dean unlawfully engaged in sodomy with two 22-year-old females who were incapable of giving consent due to the effect of alcoholic liquor or some other drug or substance. The condition was allegedly known or reasonably apparent to Dean.

Also on Jan. 6, 2002, Dean allegedly restrained the victims from leaving a room by shutting off the lights and standing in front of the door to the exit.

Information was unavailable about the exact location of the incidents.

Both victims, now ages 22 and 23, were subpoenaed for Friday's hearing.

Pedro Irigonegaray, Dean's attorney, could not be reached for comment.

Dean Liquor was at the corner of 12th and Laramie streets.

Dean sold the liquor store in June, he previously said, so he and his wife Amy could move to a larger city where she could utilize her interior design degree.

Hundreds rally for education

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students had a message for legislators. With picket signs and chants, more than 400 students and faculty demanded an end to budget cuts.

"Say no to cuts, say yes to learning," was the cry as protesters rallied Tuesday night at Pack the Library Night: A Rally for Higher Education.

The event, organized by the Student Governing Association, aimed to increase awareness of the financial crisis K-State is in because of state budget cuts, which have reduced the university's spending power by $9.3 million.

"The main goal was to have students be able to demonstrate the need for education and show our legislators students do care," John O'Hara, Student Senate chair, said. "It's time to step up. Students can't absorb the cuts. I think it is extremely important legislators know students are being affected and students do care."

The rally began with chants of "hey, hey, ho, ho, stingy cuts have got to go," and signs that read "focus on the future," "no more cuts" and "support higher education." The crowd marched toward Anderson Hall and on to President Jon Wefald's resi-

Teen death not result of force

Police say Ogden boy died after being intimidated to drink

By Dana Strongin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department released more information Tuesday concerning the weekend death of an Ogden teenager.

Curtis McCracken, 17, was pronounced dead at 6:37 a.m. Sunday at Irwin Army Community Hospital. McCracken had been transported to the hospital after a 911 call was made from 104 S. Elm in Ogden, where emergency workers found him unconscious.

In a previous press release, police said the death could have been the result of a party where "the victim was forced to consume a large quantity of alcohol."

On Tuesday, Capt. Gary Grubbs of RCPD's criminal investigations division said the word "forced" did not match the situation.

"The connotation to forced is that there was some sort of physical force," Grubbs said. "There was not physical force. A more appropriate word would be intimidation."

One arrest was made in connection with the case. At 7:30 a.m. Sunday, police arrested Aaron Lewis, 22, of Ogden, for second-degree murder, endangering a child and furnishing alcohol to a minor, according to police reports. He was released on a $100,000 bond.

Those charges had not changed as of Tuesday, Grubbs said.

McCracken had been at a party at 145 S. Elm in Ogden, where Lewis and another person resided, Grubbs said. He said there were about 12 to 15 people at the party, and the police did not know of any minors except McCracken.

A couple had found McCracken outside across the street and called 911. People assisted him outside the party, Grubbs said.

McCracken was transported to the Army hospital because

Accused sex offender could be deported

Aimdilokwong pleads no contest; deportation hearings scheduled

By Crystal Welborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student charged with several sexual crimes will either serve his sentences and probation time or will be deported to his native nation of Thailand, a judge determined Tuesday.

Registered sex offender Akkawit Aimdilokwong, 26, graduate student in chemical engineering, pleaded no contest to two charges – an amended charge of sexual battery from aggravated sexual battery and one charge of lewd and lascivious behavior.

A continuance had been granted for Tuesday's court appearance because Aimdilokwong's father came from Thailand.

Riley County Assistant Attorney Valerie Peterson said the Immigration and Naturalization Service began deportation hearings that could deport Aimdilok-

BANTER AND BELLOW | Union Food Court

Union Food Court caters to all appetites, diets, lacks convenient hours, payment methods

Lovin' it

Layton: There is no better place to get a big, honkin', steamy, country-style breakfast minutes before a test than the Union Food Court.

All praise to the Market Carvery's hot biscuits and gravy, sausage/bacon and eggs deal. It reminds me of my grandma Bertie's breakfast, which fills you up and never lets you down. Ya'll oughta try it.

The Vienna Beef hot dog stand deserves a round of applause, too. Where else can you get baseball-game franks served with a big, blank, goofy grin? They can make it any way you take it, and they offer extra toppings for free, too. Sho' 'nuff.

No matter what kind of diet you're into, the Food Court can cater to it. You can fulfill your daily caloric intake with one trip to Chick-Fil-A (chicken sandwich pioneer) if you like, or, if you prefer, dig into the limitless salad possibilities.

But the best part of the Food Court is watching the infamous high school seniors navigate their way around the court like little lost sheep holding the same orange and purple folders and looking tough with their letter jackets. Yeah, letter jackets are cool, man.

The variety is great, too. I can stroll straight into the ghetto at Burger King, cruise over to Mexico at Taco Bell, and in a flash I'm chopstickin'-it-up at the Manchu Wok.

Don't forget the free water that comes with a cup, too! Wok on.

Question

Union Food Court: friend or foe?

You can e-mail Banter and Bellow columnists Dana Strongin, junior in print journalism, and Layton Ehmke, senior in print journalism, at banter@spub.ksu.edu.

I've seen better

Dana: The Union Food Court doesn't make my mouth water. In fact, it has forced me to go without sustenance on a number of unhappy occasions.

Take a look around. It seems like most students are buying the greasy fare from Taco Bell, Burger King and Chick-fil-A. These foods will not only give me a heart attack – they also make me feel like a walking tub of lard.

My aversion to fast food isn't so much a weight thing as an I-give-a-hoot-about-myself thing. When I started running at the age of 11, I started to think about the food and drinks I put in my mouth. Sure, I have my occasional pizza, but Whoppers are not a pleasant thought.

To counter this, the Food Court offers salads, sandwiches and bagels – but they really aren't that tasty. I had my fill of crusty toasted bagels about a year ago.

My other big beef with the court is convenience.

Earth to aged adults: There are students who eat after 7 p.m. Just check out the Collegian staff making the paper across the street tonight. I know employees cost money, but so do the delivery and frozen foods busy students always eat.

Also, why isn't the student ID card payment system more accessible? The university I used to go to had very gross fried food every night, but at least it was easy to pay. That helped prevent some of the heartburn.

Somebody around here needs to promote using our cards as payment across campus, especially for food. That way, when I buy my French vanilla cappuccino tomorrow morning, I don't have to wait for some doof who doesn't have two bucks to his name.

Thank the food gods for Subway and Campbell's soup. The Food Court has its advantages, the biggest being its proximity to the Collegian newsroom.

But I'll still be brown-baggin' it tomorrow.

Additions, changes increase accessibility

Renovations to Union Forum Hall compliant with ADA

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Renovations to make Forum Hall compliant with the Americans with Disabilities Act are almost complete.

The Union has made a variety of improvements to make Forum Hall more accessible to individuals in wheelchairs, said Bernard Pitts, executive director of the Union.

"Before these renovations, a person with disabilities had access to the forum, but they needed assistance," he said.

Improvements were made to allow easier access to Forum Hall, to create more room for wheelchairs and to make the ticket booth more accessible to wheelchairs.

The last step of renovation, which should be completed in less than two weeks, is remodeling Forum Hall's restrooms.

"In all of these rooms, we increased the size of the doors and made them automatic," Pitts said.

"We also increased the turning room for wheelchairs and are turning all of the appliances into ADA height," Pitts said.

According to section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, which was passed in 1973, no person shall be excluded from an activity because of a disability. The ADA is a more complete form of this, said Gretchen Holden, director of Disability Support Services at K-State.

"The ADA is broader, and it has teeth – you can now sue because of it," Holden said.

One of the improvements made to Forum Hall was the installation of a wheelchair lift to allow disabled people to enter at the top of orchestra seating.

The lift is used instead of building a ramp, which would be next to impossible because of ADA ramp requirements, Holden said.

"If you wanted to put a ramp on those stairs, it would go all the way to the bowling alley," she said.

Forum Hall is used by a variety of student organizations, including Christian Challenge, which met in Forum Hall every Thursday before construction began in June.

The group has been back at Forum Hall since Oct. 1, said Shawn Sherraden, senior in civil engineering, who attends Christian Challenge on a regular basis.

"We were in All Faiths Chapel for the first week and the ballroom on the top floor of the Union after that," Sherraden said.

"Since it was usually in the same place, it didn't really affect us."

As for what is next on the Union's list of improvements, Pitts said Union officials want to make restrooms throughout the Union ADA compliant. The project, which will begin during the winter break, will take a long time.

"Because of the cost, it will have to be funded over several fiscal years," Pitts said. "The funding will be coming from already-established fees."

Iraqi parliament advises Hussein to reject U.N. resolution

By Waiel Faleh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Iraq's parliament recommended Tuesday that President Saddam Hussein reject the new U.N. weapons inspection resolution, but the Iraqi leader's son offered a way out – make Arabs part of the U.N. team.

Odai Saddam Hussein's proposal, which echoes one from the Arab League, didn't impress Washington. The United States insists Iraq accept the U.N. resolution without quibbling in order to avoid war. The final decision rests with Saddam, who must respond to the United Nations by Friday.

"There's nothing in this resolution that is negotiable," Sean McCormack, President Bush's spokesman, said in Washington.

Bush scoffed at the Iraqi parliament's rejection of the U.N. resolution.

"If Saddam Hussein does not comply to the detail of the resolution, we will lead a coalition to disarm him," Bush said Tuesday in Washington.

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said he would be happy to accept Iraq's response to the U.N. resolution anytime before the end of the day Friday – the U.N.-imposed deadline.

"We haven't fixed any precise time, but I think everybody will be satisfied if we got a letter ... by the end of the day on the 15th," Annan told reporters.

Iraqi representatives, who must pledge loyalty to Saddam to earn a place in the 250-seat parliament, voted unanimously Tuesday to recommend rejecting the U.N. resolution.

Parliament Speaker Saadoun Hammadi described the vote as "a message to the United States that the people of Iraq are united behind their leadership, and it also shows that the people of Iraq know that in the U.N. resolution ... there are major allegations which are baseless."

The parliamentary resolution went on to say the "political leadership" should "adopt what it considers appropriate to defend the Iraqi people and Iraq's independence and dignity, and authorizes President Saddam Hussein to adopt what he sees as appropriate, expressing our full support for his wise leadership."

Russia's Interfax news agency quoted Russian Deputy Foreign Minister Yuri Fedotov as calling on Baghdad "to exercise self-control and pragmatism" by accepting U.N. Resolution 1441, which would open the way for the return of weapons inspectors to Iraq.

In the clearest such statement yet from France, Foreign Minister Dominique de Villepin said on France-Inter radio that force would be used against Saddam if he does not cooperate with U.N. weapons inspectors. France had opposed making the recourse to force automatic.

In Washington, a Bush administration official speaking on condition of anonymity said Iraq is stockpiling supplies of antidotes for nerve agents, suggesting that Saddam is trying to protect his armies if he uses those weapons on the battlefield.

Iraq has imported significant quantities of the nerve agent antidotes – atropine and obidoxime chloride – over the last two years, the official said, confirming a report in Tuesday's New York Times.

Some came from Turkey, and while Washington is trying to stop future deliveries of the antidotes, they are not restricted for import into Iraq.

Turkish Health Ministry spokesman Ebubekir Akkaynak told The Associated Press that Iraq had made no such order.

TO THE POINT

Men's basketball needs support, offers diversion

Men's basketball at K-State is celebrating "A Century of Tradition" – but not a lot of students seem excited.

Ticket sales for men's basketball are down this year, which athletic department officials attribute to either tuition increases or confusion in ticket prices.

Regardless, it's time to get out and support the basketball team that has created a long-standing tradition on campus. The athletic department is even offering reduced prices for the eight home games against Big 12 rivals.

Students should take advantage of this offer. It's an exciting form of entertainment, which is something Manhattan doesn't have a lot of. It's an offer that won't be available once students graduate, and – if nothing else – the ticket cost of KU/K-State game is significantly reduced. Usually, ticket costs for that matchup reach prices equivalent to the other Big 12 home games combined.

It's a deal that doesn't come along very often. The associate athletic director made it clear that fans are crucial in carrying on the tradition of a program that has endured since 1923.

As members of the K-State community, we need to support Jim Wooldridge and his 2002-03 Wildcats.

BATTLE OF THE BULGE

People should accept who they are, become happy with how they look

LAYTON EHMKE

If you're not comfortable with the skin you're in, you have choices. You can change yourself or accept what you are.

Granted, not everyone can undergo plastic surgery. Maybe nobody should.

But isn't it god-like to think people have control over what they look like? People should be happy with what is given to them and should make the most of it.

In this society where mainstream media paint a picture of Barbie and Ken, it is difficult not to be judged by that image.

It is possible to be happy and fat. The important thing is that you accept your appearance and your personality.

There are health hazards accompanying the things that make you happy. We all know being a serious booze-hound affects your memory and isn't great for your kidneys or liver. Smoking causes cancer, but if it makes you smile, then have at it.

The truth is, we don't have entire control over what or who we are. There is no gene for obesity or type 2 diabetes. Pre-birth health and childhood contributes to life-long health. We aren't only what our genes make us.

Dr. Peter Nathanielsz, author of "The Prenatal Prescription," explains what happens to the fetus while in a mother's womb. Nathanielsz, director of the Laboratory for Pregnancy and Newborn Research at Cornell University, claims the environment created in the womb affects a person's life, especially in areas of heart disease, obesity, diabetes and mood disorders.

"The possibilities of prenatal programming state that sub-optimal conditions in the womb change the functions of our livers and hearts. For example, if a fetus is short of oxygen, it grows small internal organs. Those underdeveloped organs like the liver and pancreas have been programmed to deal with less nutrition in the outside world. It is the synthesis of how the environment affects genes," Nathanielsz writes.

In developed countries, unbalanced diets and smoking can cause poor fetal development. In a large and underprivileged society, lacking nutrition is to blame.

The Falasha, Jews born in Ethiopia and airlifted to Israel in the mid 1980s, have the highest incidents of obesity in the world. This is a population that was moved from Ethiopia, where food is limited, to Israel, where there is more food. The individuals absolutely ballooned in size. It was not their fault – it just happened.

Underprivileged, undernourished babies are fat because they have prepared for an underprivileged outside world. There is no shortage of food in this country. The result is a calorie shock treatment where the baby latches on to whatever nutrients are presented. Small livers cannot handle cholesterol, because they have prepared for a different world.

But outside the womb, there are TV, video games and fast-food hot spots on every corner, which is a lethal combination.

Sure, getting enough exercise and good nutrition does a body good, but damn, I really could go for a few chili dogs instead.

Americans need to be educated about fatal consequences of obesity

SUSAN POWELL

An epidemic is sweeping the nation. It is more prevalent than small pox, tuberculosis or any other illness profiled on the nightly news. It is a gradual malignity, growing strength with each gluttonous bite.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, an estimated 26 percent of women and 20 percent of men in America are obese. This increase is two times more than reported in the 1970s.

Obesity in not to be confused with simple weight gain. According to the Body Mass Index (BMI), a calculation of fatty tissue in relation to lean tissue, a BMI of 25 to 29.9 shows one to be overweight. A BMI of 30 or higher denotes obesity. You can calculate your BMI at www.cdc.gov.

We have our share of obesity here in the heartland, as roughly 20 percent of Kansans are seriously overweight. So, why should we care about the extra pounds?

Obesity can be fatal. It contributes to heart disease, the No. 1 killer of both men and women in America, according to the National Cardiovascular Research Initiative's Web site, www.ncri.org.

Other common health consequences are high blood pressure and cholesterol, Type 2 diabetes, stroke, gallstones, osteoarthritis, sleep apnea and respiratory problems. Psychological disorders such as depression, eating disorders and low self esteem might also result.

It's logical to most Americans that excess fatty tissue is a problem. However, this problem has gained such momentum in the last few decades, many Americans seem puzzled as to how this health issue evolved into a health crisis.

To blame genetics for this outburst of obesity would not account for the rapid national weight gain. An obvious explanation of the weight gain is that we eat more and exercise less.

For many Americans, the amount of food we eat hasn't changed, but the quality has. Many prepackaged foods, fast-food combo meals and soft drinks are culprits, and convenience often replaces quality.

It's no surprise that about 13 percent of children and adolescents are now severely overweight.

Labels tend to be misleading as well. Bright packages display promises of low-fat or non-fat while containing foods with an equal amount of calories as the "fatty" foods they replace.

This leads to the second and far less popular practice: exercise. The Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System reported that more than 26 percent of adults participated in no leisure-time physical activity, states www.cdc.gov.

It's true eating healthily and exercising is a huge commitment, but you are committing yourself to a healthier, longer life.

Get educated. Read labels. Fat can be good for you, so don't avoid it just to consume as many calories as a non-fat food. Encourage others by being an example in athleticism yourself.

Change won't happen overnight. It shouldn't, since dramatic weight gain and loss is harmful to your body. Fight the flab by changing your own attitude toward obesity.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

Today's Fourum is brought to you by the letter "p" and the number "4."

What's livin' if you don't pull your pants down once in a while and slide on the ice?

Move over, Batman. All you need to solve a physics problem is Robin.

There is a dangerous epidemic of desperate, post-pubescent behavior running rampant through sixth-floor Moore.

For Micah Hawkinson: Your body is a wonderland.

To the girl I puked on at the football game: I'm sorry. I'll buy you a hot dog at the next game.

Yeah, they call me D-Day, and I'm a professional pole-polisher.

I was just calling to verify how much trash is too much trash, because I'm pretty sure my neighbors have a stockpile of trash.

Only users lose drugs.

Word to the wise: That dirty, little rumor is true.

The days of graduating in less than five years are over. With the faculty layoffs, the administrators are projecting at least six years.

You guys need to clean out your Fourum more often.

A plan is just a list of things that don't happen.

To the person who wrote "Happy Tuesday" all over campus: Thank you, and I hope you have a happy Wednesday.

I love the way my British Environmental Geography I lab teacher says "precipitation." Why don't you give me a shout?

You know your roommate's pathetic when she hides the toilet paper in her bedroom because she doesn't want to share it with you.

With all our education cuts, why do we still have leaf blowers?

I hope the next boy you kiss has something terribly contagious on his lips.

To the guy who let me feel his feather plume this weekend: See you Saturday.

In this country, face it, we raise children to violent entertainment — tales of tossing witches in ovens and hacking up talking wolves. If you can't tell the difference between entertainment and reality by the time you're old enough to buy a rap record, you're in deep trouble no matter what you watch or listen to. Angel, think it over.

A rosary front and center? We're K-State, not Notre Dame.

Friends are the bacon bits on the salad of life.

Is it against K-State policy to sleep with your T.A. from last semester?

Let me get this straight: There's no cussing allowed in the Fourum, but racial slurs are OK?

To the girls at the end of the hall: If you're going to play your music that loud, will you please play something other than Teenage Dirtbag?

I just now realized I'm in love with my best friend. Two problems: One, he lives four and a half hours away. Two, he's in love with a close friend of mine. But he always told me he'd want to date me if he wasn't with her. How depressing.

The north end zone hot dog girls suck. I got the ketchup and relish. Where's the hot dog?

I believe that a ban on smoking on all university property would be a great benefit to students. Many universities on the East and West coasts have already adopted similar policies.

I know where the ball of twine is. That's where my parents grew up.

I am a banana. Do I dare to eat a peach?

Cubs win, Cubs win!

School sucks. Get out now.

Is it right for one of your friend's friends to kidnap you while you are sleeping?

I'm sure glad they put the chem test and lab quiz on the same night — that way we don't have to waste two Monday nights failing them both.

I am the queen of France.

Strong Complex, Smurthwaite and Smith all got screwed in the float competition last Friday night.

Thank you to the people who chalked "Happy Tuesday." I really had a happy Tuesday.

The Simpsons' quote of the week: "That's it, this family has stood in my way long enough. I am going to clown college."

We need to start enforcing a weight limit on the people who crowd surf at the football games.

No matter what anyone says, it's not cool to bring strippers to a homecoming party.

I'm tired of all the questions and speculations. Yes, I am having Eminem's baby.

The Collegian should make a best-of-the-Fourum book. I would buy it.

I saved my friend from being hit by a K-State registered vehicle, and all he had to say was, 'Thanks for costing me the free tuition.' Where's the love?

Theft, unsupportive fans disappoint KSU alumnus

Editor,

Congratulations to the Cats for a powerful message on Saturday in their victory over the Cyclones.

On a less happy note, I was very disappointed to hear a group in the area of the K-State band yelling, "Looks like KU!" Secondly – and this is a first for me – we had a large, folding double-tailgate chair, along with four magnetic Powercats, stolen from our parking spot on the east side. I assume someone will enjoy sitting in his apartment in front of his television in this double-wide tailgate chair, but it's an ugly side of college life I'm disappointed to see at K-State.

We're going to miss our chair at the Nebraska tailgate, but even more, we'll miss that sense of security we've always known in our the parking lot.

Students have chance to plan Relay for Life

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students will soon have the opportunity to lead the fight against cancer.

The American Cancer Society will have an informational meeting at 5:30 p.m. Thursday in Union 205, inviting students to help plan the second annual K-State Relay for Life. The event, sponsored by the American Cancer Society and Golden Key National Honour Society, raises money for cancer research and is scheduled for spring 2003.

Michele Moorman, senior in life sciences and co-chair of the event, said students who are interested and willing to donate their time should join the planning committee.

"Students should be willing to donate one to two hours each week, getting things ready and calling people," Moorman said.

"We'll probably start off having meetings once every couple weeks, but next semester we may have them as often as once a week. It depends on how many people we have on the committee and how soon we can get things done."

Jill Oswalt, senior in life sciences and co-chair, helped with recruiting and luminaries last year.

Oswalt said anyone is welcome to attend the meeting.

"You can play as big or as small a part of this as you want," she said. "We need as many people as we can, whether you're planning the entertainment for the night or helping with the little things."

Moorman said the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life lets students celebrate survivors, remember victims and do something about cancer.

"We had a real positive reaction to it last year," she said.

"A lot of people know someone who has been affected by cancer. Last year was the first year we had the event.

"We had 31 teams show up, about 316 people, and raised about $25,000 to $30,000."

In its 17-year history, Relay for Life has spread to seven other countries and more than 3,000 communities nationwide.

During the overnight event, teams of 10-12 people meet at 6 p.m., taking turns walking until 6 a.m. Moorman said team members raise money by asking for donations or selling luminaries to be lit at the event.

"Teams can raise money either way, but we shoot for a goal of $100 per person," Moorman said.

"The teams show up, we collect the money and pitch campsites. There is entertainment set up and a luminary ceremony begins, usually around 10 p.m."

Kim Withroder, senior in secondary education and president of Golden Key, said Relay for Life is a great opportunity to give back to the community.

"I lost a couple members of my family to cancer, so for me, it was very worthwhile to see so many college students working to raise money to find a cure," she said.

Audiotaped message threatens U.S. allies

By Robert Reid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In an audiotaped message aired across the Arab world Tuesday, a voice purported to be that of Osama bin Laden praised terrorist strikes in Bali and Moscow in a message that clearly warned U.S. allies against following the United States in the war on terror.

In Washington, a U.S. official said the voice sounds like Osama bin Laden, as the Bush administration tried to authenticate what would be the first hard evidence in a year that the al-Qaeda leader was still alive.

In the statement, the speaker on the tape broadcast on Al-Jazeera television referred to recent attacks, including the Oct. 12 Bali bombings "that killed the British and Australians," the killing last month of a Marine in Kuwait, the bombing of a French oil tanker last month off Yemen and "Moscow's latest operation," – a hostage-taking by Chechen rebels.

Speaking in a literary style of Arabic favored by bin Laden, the speaker said the attacks were "undertaken by sons who are zealous in the defense of their religion," and they were "only a reaction in response to what Bush, the pharaoh of the age, is doing by killing our sons in Iraq and what America's ally Israel is doing, bombarding houses with women and old people and children inside with American planes."

"Our people in Palestine are being killed, are being subjected to the worst kind of suffering for almost a century now," the speaker said.

Men's basketball season-ticket sales down; Big 12 pack, free parking among promotions to draw spectators

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Got Tickets?

Students can purchase Big 12 packs at the ticket office in Bramlage Coliseum or by calling (800) 221-CATS.

The athletic department has come up with ways to increase season-ticket package sales for the men's basketball program.

Sales are down by about 1,600 season-tickets this year, said Bob Howell, ticket manager at Bramlage Coliseum.

To help increase sales, the athletic marketing and promotions department, a division of the Department of Intercollegiate, is offering students a Big 12 pack and free parking at men's home games.

The Big 12 pack allows students to purchase the tickets for the eight home conference games for $48.

Normally, Big 12 Conference tickets are $15 each, except for K-State's game with the University of Kansas, for which tickets cost $30, said Brian Morris, senior in marketing and intern at the athletic marketing and promotions department.

Free parking will be offered to all Big 12 pack and season ticket holders, Morris said.

Laura Tietjen, associate athletic director, said K-State didn't sell as many combination football and basketball season ticket packages as they did last year.

She said this could be due to the tuition increase or because students thought there was an increase in ticket prices.

However, Tietjen said the price per ticket wasn't increased – there were simply more home games this year than last year.

Tietjen said the athletic department goes through a detailed marketing process for each athletic discipline every year.

"We wanted to make men's basketball easily accessible to students," she said. "The promotions will continue to build the season-ticket base for men's basketball. We're always looking to continue to encourage more students to come."

Morris said the athletic department is trying to incorporate the tradition of K-State basketball into the 2002-03 season and also make Bramlage an intimidating place for other teams to play.

"To get the tradition back, we need student support, which would increase students in the stands," he said.

Morris said the slogan for men's basketball this season, "A Century of Tradition," celebrates the 100th year of K-State men's basketball.

The first home men's basketball game against another Big 12 team is Jan. 11 at 7 p.m. The Wildcats will take on Texas Tech.

Tietjen encouraged students to support the men's program all season.

"We have a great men's schedule this year," she said. "Students create an environment at the games that is a great college atmosphere."

Cats' football chances not promising

Buds, beer and billiards an adequate distraction for frustrated columnist

BEN FEHR

It's crunch time in the Big 12 north.

Colorado escaped Missouri and is firmly in the driver's seat now.

With only a home game against Iowa State and a contest against the Huskers in Lincoln remaining, Colorado has to win only one more game to claim a spot in the title game.

As an added bonus, the Buffaloes get a weakened Iowa State team that K-State whipped soundly and sent to bed without supper.

Colorado likely will be playing a similarly depleted Nebraska after the Cats claim their third –straight win over the Huskers in Manhattan on Saturday.

It flat doesn't look good at this point.

But enough about football. It's depressing to think about Oklahoma and Colorado battling it out for the Big 12 while Texas has a chance at a BCS bowl.

So let's talk about another great game that takes place on every big-time college campus in America – pool.

Pool? Have I gone loopy? How do you go from discussing Big 12 football and the BCS picture to billiards? Well, anybody who plays pool with any frequency knows it's a great time.

There's little that can top a night out having brews with your buds and shooting a little stick.

Why is it a great game? Because of the competition you can score on any given night. I'm not going to lie to you, I've been around the tables in Manhattan a time or two, and there are some guys out there who take their pool game with them when they go out.

Now, as anybody who plays the game will tell you, there are house rules that go with a given table at a given place.

But I'd like to take this opportunity to identify what I consider to be some set-in-stone pool rules that everybody should take to heart when they work the tables in my town.

First, don't stack quarters. You all know what I'm talking about. This is when somebody reserves two or three consecutive quarter slots when there are people waiting to play. That way, they can stay on the table win or lose.

It's fascism at its worst, and if you're any good, you won't need to do it anyway. Play your game, and if that's the way it has to go, take your lumps and get out of the way.

Second, play partner pool. There are a limited number of good quarters tables in Manhattan, and if you have a partner, four people are playing instead of two.

It's good economics. And it's more exciting when you have someone to share in the glory of victory or pass the blame off on.

Third, let's leave the screw-together cues at home. If you play in a league that meets in the Union or at Fast Eddie's every night of the week, fine. Every good player will tell you that you need to have your own stick – I have one, too.

But the ESPN tour doesn't scout talent at Rusty's and O'Malley's, so don't bring them into bars.

Fourth, play an open table after the break. For lay persons, this means that after you break the balls out you have to make a ball to claim solids or stripes. This just shows you are willing to win or lose a game by shooting instead of by a lucky break.

Fifth, for the love of God, don't play the eight ball neutral. You can't use the eight ball to make combination shots when you're in a jam.

According to the rules laid down by the governing body of billiards, the Billiard Congress of America, it is a foul to directly strike the eight with the cue unless all of your colored balls are pocketed.

In organized pool, this foul gives the opponent ball-in-hand, or, the opportunity to place the cue ball wherever he or she pleases. In bar pool, this foul is going to get people with hard wooden sticks in their hands angry at you.

Lastly, and most importantly, in what has to be the cardinal sin in pool for fun or money, never, ever, under any circumstances, play a wimpy safety shot.

Even if you're in trouble with the game on the line, suck it up and take a legitimate crack at pocketing something that's going to further your cause.

There is little else that will excite the gag reflex so readily as some joker giving the cue ball a little tap-tappy to screw his opponent out of a good shot. Play the game like you've got a spine.

And that's about all I've got to say on the subject of – hands down – one of the greatest games in sports history.

In parting, let's remember to wish a plague of locusts visits the Colorado sideline as the Cats rain fiery hell upon the Huskers this weekend.

And let's also remember chalk is free, beer is cheap and chicks dig bank shots on the eight.

Cats to play final exhibition game

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's men's basketball team will look to move forward tonight when the team plays its second and final exhibition game.

The Cats will face off against Athletes First, an all-star team that includes three former Big 12 players – Joe Adkins (Oklahoma State, 1999-00), Brodney Kennard (Texas Tech, 1999-00) and Eric Martin (Oklahoma).

The Cats came up short against a sharp-shooting EA Sports All-Star squad, 91-81, in their first preseason outing.

However, K-State coach Jim Wooldridge said, Athletes First will present some different challenges, and his team will need new solutions.

"We are still trying to get better, and we'll be getting the opportunity to play against different players in a different format," he said. "They will play different than the first team. This team plays a lot in transition. They play off the dribble a lot more and off the post a little more than the other team did."

It is the experience of playing off the post that Wooldridge said the team will covet the most, though. Athletes First should provide more of a challenge for the Cats than they encountered against EA Sports, he said.

In the first exhibition, K-State dominated inside.

The Cats scored 50 points in the paint compared to EA Sports' 32. The Cats also led in rebounding 41-34.

The soft underbelly of EA Sports also allowed K-State freshman Marques Hayden to make his presence known. He led all players with 10 rebounds and dropped in eight points as well.

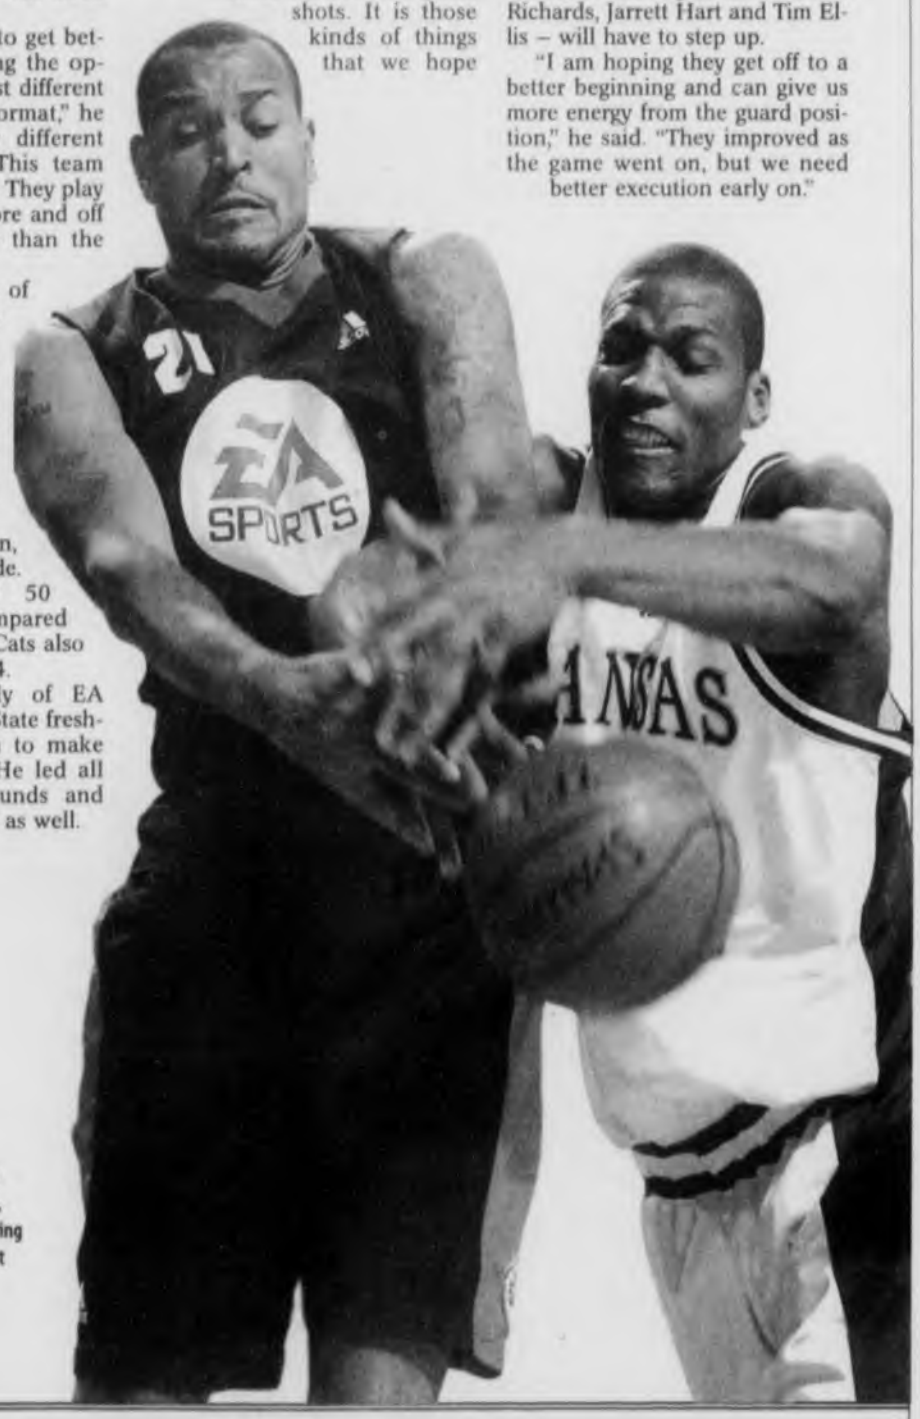
K-State vs. Athletes First (Exhibition)
When: 7 tonight
Where: Bramlage Coliseum (13,340)

But the Cats' success underneath wasn't enough to make up for a weak perimeter defense. EA Sports shot more than 50 percent and scored 42 points from 3-point range.

Stopping outside threats received top billing in practice this week, Wooldridge said. He said the Cats have to learn to handle a hot-shooting team now.

"We have worked hard defensively this week," he said. "We were a step slow getting at shooters and gave up some second shots that led to 3-point shots. It is those kinds of things that we hope we will do better at."

One thing Wooldridge said he would like to see is a faster start. Against EA Sports, the team came out flat early and spent the entire game trying to recover. With 6:37 left in the first half, the Cats were down 22 points.



They closed to 14 points by halftime and came as close as four points in the second half but never held the lead.

For four Cats, the EA Sports game was their first with K-State. Wooldridge said he hopes the team fares better Wednesday, especially now that the first-game butterflies might be worked out.

"We got off to a slow start," he said.

To solve that, Wooldridge said his three new guards – Frank Richards, Jarrett Hart and Tim Ellis – will have to step up.

"I am hoping they get off to a better beginning and can give us more energy from the guard position," he said. "They improved as the game went on, but we need better execution early on."

Issac Harmon, forward for the EA Sports All-Stars, and Pervis Pasco, forward, battle for a rebound during the Nov. 6 game. The Wildcats lost 91-81.

Tennis goes winless on final day

K-State stumbles to weak finish at Arizona State tournament

By Tom Fontana
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the final day of the Arizona State/Thunderbirds Collegiate Invitational, the K-State tennis team struggled, losing all four of its matches.

Even though the team didn't finish the tournament strongly, Coach Steve Bietau said he wasn't discouraged with the performance.

"I think it would have been nice to win somewhere in the end to kind of cap that off," he said. "I think that our team competed at what was definitely not our best but at a decent level and showing some improvements over our own doubles tournament a week ago."

On the first day of the tournament, though, the team pulled off a pair of upsets in doubles.

Junior Hayley McIver and sophomore Andrea Cooper knocked off the No. 9 Duke tandem of Hillary Adams and Katie Blaszk, 9-8.

Also pulling an upset on the first day was the doubles team of Petra Sedlmajerova and freshman Jessica Simosa, who beat No. 38 Beverly Dawson and Irina Tereschenko of Texas Tech.

On the singles side, things didn't go as well for the Cats as four of the five lost their first round match of the main draw.

Simosa lost her first round singles match but moved on to the semifinals with a 6-1, 4-6, 7-5 victory over Tara Browning of Texas Tech in a first round consolation match.

Bietau said Simosa's play was up and down throughout the tournament, and he hopes to see some more consistency out of the freshman when play resumes in January.

"She had two matches in which I was pretty happy with the way she played," Bietau said.

"She had one match in particular where it seemed to all go out the window, and that was the Texas Tech match. And again, the scores can be a little bit misleading.

"The Texas Tech match looks like it was a close match and she pulled it out, but the quality of play was a little low there," he said.

Sedlmajerova got K-State's only singles win of the main draw, beating Brooke Borisoff of California 6-7, 6-2, 6-3. But she would then bow out in the second round of the main draw to Pauline Janus of UNLV, 6-1, 6-0.

"I wasn't really concerned about the number of losses in the singles," Bietau said. "I was more concerned with our level of play and our ability to solve some problems once we got into some of these tough matches."

In the consolation round, Simosa, Cooper and Maria Rosenberg all advanced to the quarterfinals on Saturday, but only Simosa and Rosenberg could advance to the semifinal round.

Simosa, McIver and Rosenberg all lost consolation matches on Sunday and Cooper lost in an extra match played on the final day.

The tennis team resumes play Jan. 24 when it plays host to Brigham Young.

MLB | Tejada wins AL MVP award

Miguel Tejada won his first American League Most Valuable Player award Tuesday, easily beating Alex Rodriguez in a vote that valued a winning season over superior statistics.

The shortstop for the AL West champion Oakland Athletics received 21 first-place votes, six second-place votes and one third for 356 points from a panel of the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Rodriguez, the shortstop for the last-place Texas Rangers, got five firsts, seven seconds, 11 thirds, four fourths and a sixth for 254 points.

New York Yankees second baseman Alfonso Soriano got the remaining two first-place votes and was third with 234 points.

Anaheim outfielder Garret Anderson (184) and Yankees first baseman Jason Giambi (162), the winner two years ago, when he played for the A's, were fourth and fifth respectively.

MLB | Baker meets with Cubs

Dusty Baker's agent began preliminary contract talks Tuesday with the Chicago Cubs, hoping to reach a deal and bring the three-time National League Manager of the Year to Chicago.

Baker met for 3 1/2 hours Monday with Andy MacPhail and Jim Hendry before Jeff Moorad joined them for dinner.

Most of the day was spent talking baseball, and Baker impressed his potential bosses with his knowledge and his questions about the team.

Baker became available when the Giants announced last week he wouldn't return after a decade as manager. The decision came less than two weeks after San Francisco lost to Anaheim in Game seven of the World Series.

Tennis | Clijsters wins over Williams

By beating Serena Williams to win the WTA Championships, Kim Clijsters slightly loosened the stranglehold Serena and older sister Venus have on women's tennis.

Clijsters lost her five previous matches against Serena but won 7-5, 6-3 Monday night in the season-ending $3-million tournament.

The 19-year-old Belgian became the first player since Martina Hingis in the 2001 Australian Open to beat both Williams sisters in the same tournament and only the fourth ever. Clijsters led 5-0 in the first set when Venus quit their semifinal because of a leg injury.

NCAA | Knight suing Indiana

Bobby Knight is suing Indiana University about his firing after weeks of negotiations between his attorneys and the school collapsed.

The lawsuit was filed in the Monroe County Circuit Court on Friday. Under state law, the former Hoosiers coach had until Tuesday to take legal action.

Knight was fired Sept. 10, 2000, by university president Myles Brand and gave Indiana notice in early 2001 that he might sue for wrongful dismissal.

In his lawsuit, Knight claimed losses in excess of $2 million and contended he was terminated without cause, without a proper meeting of university trustees and without a chance to defend himself.

The school denied the accusations.

NBA | Grizzlies coach resigns

Sidney Lowe resigned Tuesday as coach of the Memphis Grizzlies, the only winless team in the NBA this season.

Fred Jones, a local minority owner of the team, said the Grizzlies informed him of Lowe's resignation about noon Tuesday.

Lowe's resignation came the day after the Grizzlies lost their eighth game, playing at home against the Golden State Warriors.

Grizzlies management refused comment but was expected to hold a news conference later in the day.

Lowe was in his third season with the Grizzlies, who have never had a winning season since the team began playing in 1995. The team moved to Memphis last year from Vancouver.

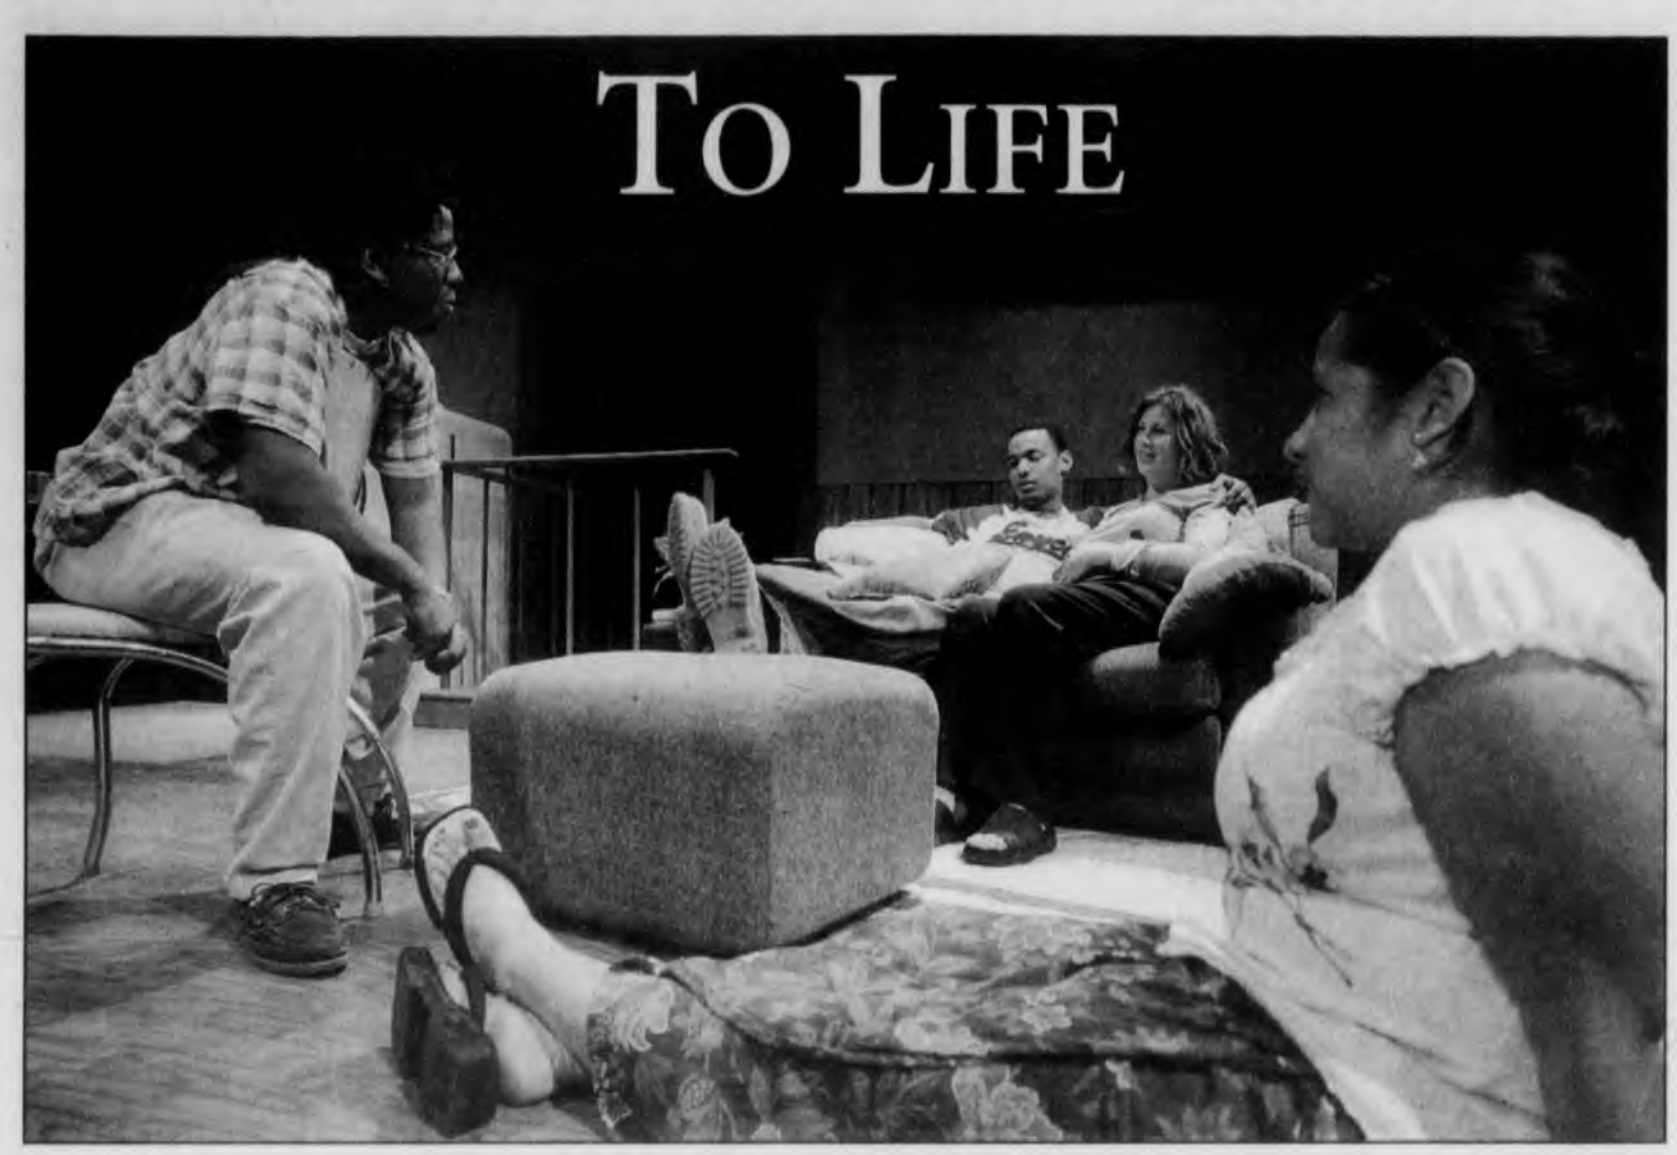
NCAA | Irish wanted by BCS officials

Notre Dame's turnaround season under first-year coach Tyrone Willingham has bowl executives excited.

Even after a loss to Boston College and a poor showing against Navy, Bowl Championship Series officials say the ninth-ranked Fighting Irish remain highly desirable.



"I think either a 10-2 or an 11-1 Notre Dame team is going to be attractive for some BCS bowl," said Mitch Dorger, chief executive officer of the Tournament of Roses, which puts on the Rose Bowl.

"If they lose to Rutgers, they're not that attractive. But I don't think they hurt themselves too bad if they lose to USC."

If the Irish (9-1) beat Rutgers (1-8) and No. 8 Southern California (7-2) they are a virtual lock for a BCS berth.

Notre Dame is ranked No. 7 in the BCS standings, less than a half-point behind Georgia. A clause in the BCS rules guarantees the Irish an at-large berth if they finish in the top six.

BRINGING THE STAGE TO LIFE

Nathan Jackson, senior in theater; Keenan Ramos, sophomore in theater; Aubrey Kershner, graduate student in theater; and Candace Feldman, freshman in theater, perform "The Mancherios." The play will be presented in the Purple Masque Theatre at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday with a 2 p.m. matinee Saturday.

Students put personal experiences into play

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nathan Jackson understandably feels close to his script for "The Mancherios," the Ebony Theatre production opening Thursday.

Not only is Jackson, senior in theater, the playwright and lead character, Malcolm, but the themes and events in the fictional play have some autobiographical ties to his life.

"A lot of the situations are real, but it didn't take place like in the play," he said. "The relationships are probably more real. But in the story, if you take my life, that isn't necessarily how it went down at all.

"Some of the little details are taken from my life to help make the story more believable, but my mother never died, and I never had to make the decision that Malcolm has to make."

Jackson grew up in the same Kansas City, Kan., neighborhood where the play takes place. In the neighborhood around Quindaro Avenue, Malcolm lives with his sick father and his brother, Enyce (Keenan Ramos, sophomore in theater).

The two are left to take care of their father, who has multiple sclerosis, after their mother dies of cancer.

Enyce feels tied to the neighborhood with a pregnant girlfriend, Tammy (Aubrey Kershner, graduate student in theatre), while Malcolm has been accepted to Howard University in Washington, D.C., with a scholarship that will cover his tuition.

Malcolm feels forced to choose either his family or his future and is afraid of tearing his family apart.

"Mainly, I want people to see the importance of family," Jackson said.

"Out of all the relationships we have in life, that's the first one you have. And, for most people, that's the longest and tightest relationship.

"I think it's a shame when people let petty little things get in the way of that relationship."

The familial ties of the play carry over to the cast in an extended way. Jackson and Ramos went to high school together and assisted the other actors in character study, Jackson said. The two moved to Manhattan with another high school friend and Ebony Theatre regular Diontey Moore, who recently played Vittorio Vidale in "Sweet Charity."

Director Tiffany Lee, senior in theater and business, has worked with Ebony productions several times, directing "A Crying Shame" last spring.

Lee said the closeness of the cast and crew has helped the play seem more realistic.

"It made it easier," she said. "A play cannot communicate to an audience unless everyone is together. We have a cohesive production that communicates to the audience, and that makes it a great play instead of a good play."

The play began as a scene Jackson wrote for a class as a freshman at K-State, in which a young man is told by his dying father to go to school and not worry about him. Jackson said he began working on the full script again nearly a year ago, fleshing out the characters.

"Once you get a good character, then the character writes itself," he said.

"Once I was able to lay all that down, the action had no choice but to go a certain way, and by the third scene, everything just flowed."

"The Mancherios" will be entered in the American Collegiate Theatre Festival as well as in the National Black Theatre Festival, two prominent adjudicated theater competitions. Jackson said he has received varying degrees of enthusiasm for the script from faculty, but he has to keep things in perspective.

"I've gotten good feedback, but maybe I'm just not sure enough with my writing yet since this is my first play," he said. "Because when someone tells you, 'You did good, Jackson,' there's levels of good."

The dialogue plays a key role for Jackson because he wanted to tell a good story while addressing social issues in the process, he said.

In one scene, Malcolm and his brother debate the quality of their degenerating, crime-ridden neighborhood. In another, Enyce and his girlfriend discuss the race of their baby-to-be, tackling views on biracial children.

One memorable catch in the play is that every time Enyce uses the self-deprecating "n" word, his girlfriend makes him say "I love black people" five times.

"When Keenan, Diontey and I moved here, we had a problem with saying it, so we tried doing that for a while, but it didn't work too well," Jackson said.

Above all else, Jackson said he just hopes people see the importance of the final message about the connections within a family.

"That bond is so tight that even if you're miles away, you realize you're still family," he said. "Nothing can break that bond but yourself."

he was at code-blue status, which means he was probably having difficulty breathing and was unresponsive to emergency treatment, Grubbs said.

Police arrested Lewis because they had probable cause that he was involved with intimidating McCracken to drink shots of alcohol, Grubbs said.

The case is still under investigation, but Grubbs said no obvious connection between McCracken and Lewis was apparent.

Grubbs said there may be additional misdemeanor arrests for furnishing alcohol to a minor and perhaps also endangering a child.

He said these charges, if made, will likely be through the Riley County Attorney's Office.

The Shawnee County Coroner's Office performed an autopsy during the weekend, but would not release the results.

Grubbs said final autopsy results, including a toxicology report, will not be available for another two to three weeks.

RALLY | Students picket against state budget cuts

dence before returning to the library entrance.

The library was chosen for the rally as a symbolic site after students expressed concerns about hours being reduced because of funding shortfalls earlier this fall.

"I really don't think Kansas citizens have a clue what the Legislature is doing," Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said. "I think we've got to get more awareness of the problem."

After an hour of picketing, students were asked to write letters to their legislators and Governor-elect Kathleen Sebelius requesting funding.

Amberly Brown, clad in her pajamas, was prepared to spend the night to give her messages to legislators.

"Fund the college, support the future," Brown, freshman in biology, said. "I would like to be able to go to the library at late hours."

Amy Music, senior in family life and community services, said she attended the rally after seeing what effect the budget cuts were having on her major's classes.

"We have classes unavailable," Music said. "If they are full and you don't have enough credit hours, you can't get into them."

Student Body President Zac Cook said students will see the effects of the cuts even more as classes are dropped from the line schedule.

"There will still be people who will not know the dire situation we are in until they walk into an empty classroom," Cook said. "It's something we need to be proactive about."

For David Smith, sophomore in general business, the affordability of higher education for all students is at stake.

"Some students can't even come to school because they don't have the money," he said. "Increasing the price to attend is disallowing students to come to school."

Legislators attending the event had a message for students as well. Senate Majority Leader Lana Oleen said she will work to restore funding, although cuts are unavoidable.

"It is important to know that no one anticipated our economy would go as far south as it did," Oleen said. "Our hope is to put together a package to get us through the next year or two."

Also attending were Roger Reitz, 67th district representative, and Sydney Carlin, 66th district representative.

Oleen said there are two options when it comes to the mid-year cuts.

The governor and the governor-elect will make the decision before January absent the Legislature, Oleen said.

"If they decide not to take action, that will be one of the first issues we take on in January," she said. "I think it's easier for two people to make the decision than 165."

O'Hara said more events will be needed in the future, but budget cuts are imminent.

"The severity is deep," he said. " It's only going to get worse."

"The defendant has been in jail over 30 days and given time served. We will not object to probation so that the INS can begin deportation – they can take possession of him immediately," Peterson said.

The judge set congruent sentences of 12 months for sexual battery and six months for lewd and lascivious behavior as well as a $500 fine and the court costs.

The judge also applied immediate probation for a period of 12 months, stating that all terms of probation will apply, unless Aimdilokwong is deported.

If he is deported, he will be released from probation.

Aimdilokwong has been arrested several times in connection to sexual crimes.

He was arrested recently for an incident in City Park, and he also was arrested in April at the K-State Student Union.

Peterson had also been reviewing Aimdilokwong's possible connection to as many as five other sexual assault cases, including an alleged assault at the Manhattan Public Library.

Awareness, proper care important factors in maintaining healthy toes, feet

By Kecia Seyb
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Laura Parkhurst's feet are black and blue and covered in blisters. She has a bunion that sometimes is painful.

But she's OK with her achy feet.

"I don't try to cover them up. I don't think they're absolutely disgusting," Parkhurst, senior in dance, said. "They're bruised and have blisters all over them, but I'm a dancer – I'm not shy about my feet."

Parkhurst is perhaps on her feet – or rather, her toes – more than the average person. But feet should matter to most people, experts say.

With the nation's pace of living increasing, more Americans are on their feet for longer periods of time than ever before, podiatrists for www.foot.com say.

This, experts say, makes it more important to keep your feet healthy. Parkhurst is just one of many who may experience serious foot problems in her lifetime – three out of four Americans do, according to www.foot.com.

Even though people inherit their foot types, most people aren't born with foot ailments. Instead, it's a lack of awareness of proper care – such as wearing ill-fitting shoes – that brings on the problems, said Brian Ware, doctor of podiatric medicine at Flint Hills Podiatry, P.A.

"Shoe gear is important at any age, college age or even before that – 13 and beyond," Ware said. "If you're wearing bad shoes, it'll start catching up to you. Dress flats are probably not good. Loafer-type shoes are terrible."

Trade Home Shoes manager Scott Ehmke said although many college students seem to prefer tennis shoes for walking across campus, there's another popular college shoe that may not be healthy for feet – flip-flops.

"It's just flat – there's no arch support there. There's nothing to actually hold your foot besides the strap, so that's not a shoe that's recommended," Ehmke said.

Shoes that are podiatrist recommended include New Balance, Reebok and Birkenstocks. But people must decide which particular shoe works for them, Ehmke said.

Parkhurst said she tries to wear tennis shoes as often as she can.

"It's actually really bad for my feet if I wear anything that's higher than two inches," she said. "I do wear high heels sometimes, but I try to wear tennis shoes or something that is flat or has some support."

For Parkhurst's bunion, a protruding bone on the inside of the foot around the big toe joint, she consulted a podiatrist. Podiatrists surgically remove some bunions. But Parkhurst has learned to live with the aches, which are especially apparent after doing pointe.

"Your toes are scrunched into this little area," Parkhurst said. "Your feet kind of get used to it after awhile. They kind of build up calluses and blisters."

Besides calluses, blisters and bunions, podiatrists also see warts, ingrown toenails, hammer toes, athlete's foot, corns, heel pain, gout and sweaty feet as well as other feet and toe problems.

"It's a pretty gross profession, actually, thinking about it," said Ware, who hated feet while growing up. "I've seen everything. Plus, I've got sinus problems, so I can't smell very well, so I very rarely find anything that grosses me out."

Still, others may feel grossed out by their own feet or others, said Becki Hardwick, nail technician at Salon Essentials who does foot massages. But she said people should take care of their feet because they sometimes dictate a person's well-being.

"They're very important. Generally how you feel is regulated by your feet," she said. "If they're hot, you're hot. If they're cold, you're cold. If your feet hurt, you just don't feel good.

"The better you take care of your feet, it affects how you feel."

They're feet – for some, a beautiful part of the body, and for others, just extensions of the legs that are pretty useful. And whether they're sweaty, large or covered in plantar warts and bunions, feet get most people through each day.

They allow Parkhurst to enjoy her passion.

"Without them, I wouldn't be able to dance," she said.

Footnotes

- The foot contains 26 bones, 33 joints, 107 ligaments and 19 muscles.
- One-fourth of all the bones in the human body are in your feet. When these bones are out of alignment, so is the rest of the body.
- Women have about four times as many foot problems as men. High heels are partly to blame.
- Walking is the best exercise for your feet. It also contributes to your general health by improving circulation, contributing to weight control and promoting all-around well-being.
- Your feet mirror your general health. Conditions such as arthritis, diabetes, nerve and circulatory disorders can show their initial symptoms in the feet. So foot ailments can be your first sign of more serious medical problems.
- There are 250,000 sweat glands in a pair of feet. Sweat glands in the feet excrete as much as half-pint of moisture per day.
- Walking barefoot can cause plantar warts. The virus enters through a cut.
- The two feet may be different sizes. Buy shoes for the larger one.
- About 5 percent of Americans have toenail problems in a given year.
- The average person takes 8,000 to 10,000 steps a day, which adds up to about 115,000 miles during a lifetime. That's enough to go around the earth's circumference four times.
- There are more Web sties on the Internet having to do with foot fetishes than with foot health.

Tips for healthy feet

- Wash your feet every day in warm, soapy water (don't soak them, as this might destroy the natural oils) and dry thoroughly, especially between the toes.
- If your skin is dry, apply moisturizing cream all over the foot, except for between the toes.
- Lightly apply a foot powder.
- Remove hard skin gently with a pumice stone, but not if it is over a bony area or joint. If this is the case, or if the hard skin is painful, consult your state registered chiropodist/podiatrist.
- Trim your toenails regularly, using proper nail clippers. Cut straight across, not too short and not down at the corners, as this can lead to ingrown nails.
- Keep feet warm, and exercise to improve circulation.
- Always wear the right shoe for the job.
- Seek prompt treatment for burns, cuts and breaks in the skin and for any usual changes in color or temperature. This is particularly important if you have diabetes.
- If your feet hurt, something is wrong. You also can prevent foot problems before they occur by visiting a state-registered chiropodist for advice on how to keep your feet healthy.

Ingrown toenails

Develop for many reasons, possibly because toenails simply are too large. Sometimes trauma like stubbing a toe or having a toe stepped on can cause a piece of the nail to be jammed into the skin.

The most common cause is cutting toenails incorrectly, causing them to regrow into the skin.

Ingrown toenails should be treated as soon as they are recognized. Soaking the feet in warm salt water, drying them thoroughly with a clean towel, applying a mild antiseptic solution to the area and bandaging the toe can help relieve some pain.

Athlete's foot

A common form of fungal infection that can be picked up in warm, damp environments. The condition is harmless, but if left unchecked, the fungus can infect toenails, making them discolored and brittle.

Swimming showers and changing rooms are the most frequent sources of infection.

To treat, wash your feet at least once a day with soap and tepid water, drying thoroughly and gently between the toes. Never wear shoes for longer than one day. It takes more than 24 hours to allow them to dry out thoroughly.

Hammer toes

Toes that are contracted at the middle joint in the toe, potentially leading to severe pressure and pain.

Hammer toes result from a muscle imbalance, which causes the ligaments and tendons to become unnaturally tight.

Changing the type of footwear worn is very important in treating hammer toes. When choosing a shoe, make sure the toe box — toe area — is high and broad and can accommodate the hammer toes.

Bunions

A prominent bump or a bone protruding toward the inside of the foot.

This is a common problem experienced mostly by women, commonly caused by wearing improperly fitting footwear.

In the early stages of bunion formation, soaking feet in warm water can provide temporary relief. The best way to alleviate pain is to wear properly fitting shoes.

With 250,000 sweat glands, feet tend to sweat more than other body parts.

This can be caused by stress on the foot, a structural problem or because the foot is under strain or tired.

Simple hygiene is usually effective in dealing with sweaty feet.

Negotiators begin pushing homeland security bill

Bush tells congress to focus on fiscal issues

By Janelle Carter
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – In a sign of President Bush's post-election muscle, congressional negotiators have reached a deal to create a homeland security department, ending a stalemate between Democrats and Republicans and earning a nod from the White House.

"This legislation meets our requirements and gives the president the authority and flexibility he needs to protect the American people, and we are hopeful that Congress will get the legislation to him by the holidays," White House spokesman Scott McClellan said.

The president, assured of passage, turned his attention immediately to fiscal issues. He told Cabinet members on Wednesday that he wants Congress, when it gets around to the budget and spending bills, to resist any temptation to overspend.

"We feel strongly we can meet our nation's priorities and be wise with the people's money at the same time," Bush said.

Soon after he spoke, the House voted 270-143 to keep federal agencies open through Jan. 11, a bill necessitated by this year's budget deadlock between Congress and the White House. Only two of the 13 spending bills for the federal fiscal year that started Oct. 1 have become law, and the remainder will have to be revisited by the new Congress next year.

Iraq accepts U.N. resolution allowing return of inspectors

By Edith Lederer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Facing a tight deadline and the threat of war, Iraq accepted a tough new U.N. resolution Wednesday that will return weapons inspectors to the country after nearly four years. Iraq's U.N. ambassador said his country hadn't placed any conditions on the resolution's terms.

In an argumentative and sometimes threatening nine-page acceptance letter to Secretary-General Kofi Annan, Iraqi Foreign Minister Naji Sabri attacked the United States and Britain, the co-sponsors of the resolution, and called the U.N. action unjust and illegal. But he declared nonetheless that Baghdad would abide by the resolution.

"We hereby inform you that we will deal with resolution 1441, despite its bad contents. ... The important thing is trying to spare our people from any harm," Sabri wrote. The letter went on to add that Iraq is "prepared to receive the inspectors within the assigned timetable."

Annan, speaking to reporters in Washington after a meeting with President Bush, said "we take it that they have accepted" the resolution, clearing the way for an advance team of U.N. inspectors to arrive in Iraq on Monday.

"Yes, Iraq has accepted," Annan said. But, he added, "the issue is not acceptance but performance on the ground. Let the inspectors go in. I urge the Iraqis to cooperate with them and to perform and I think that is the test we are all waiting for."

Bush said he wouldn't tolerate "deception or denial or deceit" from Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and he renewed his warning that if Iraq "chooses not to disarm, we will have a coalition of the willing with us" to do the job.

Bush declined to discuss the letter, though he thanked the U.N. Security Council for passing the U.S.-backed resolution. The Council approved the resolution last Friday and gave Iraq to accept its terms.

"They had no choice" but to accept, said a U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity. "Iraqis need to give their full cooperation to the inspectors to bring about complete and verifiable disarmament. Nothing else will do."

Kline declared winner in attorney general's race

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than a week after the polling places have closed, Phill Kline-R was declared the winner in the attorney general's race over Chris Biggs-D with only a .523 percent difference in votes.

On election night, Kline was ahead by 3,010 votes or .4 percent. If the vote difference would have been .5 percent or less, the state would have paid for a recount. If the margin is more than .5 percent, the candidate must pay the fee for a recount.

Phill Kline-R
KANSAS ATTORNEY GENERAL-ELECT

Provisional ballots became the critical factor in the race. Provisional ballots are cast when polling officials are not certain on a voter's eligibility.

Brad Bryant, state elections director for the secretary of state's office, said most provisional ballots are counted, but only after the counties have had time to check their validity.

"They are just not counted on election night because there is some question about if they can count," Bryant said.

"The Canvass looks at the reasons for the provisional ballots and decides whether they are valid. Some do not count, but most do."

In Riley County, 262 provisional ballots were cast, 167 were counted and 95 votes did not count. Jolene Campbell, deputy county clerk, said most votes were not counted because voters cast their ballots at the wrong polling place.

"We take every single provisional that comes in and see if they are good valid voters," Campbell said. "We mark the ones we don't have in our system. When we go to the county commissioners we ask them to accept the ones we have as good valid voters. Most of the ones that weren't acceptable is people who went to the wrong polling place. They went to the polling place of their choice."

The provisional ballots that are counted, Campbell said, are those voters who have moved and go to their correct polling place, but their names do not show up on the polling place registry.

Bryant said most provisional ballots do not make a difference in the outcome of the race because there is no reason to believe those ballots will not follow the trend of the majority of ballots counted on election day.

"They add more votes to the total," he said. "There is no real reason to think these voters will come out different from the rest of them. There is nothing that makes them likely to vote for the losing candidate. In a close race, if you happen to get a run of provisional ballots in an area where one candidate is strong, it can change the outcome."

To ensure your vote is counted, Bryant said, voters need to make sure they are registered and voting at the correct polling place.

"The important thing for voters to have their votes count is get registered and reregister every time they move around," he said. "Most provisional ballots are because a voter forgot to reregister when he moved. That happens a lot in a college town like Manhattan."

But the possibility of a vote not being counted doesn't mean every vote doesn't mean something.

"There were just over 4,000 votes difference," he said. "There are 3,700 precincts in Kansas. Just a little over one vote in each precinct would have made a difference."

BAKING FOR BUCKS

Club sells goods to raise funds, hopes to qualify for trip

By Kari Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Shellenberger Hall is bakers' heaven on Tuesday nights.

The Bakery Science Club meets in the baking lab of Shellenberger every Tuesday night to create a variety of foods for the weekly sale on Wednesday.

From 5 to 9 p.m., the group cooks, socializes and earns points and hours toward the yearly trip to Chicago for the American Society of Baking convention in March. To qualify for the trip to the convention, individual members must acquire a certain number of points, which they can obtain by cleaning up the lab. They also must have a certain number of hours spent baking to qualify to go on the trip.

Brook Metzinger, senior in bakery science and management, is the club president. She said the convention is a learning experience.

"We have a table set up at the convention, and we interact with people," Metzinger said. "They have sessions that we go to and listen about what is going on in the baking industry."

The club raises funds for the trip through its weekly bake sale in Shellenberger, which is from 3 to 5 p.m.

Kathy Dehner, junior in bakery science and club treasurer, joined the club her freshman year because she wanted to get involved and meet people.

"It is just a lot of fun. I really like to get to know people so you know who is in your classes and who

SPOTLIGHT | Rhodes Scholarship candidates

Nicole Donnert | COLLEGIAN

Darcy Kern and John Wedel are two of the three students nominated for the Rhodes Scholarship this year. Ben Champion, not pictured, is also a nominee for the scholarship.

3 students vying for Rhodes award

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three students have been nominated and have applied for Rhodes scholarships.

They are Ben Champion, senior in chemistry, natural resources and environmental sciences; Darcy Kern, senior in history, pre-law, Spanish and French; and John Wedel, senior in speech communication and rhetoric and philosophy.

The Rhodes scholarship pays for academic costs for two years at the University of Oxford in England. Students must be nominated by the university before they apply for the scholarship, K-State scholar adviser James Hohenbary said.

Hohenbary said he expects the students to find out the week of Thanksgiving if they have been chosen for an interview.

Two Kansas students will advance to the district interviews, from which two will be selected as Rhodes scholars. Kansas' district is made up of eight states, Hohenbary said.

Despite being selected at a regional level, Hohenbary said the Rhodes scholarship is truly a national competition.

Wedel is a member of Golden Key National Honour Society, Phi Kappa Phi honorary, and an inaugural member of the Multicultural Honor Society.

Wedel, from Topeka, said he was excited to be nominated for the scholarship.

"It's flattering – a lot of people try out and they only pick so many," he said.

Wedel said he would be looking at philosophical issues concerning the relationship between secular and spiritual views.

Kern, a member of Phi Kappa Phi honor society, Sigma Delta Pi Spanish honorary, Phi Alpha Theta history honorary, and Phi Eta Sigma honorary, plans to go to law school and study to become either a constitutional lawyer or a judge. Kern is from Bakersfield, Calif.

She said if she wins the Rhodes, she will use it to study English constitutional history. She also plans to earn her master's degree in history.

"When I found out that I was nominated, it took a while to sink in because it is such an honor to be recognized for one's accomplishments by KSU," Kern said.

Champion, an Eagle Scout and member of Alpha Chi Sigma chemical fraternity and Golden Key National Honour Society, plans to pursue a doctorate in chemistry relating to fuel cell research, regardless of whether he wins the scholarship. He is from Olathe, Kan.

Champion said he views his nomination as validation for his effort during his college career, but also that it says something about the effort of those around him.

"It represents the fact that anyone can get a top-notch education at K-State if they put in the time and energy to do it right," he said. "Obviously, this would not be true without highly qualified educators like my professors and mentors here, so they should receive a lot of the credit as well."

BAKING | Trips give baking students head start

you'll be working with in the lab," she said. "It is also a great opportunity at the conventions to get to know people in the industry."

The trips are beneficial to the members because they help them get a head start in the business.

"Las Vegas was my favorite trip. The Baking Expo there is the largest baking show we have in the country. It is so neat to see all the suppliers and new technology because you don't get to see much of that at the collegiate level," said Melanie Haines, senior in bakery science and former club president.

In fact, Dehner said that at the conventions they go to, K-State is the only college represented among the many businesses attending. This provides a great opportunity for club members to talk to the different companies and organize internships and interviews, she said.

Non-majors are involved in the club and can benefit from the trips and the club experience even if they aren't in bakery science.

"You get good leadership opportunities," Haines said. "There are lots of opportunities to grow as a person and improve communication skills."

Metzinger said many people simply bring their friends and come for the food.

"Just come on Tuesday nights and bake with us, and we'd like you to come back the next week," she said.

Diversity group seeking members, offers opportunity to understand cultures

Bryan Scribner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

From hometown to home-away-from-home, Nikki Adams, senior in sociology, said experience with racial diversity is uncommon for many students.

"A lot of the students come from homogeneous communities," she said. "The population of K-State is really homogeneous concerning racial make-up."

Adams, though, said the American Ethnic Studies Student Association hopes to provide students with a new understanding of cultural diversity.

"A lot of people don't have the experience with different cultures at home or in their dorms or in their personal lives," Adams, vice president of the organization, said. "This helps people who come from those backgrounds explore different cultures and races – concerning anything from hair to food."

Students started the organization in 1997 with a mission to coordinate multicultural activities on campus. Adams said it attempts to compose itself of 50 percent students and 50 percent community members, and it is open to all majors.

"It is an inclusive organization – for those who want to know a diverse range of people," she said. "A lot of different races are represented."

Georgett Johnson, senior in family life and community services, said the group supports other ethnic organizations on campus. But unlike many groups on campus, Johnson said, AESSA is committed to opening itself to people of any personal background, ethnicity or socioeconomic status.

Johnson said many people might feel embarrassed when they don't understand cultures different from theirs. AESSA, she said, works to give people an opportunity to respond with and understand other ethnicities.

"This is an organization that will help bridge that gap," she said. "The biggest thing we really harp on is knowledge."

Since its inception, the organization has made itself visible in the community and on campus through events such as Diversity Dialogues. It also recently was host to an Underground Railroad tour that was open to the public.

The group also sponsors and funds other events throughout each year. Student Senate monetary allocations and fund-raising activities provide the necessary funding to bring its diversity-oriented activities to campus and the community.

Members of AESSA have also taken educational field trips. Recently, Adams said, some of its members attended a conference on race and ethnicity in New Orleans, La.

Meetings take place at 7 p.m. every other Thursday in K-State Student Union room 209. Adams said the meetings last one hour and typically include diversity-related discussions, activities and speakers. Members are expected to attend meetings regularly and participate, Adams said.

The organization, Adams said, is now facing declining membership, and nine of its 10 members will be graduating in May. Members are recruiting people in the community and students in hopes of initiating a leadership structure for spring 2003.

"We're trying to actively recruit within other organizations – other multicultural organizations," Adams said.

Adams said members also hope word of mouth, fliers and visits to classes will help increase membership. She said anyone with an interest in the group is invited to join.

"I've been to organizations where they preach inclusiveness, but then, people who are different come in and they don't feel comfortable," she said. "They end up leaving."

Juanita McGowan, AESSA adviser and director of American Ethnic Studies, said those interested in joining the organization should want to make a difference.

"The individual has to be able to manage his or her time," she said.

"It's a special organization for a student who has a passion for diversity."

In the near future, Adams said the organization hopes to see membership increase, and 10 years from now, she said the group's goal is to become an influential promoter of ethnic and cultural diversity on campus.

Those interested in the organization can contact Adams at 532-5738 or can go to Leasure Hall 3 for information on joining.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Election shows importance of everyone's vote

Attorney General-elect Phill Kline defeated Chris Biggs by a very narrow margin.

Kline received 4,296 more votes than Biggs- a .523 percent difference. With 3,700 precincts in Kansas, if a little more than one person in each precinct voted for Biggs, he could have won.

But, out of the 262 provisional ballots cast in Riley County, 95 did not count. Only 167 were counted.

A vote is ineligible if you cast it at the incorrect polling place.

Convenience is a good thing, but the closest voting establishment to you does not make it the correct one.

Provisional ballots count if you move, go to the correct polling place, and the volunteers do not have your new information recorded.

Provisional ballots do not count if you vote at the wrong establishment. Make sure you are at the right place.

But that responsibility does not rest solely on the voters' shoulders. Polling officials and volunteers also need to know if a person is in the right place before any votes are cast.

To make sure your ballot is counted, contact your county clerk's office to find out exactly where to go.

In a really close election, ballots do matter, and no legitimate ones should be thrown out.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

RESIDENCE HALL WOES

Break free, live off-campus

KATHRYN HOLLINGSWORTH

College: the long-awaited chance to break free of your parents' rule – the opportunity to finally start making some of your own choices.

You've waited 18 years for this.

So why the hell would you want to live in the residence halls?

First and foremost, living in a cubicle with another person is not my idea of a good time. Even if you are good friends, or meet at the beginning of the semester and get along, there are bound to be tense moments. We are all human, and we all have some habits that annoy others.

This is why I love living off campus. When I get in a battle with my roommate, I can stomp out of the living room, into my bedroom, slam the door and turn up my music.

If you live in the residence halls your options are limited. You can leave the premises or walk to your side of the room and turn your face to the wall.

Face it – you have few choices.

Secondly, who wants to share a bathroom with 40 people? Not me. Waiting in line, finding your shower shoes and hoping for hot water takes the joy out of bathing.

Showering is supposed to be relaxing or invigorating, not scary.

When I come home from a long, hard day, I can take a hot, relaxing bath or shower for as long as I dang well please, without worrying about fungus oozing from the tile from someone else's chronic athlete's foot.

Then there is the money factor.

After getting sucked dry by rising tuition, money is definitely a factor in where you decide to live. Some people assume the residence halls are cheaper than living off campus.

This assumption is made because included with the cost of your room is a meal plan. However, when you break it down, people who can budget with a little common sense will save money living off campus.

Ford Hall, with a full meal plan, costs $2,250 per semester, according to Housing and Dining Services.

A student lives in the residence halls for less than four months out of a semester. This means a resident is paying $562.50 a month to live in a 10- by 10-foot room with another person.

I live in a four-bedroom apartment and pay $300 in rent, about $100 in groceries and about $50 in bills per month. Looks like I'm saving $112.50 a month.

With my extra chunk of change, I think I might run to the liquor store, buy a bottle of vodka, take it home and drink it in the middle of my living room. Why?

Because I can.

There are no R.A.s telling me what I can or can't do. I don't have to carry a picture I.D. with me at all times just so I can get back into my tiny room.

I moved out of my parents' house because I wanted freedom to do whatever I wanted.

Sure, I have made a lot of really dumb mistakes, but this is part of growing up.

The residence halls are just one more way for the adult world to attempt to hold our hands and prepare us for the real world.

I've heard about the real world long enough-it is time to live in it.

It might be less of a headache to live in the residence halls because you don't have to worry about paying utilities or groceries, but these are fundamental parts of life we all need to learn.

Last but not least, Ford Hall, the largest dormitory complex holds about 630 people. There is no way I want to live w 629 other insane college students. Sorry.

Living in the residence halls might get you away from your parents, but the opportunity to achieve complete freedom lies in off-campus housing.

Save time, money in dorms

ANDREW LAWSON

So you're a college freshman, recently free from your parents' rules and ready to call your own shots.

There's just one catch – you still need a place to live.

Why would you even consider on-campus housing? After all, the residence halls have a lot of rules, and you're looking for total freedom, right?

Keep in mind that total freedom is a myth. With the independence of college life comes responsibility. But on-campus housing can ironically provide you with the most latitude and the fewest obligations.

The greatest advantage of the residence halls is that dwelling therein frees up a lot of time.

You save time by being able to walk anywhere on campus in less than 15 minutes. There's none of this hassle over searching for a parking spot for hours on end.

And there are plenty of times when I can sleep in. I just throw on a T-shirt and jeans five minutes before class and show up on time.

If all that walking gives you a headache, cycling might be for you. Not only are wheels quicker than feet, but you'll get a nice workout as well. I personally don't indulge in the bike-riding habit, though.

To me, one of the biggest time-savers comes in food preparation. Specifically, I don't have to do it.

Who knows how many hours one can save by not going to Dillons every week, and then having to come home and cook every single meal?

With a dining center meal plan, you just show up and have your food served right off the appliance. Waiting in line for a short while is a small price to pay for the absolute lack of work involved here.

Then there's cleaning. If you live in a residence hall, you don't have to clean the bathroom. You rarely have to clean your own room. You certainly don't have to do any routine maintenance like changing light bulbs. Hell, you can break something, and all you have to do is pay for it. What a time-saver!

Time isn't the only conserved resource here, either. As they say, time equals money. So, hypothetically, all that time you free up can be channeled into lots of wage-earning opportunities.

Seriously, though, on-campus housing is a pretty good deal. I pay $455 a month for a shared room and a 20-meal-per-week eating plan. You're going to have to pay a lot more than that if you rent something and have to provide everything yourself.

Basic expenses aren't the only deal. You can pay $150 one time only for high-speed Internet access, according to Telecommunications. A good high-speed cable deal off-campus would be $30 a month, so at that rate, residence hall ethernet pays itself off in five months. And you can use it for the four, five, six, years you are here.

Truth be told, it isn't "all about the Benjamins." The most valuable thing you can take away from the residence halls are the friendships you make.

Aw.

Actually, the people my parents stay in contact with most, other than workmates, are those they knew when they lived in Moore Hall years ago.

Although I will be the first to admit I had a pretty bad experience last year, I've met a lot of cool people in Putnam Hall this year. If I weren't so busy, I might even learn their names.

So do the smart thing and join . complex today. If you regret it, you can beat me up. But you probably won't regret it, I hope.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

To the girl who wants to know where to get a Brazilian wax: Go to Crimpers and ask for Ali.

Staying for the fourth quarter of that game on Saturday was like sticking around and cheering for an execution.

Trying is the first step to failing.

Let the bear eat your friend, then make up some story that looks good.

Instead of crying about how the campus needs more funding, why don't you guys get in your houses and study, and raise the all-campus GPA above 2.75.

I, and a few others, witnessed a few girls in Ag Econ 318 cheating on the last exam. This is your warning.

How can anyone argue with Darwin? I can so see how we evolved from apes. I mean, look at the frat guys. Come on.

Layton, I just wanted to say thank you for being so smart and intelligent and proving that not all men are idiots. Thank you.

To the person who backed into my truck: I found you, so you better find me, or the cops will come and get you. Time is ticking.

You might have seven boyfriends, but not one of them is hot.

I was wondering if that new rosary has any part in turning a blind eye to pedophelia, genocide, you know, everything else the Catholic Church has been involved in.

Suppose you are an idiot. Suppose you are in a fraternity. Oh, wait. I repeated myself.

For all the lazy people who eat at Van Zile: I'm not your mother, and I'm tired of picking up after you.

It really was Mike and Jeff day in the Fourum today. Collectively, we got 10 comments in.

I don't think Angel Wilson likes Eminem, just because he's white.

Did you know that when you shoot up heroin, it automatically turns to morphine when it hits the blood system?

Does anybody know where you recycle Collegian papers? I've got a stack since the first day of school, and I'm environmentally friendly.

"8 Mile" is the best movie I've ever seen, and Eminem is hot.

My roommate has a belly mullet.

My roommates and I live in pure filth. Nothing but stale beer, old puke and dried-up pee hold our room together. All four of us are just dirty, pathetic losers.

I'm glad more people are waiting to enjoy Thanksgiving before starting to celebrate Christmas.

I think my roommate is Martha Stewart.

Andy, I hate to be the one to tell you, but black guys can dress better than white guys.

Here's a little piece of advice: Don't ever live in an apartment complex with wooden stairs. Every time someone walks up, it sounds like a herd of pregnant hippos.

Is it bad for your teeth to eat hard noodles?

It's really nice that the History Channel was exploiting the sniper tragedy all this week, but couldn't they have at least left out that god-awful background music? It sounds like a heavy metal porn soundtrack.

Partnership for an idiot-free America.

Why do half the guys who work at Rusty's Last Chance shave their legs? Kind of weird, huh?

Was anyone else offended by the porch monkey comment, or is this school too uneducated about their country's history to know what it meant?

Fourum — more like borum.

I just wanted to say thanks to Tim who found my cell phone and returned it to my mom safely. Thanks Tim.

If anyone wants a 22 inch flat screen monitor. Um, yeah.

I'd just like to thank Pat Bosco for buying everyone who stayed in the library Tuesday night until Tuesday morning doughnuts. That was really cool of him. Thanks.

My spoon is too big.

I am feeling fat and sassy.

Will someone call the Fourum and say that I am hot?

I saw this guy with a t-shirt that said "I see stupid people" I wonder if he could see me.

I live in a giant bucket.

Is it bad that I almost got run over by the student disabilities vehicle?

Will someone write a work order for the giant woodpecker in the basement of Putnam?

You're a god, and I'm not. Just thought I'd let you know.

Luke, I am your mother.

Tuesday is coming. Did you bring your coat?

Silly hats only.

Only if you're referring to him as your TA because you are his professor. Then it is against K-State policy to sleep with him.

Say, so you want to go see a movie?

Most people would say that snails can't walk, but they do go places by foot.

I miss the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles.

Yeah, what are you supposed to do when your fat roommate keeps eating all your food?

I'm disappointed because I think I may have already experienced my 15 minutes of fame.

The Subway Union is a place for everyone to eat and watch TV — you know that big television screen. If you are done eating, don't sit and blabber away with your friends in front of that television so other people can't watch. Move on.

The one thing more fun than calling the readers' Fourum with random comments is calling random people with random comments.

This is for the residents of Freemont Apartment — whoever's booty call keeps double parking in the parking lot, tell them to park on the side of the street, because you are blocking everyone in.

THERE AND BACK AGAIN

Wichita touring company to present 'The Hobbit' in Wamego

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dragons are not common in the Midwest, but one group is trying to show little kids that they still lurk amongst us.

The Wichita Children's Theatre Professional Touring Company has been touring throughout the Midwest for the past three months performing the play "The Hobbit" for children.

The recent interest in J. R. R. Tolkien's "The Lord of the Rings" trilogy along with children's fascination with fantasy worlds helped to make "The Hobbit" a good play to perform, Matt Wright, tour manager, said.

"Our main audience is children from kindergarten through sixth grade," Wright said. "The Hobbit' is a little darker play with more serious subject matter than what we normally put on, but a lot of the kids that we perform for have already read the book. It's a play that kids and adults have been able to enjoy."

The traveling group of four finds it tours not only for the ability to make a little money, group members see it as a good opportunity for theater experience, Wright said. The main challenge that they've had to face is keeping children's as well as adults' interest on the play and actors, he said.

"We had to make the play applicable to kids," Wright said. "So we had to make it interesting enough to keep their attention and at the same time have a story that adults can appreciate. And I think that we've done it with our set and costumes."

Courtesy art

The play, written by Marklin Taylor, is an adaptation from J.R.R. Tolkien's book, "The Hobbit." In the play, the hobbit Bilbo Baggins, played by Jennifer Goering, travels with Gandalf the wizard, played by Wright, to slay the dragon Smaug. In the process, they meet several different characters, which are all played by the other two actors Jeremy Henson and Amber Nelson, Wright said.

The Wichita Children's Theatre Professional Touring Company's main purpose is to educate children in the art of theater, Sharla Michael, tour manager, said. They often go to schools and work with children in different types of acting, she said.

"Sometimes we go to a small town for a play, and we'll come out for a day or two and actually go into the school," Michael said. "We'll go in there and workshop kids from grade school to high school. And we'll work with them from just pretending with the young kids, to make-up tips and improv acting with the older kids."

Keeping the play as short as possible was one of the appealing but more difficult parts of the play. With a small cast and 11 characters that have to be represented, several costume changes were inevitable.

"We try to keep the plays around an hour," Michael said. "And in that hour ,the actors have several really quick costume changes. So we had to be creative with our set and costumes, and I think we did a good job."

The troupe travels with a trailer 15 feet long that has to include everything, including the set, props, costumes and sound system. They operate on a two-flat system, which means they use flats on casters that are able to be turned around, offering more surprises in the set design, Wright said.

Any loyal Tolkien fans or anyone who is interested in the appeal of fantasy would enjoy the show, Wright said. The fact that it's a condensed version of the book shouldn't deter someone's decision to see the play, he said.

"We had to take an epic and show it in an hour," Wright said. "So we had to make it nice and tidy. If someone wanted to have a full stage performance of it, that could take forever.

"But, I think that anyone who is familiar with the book will like to see what we've done. Not to mention I think people will be surprised by our dragon."

Schedule

What: The play "The Hobbit"
When: 7 tonight

A new genre of fantasy: a timeline for Tolkien's dedicated nerd following

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Just as Saruman created a new kind of orc in "The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring," J.R.R. Tolkien created a new kind of nerd.

Yes, Tolkien redefined the genre of fantasy, showing it could be true literature instead of just popular fiction. But, he also single-handedly created the fantasy nerd.

Tolkien timeline

1937: "The Hobbit" is published by George Allen & Unwin, a British firm that later merged with Harper Collins in 1990.
1954-1955: "The Lord of the Rings" trilogy is published.
1956: A radio version of "The Lord of the Rings" is broadcast on BBC 3 in 12 parts, starting the translation of Tolkien's tale for mass media.
1965: A pirated paperback version of "The Lord of the Rings," published in the United States. This alerted Americans to the existence of the books not only because of the lower price, but also because the copyright dispute brought it to their attention.
1973: John Ronald Reuel Tolkien dies in Oxford, England.
1977: "The Silmarillion," a story about the characters Beren and Luthien, is published, explaining many details in the history of Tolkien's Middle Earth.
1978: "The Lord of the Rings," cartoon by Ralph Bakshi is released by Warner Bros., but under no-budget circumstances and archaic animation techniques, the film fails even to be completed. It is still only a half-finished story.
1978: "The Hobbit" cartoon is released for television by Parade video. With a script by Romeo Muller, and directed by Arthur Rankin Jr. and Jules Bass, the cartoon has endured far better than Bakshi's work.
1983: The first of 12 volumes of "The History of Middle Earth" is Published.
December 2001: "The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring" is released by New Line Cinema in theaters and is nominated for Best Picture.
Tuesday: "The Lord of the Rings: The Fellowship of the Ring," is re-released with 30 extra minutes.
Tonight: "The Hobbit" play shows in Wamego.
December 18: "The Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers" will be released in theaters, and audiences will be forced to sit through another three hours of orcs and elves.

Santana, Willie Nelson to perform at Nobel Peace Prize concert

Guitarist Carlos Santana, country singer Willie Nelson and teen rocker Michelle Branch will headline next month's Nobel Peace Prize concert in Oslo, Norway.

The Dec. 11 show will pay tribute to former President Jimmy Carter, being honored this year for his "untiring effort" to find peaceful solutions to international conflicts and to advance democracy and human rights.

Anthony Hopkins and Jessica Lange will be the masters of ceremony for the concert, taking place the day after Carter receives the peace prize.

Presentation of the award will be marked by a solemn ceremony at Oslo City Hall and a torchlight parade in Carter's honor on Dec. 10.

Opera house gutted in 1996 fire to reopen in December 2003

La Fenice, the 200-year-old Venice, Italy, opera house gutted in a 1996 fire, will reopen to the public Dec. 14, 2003, Venice's mayor announced.

Restoration work will be completed next November, with the opening set for the following month, Mayor Paolo Costa said Monday.

The initial program will include concerts and ballet with the opera season resuming in fall 2004 with Giuseppe Verdi's "La Traviata," a work written for La Fenice.

Huge Albuquerque Christmas lighting display moving to new location

Norman and Joyce Bugg have moved their annual Christmas lighting display that drew tens of thousands of spectators — and protests from neighbors — to a new location.

More than 80,000 sparkling lights, a frolicking Snoopy, a colony of penguins and other holiday scenes will be displayed at the Traditions marketplace on Interstate 25 halfway between Albuquerque and Santa Fe.

LISTENING BOOTH

The Collegian wants to know what music you are listening to. If you are passionate about music and want to express your opinion, e-mail A&E Editor JJ Duncan at jduncan_80@hotmail.com. This week we asked Joe Elkinton, Manhattan residence, what he's playing.

What five albums are you listening to and why?

Soundtrack: "High Fidelity"
It's one of the best film soundtracks because it's all songs and not a half score like other soundtracks. There's a lot of great retro-adult contemporary, I guess you'd call it. There is good old stuff, like the Velvet Underground, and it's multi-themed, so there's not just one mood through the whole thing.

Coldplay: "A Rush of Blood to the Head"
I think this appeals to people who are disdained about Radiohead losing guitar riffs. I like listening to "The Bends" by Radiohead, too, which has a similar feel and strength in the music. I like the guy's voice and the added strength of the piano.

Jack Johnson and John Mayer
This is a toss up for me, because I'm tired of having my own identity, and I want to be assimilated into the American Eagle, "Dawson's Creek" consumer culture while getting in with the sorority girls.

Simon and Garfunkel: "The Best of Simon and Garfunkel"
Paul Simon is a great songwriter, and it's great music to listen to while I'm very drunk and very depressed. I'm man enough to say I love "Bridge Over Troubled Water," and that's one of the few songs that Art Garfunkel sang by himself.

Counting Crows: "August and Everything After"
This is on my top five albums list because it's very nostalgic. It's great hearing all that great music pour out from Adam Duritz's depression. It also goes great with whiskey.

K-State's bowl picture looking complicated

Now that the college football season is winding down, it is clear that K-State will be making its 10th-straight bowl appearance.

Where that appearance will be remains cloudy and confused, though.

JOEL REICHENBERGER

The best bowl the Cats are still in contention for is either the Sugar Bowl or the Orange Bowl. But, to say the least, those are the long shots.

In order to be spending the holidays in New Orleans or Miami, K-State will need some serious help.

First of all, Colorado needs to lose out. Not an impossible proposition with games against Iowa State and at Nebraska, but still a stretch. It would have helped had Missouri been able to pull the upset last Saturday, but Colorado still has a tough road ahead.

Then, K-State would need to confront its Sooner demons in the Big 12 Championship, as only a win there would send the Cats to the BCS.

But if that doesn't happen, K-State's stock falls fast as many of the other mid-range bowls could leave the Cats out in the cold as well.

Assuming Oklahoma wins out (never a safe assumption) and wins the Big 12 title game, it will assure itself a spot in the BCS, probably in the Orange Bowl. But Texas is a different story. Despite its No. 3 ranking in the polls, the team will need some help to make it to the BCS. Right now Texas is seventh on the BCS list. It needs Notre Dame, Iowa or Ohio State to lose.

If one of those teams does lose, then Texas could fill the spot. Then Cotton Bowl would be able to take K-State, but first this would have to happen.

The overrated Irish still have to play at Southern California and should lose by double digits – plus they have a super toughie this weekend versus Rutgers (1-8). In light of Notre Dame's miraculous escape from one of the worst football teams in the nation, Navy, I fully expect Rutgers to give the Irish all they can handle this weekend. Hopefully, Irish coach Tyrone Willingham will roll out the cursed green jerseys, and his team will go down in flames.

Just like Notre Dame, Ohio State still has a couple of rough games to go as well. On Nov. 23, the team has to travel to "The Big House" and face Michigan.

Iowa has the easiest path of the bunch, but it has to play a 7-3 Minnesota team.

So if Notre Dame, Ohio State or Iowa lose, the Cats are in the Cotton Bowl, right? No way. It isn't that easy.

First, the national media bias for Notre Dame must be broken. See, even if the team loses either of its next two games, it could still go to a BCS game. It is the Irish, and the major bowls and media outlets everywhere would bend over backwards to kiss their green butts.

And people ask why I hate Notre Dame.

If all three of those teams win out, or if the Irish lose and still get lucky, then Texas will be stiffed by the BCS and sent to the Cotton Bowl, and the Cats will be sent tumbling into bowl hell.

The next bowl below the Cotton is the Holiday. But, the Holiday Bowl will be forced to take Colorado, who should lose to Oklahoma in the Big 12 Championship game.

Next comes the Alamo Bowl, and a possible match-up against a lower echelon Big 10 team.

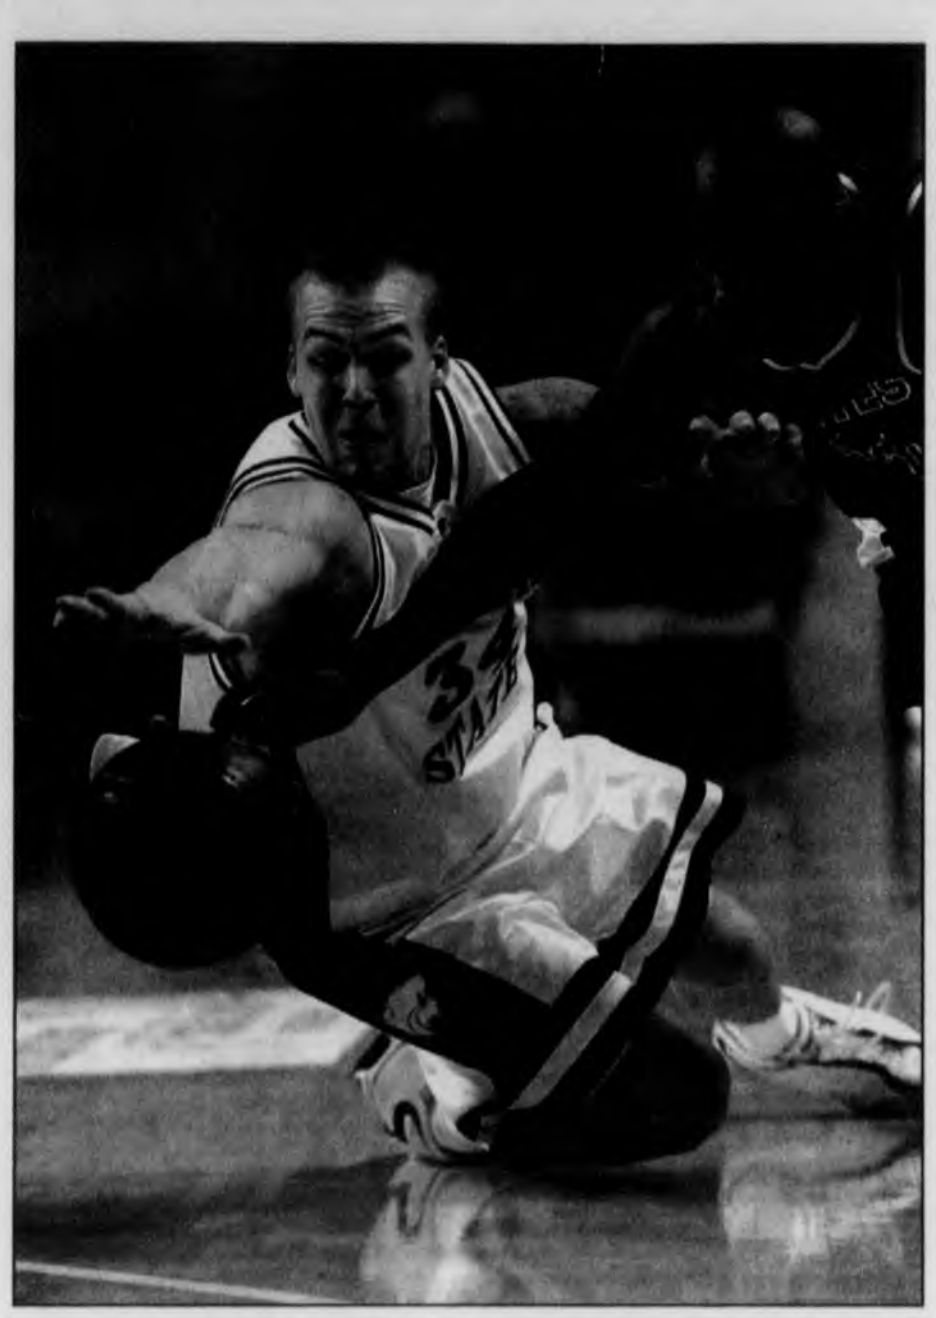
But, too many fans "remember the Alamo." In 1998, the Alamo Bowl took K-State, who had its heart set on a National Championship appearance. To say the least, the Cats were not happy to be in the game, not to mention the fact they lost. Well, the Alamo hasn't forgotten K-State either, and may repay the Cats' negative attitudes by skipping over them this year.

Finally, K-State could find itself beaten and bruised, sore and irritable, in Shreveport, La., at the Independence Bowl. No doubt, that would be an unfitting end to the season that saw the Cats miss out on a 12-0 record by seven combined points.

While that would be the nightmare matchup, I don't think the BCS would be the dream matchup. No, that could come if Notre Dame loses again and is magically stiffed by the BCS, and then the Gator Bowl decides to pass on the Irish as well. Texas would make the BCS, and K-State would go to the Cotton Bowl, which has a stipulation in its rules that allows it to take a certain gold helmeted team once every four years.

Yes, folks, somewhere in the mess that is the bowl system, K-State could line up against Notre Dame. I would predict a score of around 193-6, and live my life happily ever after.

So, to sum things up, here are the teams that all of you out there in Cat land need to pull for over the next two weeks.



1. Iowa State and Nebraska to beat Colorado.

2. Michigan to beat Ohio State, and send Texas to the BCS.

3. Rutgers, Southern California and or a meteor to end Notre Dame's hopes.

4. Minnesota to beat Iowa.

Basketball earns 1st win to end exhibition campaign

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It may not count, but it was still sweet, junior guard Tim Ellis said.

On Wednesday night, the K-State men rebounded from last week's loss and won their first game of the season, 95-68, against Athletes First.

Even though it was only an exhibition contest, Ellis said he felt better afterward.

"It feels much better," he said. "(We're) glad we got a win, rather than an L."

Ellis said the difference from a week ago was evident from the start of the game. Last week, many of the Cats were disappointed in their sluggish start – a mistake that hindered their performance. But such was not the case against Athletes First.

K-State jumped out to a 12-6 lead after three minutes and made it 44-33 by half.

Ellis said the start was critical to the Cats' efforts.

"We came out with more intensity than we did last week. This time, we didn't look so sluggish," he said. "We got out to a real good pace."

But not everyone saw the game for all the positives Ellis did. Coach Jim Wooldridge said that despite the final score, the game reminded him of last week's loss.

"There were some things that we could pull out of that game that were pretty good," he said. "But there are also some things that we're going to have to get substantially better at."

Rebounding the ball will be one of those things, junior Jarrett Hart said. Outrebounded by 10 in the first half, K-State closed the gap but still finished behind.

K-State's big men did little to help either. Senior Pervis Pasco only grabbed three rebounds, and Hart – who led the Cats with 17 points – said Wooldridge's halftime speech demanded more out of his team.

"He wants two-handed rebounds," he said. "He wants you to go up and get them, so we tried to come out second half and out-hustle them."

For the most part, K-State did that and won its second exhibition under Wooldridge.

Now the Cats will prepare for their Nov. 23 regular season game against Brigham Young University. Hart said if K-State needs to find consistency to succeed.

"We know what to do – we just have to do it," Hart said. "We don't do it every possession. If we learn to do it every possession, I think we'll be all right."

Equestrian to compete in 2 shows this weekend at Truman State Western Show

By Brent Gray
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Western Equestrian team will wrap up its fall season this weekend in Columbia, Mo. as it competes in the Truman State Western Show.

The Cats will compete in two shows on Saturday and Sunday with hopes of showing consistency and making progress, Coach Lindsay Breidenthal said.

"We want to come in first or second each day," Breidenthal said. "Our girls have rode well all year. The judging has been inconsistent, though."

In the Cats' first show of the year, they came away with a first-place finish at the Southwestern Missouri State Western Show.

It was the beginning of many strong finishes for K-State this season.

But in their last show in Ames, Iowa, at the Iowa State University Western Show, the team earned a first-place finish on the first day and a third-place finish on the second day.

And although the only smudge on the Cats' record is the lone third-place finish in Ames, the Cats know consistency will be key if they want to place well during the spring season, Breidenthal said.

"All I can do is ask the girls to go out and ride their best," she said.

"I know our girls are riding well, I just want them to keep it up and do what they can."

Senior Amanda Gigot and junior Brandi Vogel will lead the Cats into Columbia, as they have done all year.

Gigot has earned either High-Point Rider or Reserve High-Point Rider honors in each of the shows so far this season. The junior is coming off receiving High-Point Rider status at her last show. Vogel came home with High-Point Rider honors in the first show of the season.

Vogel was also the first Wildcat in the team's history to become an Intercollegiate Horse Show Association National Champion last season.

K-State has two remaining meets after this weekend, one of which is at home.

However, the Cats will first have a break from competition before they are host to their next show, the Kansas State University Western Show, Feb. 8 and 9.

It will be the Western team's first and only home show of the year.

The English team was host to its show Oct. 25-28, where it took first place in every day of competition.

Being host to the show gives the Cats an advantage they will use to be successful, Breidenthal said. The hosting school provides the horses and judges for competition, giving the hosting school a leg up on the competition.

Nicole Donnert | COLLEGIAN
Dehlia Burdan performs a jump during her first-place finish in the open over fences competition at the Regional Hunt Point Show in October.

"I know our horses, and I know that our judges will be consistent," she said.

But the Cats have business to take care of before they can think of that, Breidenthal said.

One goal the Cats have had since the start of the season is qualifying for nationals. With that goal still within sight, they hope to finish strong and bring the team to Nationals for the first time ever, Breidenthal said.

"We will have to see what we need to work on after this show," she said. "We still have goals and need to keep focused on those goals."

CAT CALENDAR

With Thanksgiving break getting closer, K-State fans have plenty of chances to cheer on the Cats before they get stuffed on the 28th. Here is a look at the next week of Wildcat action.

Friday

- Women's basketball — Round 1 of the WNIT. K-State takes on Ball State at 7 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum.
- Tennis — Day one of the Arizona State Invitational in Tempe, Ariz. The tournament is the Cats' last of the fall.

Saturday

- Football — Cats take on Nebraska at 11:30 a.m. at KSU Stadium. The game will be televised on Fox Sports Net (Channel 34).
- Cross Country — K-State travels to Normal, Ill., for the Midwest Regional. The women's race will start at 10:30 a.m., with the men following at 11:30.
- Equestrian — Final show of the fall for the Wildcats as they compete in Columbia, Mo.

Sunday

- Women's basketball — Round 2 of the WNIT. If K-State beats Ball State, it will play the winner of the Georgia Tech/Charlotte game at 2 p.m. at Bramlage.
- Volleyball — Wildcats look to extend their winning streak to 12 matches when they travel south to play Texas A&M. First serve is set for 3 p.m.
- Equestrian — Day 2 of the Truman State Western Show.

Wednesday

- Women's basketball — Should K-State win on Friday, and then on Sunday, it would play in a site to be determined, on a time to be announced. The Collegian will release everything, once known.
- Volleyball — Wildcats play host to Oklahoma at 7 p.m. in Ahearn Field House.

Women's Basketball | Cats sign five

K-State women's basketball coach Deb Patterson announced Wednesday that Tiffany Brooks (Leavenworth, Kan.), Claire Coggins (Lee's Summit, Mo.), Jetta "Twiggy" McIntyre (Sapulpa, Okla.), Shanda Murdoch (Oklahoma City) and Naytanda Smith (Enid, Okla.) have signed national letters of intent to play at K-State.

"We are extremely pleased about the overall quality of this recruiting class. This class will provide our program with added versatility and skill in all spots on the floor," Coach Deb Patterson said.

MLB | Giants sign Alou

Felipe Alou was hired Wednesday to manage the National League champion San Francisco Giants, returning to the team he played for in the 1950s and '60s.

The former manager of the Montreal Expos inherits a team that came within six outs of a World Series title and replaces the popular Dusty Baker, whose contract was not renewed.

Baker is talking with the Chicago Cubs about becoming their manager. Alou's son, Moises, plays for the Cubs.

The 67-year-old Alou agreed to a three-year contract. He was 691-717 in 10 seasons managing the Expos.

He played for the Giants from 1958-63 as part of a 17-season major league career in which he hit .286 with 206 homers and 852 RBIs. He also spent 1970 and part of 1971 in the Bay area playing for the Oakland Athletics.

MLB | AL Gold Gloves presented

Seattle first baseman John Olerud, second baseman Bret Boone and outfielder Ichiro Suzuki all won American League Gold Gloves on Wednesday.

The World Series champion Anaheim Angels won two Gold Gloves, with catcher Bengie Molina breaking the 10-year winning streak of Texas' Ivan Rodriguez and Darin Erstad displacing the Mariners' Mike Cameron in the outfield.

Alex Rodriguez of the Rangers won his first Gold Glove at shortstop, ending the nine-year winning streak of Cleveland's Omar Vizquel.

Gold Gloves, presented since 1957 by Rawlings, are voted on by managers and coaches before the end of the regular season. They may not select players on their own teams, and they vote only for players in their own league.

HOMELAND | Negotiators reach compromise on homeland security department; Bush confident bill will pass

bating the homeland security measure Wednesday, but passage was not expected until late evening. The Senate, currently controlled by Democrats, is expected to begin debate, although final passage could be delayed into next week.

Passage had been held up because of a fight between Bush and Senate Democrats over provisions of the legislation dealing with worker rights. Bush insisted that broad powers were needed to manage the 170,000-employee agency and that he needed relief from some civil service rules covering labor issues.

According to a description of the agreement, the bill would take a small step to address complaints by Senate Democrats that the agency's workers would lack sufficient job protection.

It would require the department to negotiate any workplace changes with the employees' union and require federal mediation if no agreement was reached. But in the end, the department could make whatever changes it wanted – the flexibility the president has sought.

"We all want a homeland security bill," Rep. Albert Wynn, D-Md., said as debate began Wednesday afternoon. But Wynn complained that, "This is supposed to be a bill about fighting terrorism. Unfortunately, this bill puts the administration at war with federal employees."

The agreement came as lawmakers scrambled to complete work in a lame-duck session that followed last week's stunning congressional victories for Republicans, who retained control of the House while taking back the reins of the Senate.

Armed with that power, GOP lawmakers were to elect their leadership teams Wednesday. Sen. Trent Lott of Mississippi and House Speaker Dennis Hastert of Illinois will remain the party's top congressional leaders.

Passage of the homeland security legislation would be the first show of Republicans' new congressional power, and it would give a major legislative victory to Bush, who has made its completion a top priority.

"I believe we can get this done. I believe Congress can show the country that they can finish their work on a high note of achievement," Bush said Tuesday after a day of meetings spent prodding congressional leaders to complete the bill.

The measure would combine nearly two dozen federal agencies. They would include the Coast Guard, Customs Service, the Secret Service, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and much of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The Republican-controlled House on July 26 passed a bill creating a department largely along the lines Bush envisioned, but the Senate version stalled as Democrats fought for tougher union rights for the agency's workers.

IRAQ | Saddam accepts Security Council resolution; Iraq must identify chemical, biological, nuclear programs said on state-controlled ORT television: "We were confident that Iraq would make this decision, which opens the way for a political resolution of the situation. Now it is important that the international inspectors quickly return to Iraq."

In Baghdad, state-run television announced Saddam's acceptance of the Security Council resolution two hours after Iraq's U.N. Ambassador Mohammed Al-Douri told the rest of the world.

Iraqi television showed images of Saddam, in a dark suit and tie, presiding over a meeting of his Revolutionary Command Council, made up of senior military officers. The picture was frozen on the screen while an announcer read the message recounting at length a history of Iraq's dispute with the United Nations.

In the letter, Sabri accused Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair of fabricating "the biggest and most wicked slander against Iraq" by claiming that it had or was on its way to producing nuclear weapons.

He also warned inspectors that Iraq will be watching their actions very closely. In 1998, Baghdad accused inspectors of spying for the United States and Israel.

"Dealing with the inspectors, the government of Iraq will ... take into consideration their way of conduct, the intentions of those who are ill-intentioned among them and their improper approach in showing respect to the people's national dignity, their independence and security, and their country's security, independence and sovereignty," Sabri said.

Under Security Council resolutions adopted after Iraq's 1990 invasion of Kuwait, U.N. inspectors must certify that Iraq's nuclear, chemical and biological weapons programs have been eliminated along with the long-range missiles to deliver them. Only then can sanctions against Iraq be lifted.

Al-Douri delivered the letter to Annan's office. "There are no conditions, no reservations" contained in the acceptance, he said.

The advance team that will arrive in Iraq on Monday will be led by chief U.N. inspector Hans Blix, who is in charge of biological and chemical inspections, and Mohamed El-Baradei of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which is in charge of nuclear inspections.

The resolution allows inspectors to go anywhere at any time to search for weapons of mass destruction. It also warns that Iraq faces "serious consequences" if it doesn't comply – and the United States has made clear that an Iraqi failure to cooperate will almost certainly mean a new war.

"Now, we are not talking about war or military action. We are talking about the mission of inspectors and how to make it a successful one," Amr Moussa, the head of the Arab League, told CNN. The Arab League had been instrumental in getting Iraq to accept the unconditional return of inspectors and to secure its support for the resolution.

In his letter, Sabri urged inspectors to bear in mind that they were starting work during the Muslim holy month of Ramadan when people fast during the day.

If the inspectors do their work "professionally and lawfully," Sabri said "the liars' lies" perpetrated by the United States and Britain about Iraq's weapons of mass destruction will be exposed and the Security Council will then have to lift sanctions.

Sabri said he intends to send another letter stating Iraq's observations on elements in resolution 1441 that Baghdad believes are contrary to international law and the U.N. Charter.

On Tuesday, Iraq's parliament recommended that Saddam reject the resolution. Saddam's son, Odai Saddam Hussein, proposed making Arabs part of the U.N. team, echoing a recommendation from the Arab League.

Blix's office said it has trained inspectors from 49 countries, including six Jordanians, one Moroccan and five Turks.

"We don't get too many applications from Arabic countries, and we would welcome more applications from people who have the right expertise," one official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

ElBaradei said the IAEA in the past had "many inspectors from many Arab countries" and this was not a problem.

In addition to offering Iraq "a final opportunity" to cooperate with inspectors, the resolution extends the possibility of lifting the sanctions.

But Iraq must comply with its strict timetable, which now gives Iraq until Dec. 8 to declare all its chemical, biological and nuclear programs.

Law may affect air traffic

Weapons would be allowed in planes' cockpits

By Leslie Miller
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Pilots would be allowed to carry weapons in cockpits, and airports would get a year's reprieve from screening all air travelers' baggage under the homeland security bill nearing a final vote in Congress.

Passenger advocates praised the decision to extend the Dec. 31 deadline to screen all checked luggage. They said there was not enough time to finish the construction needed to install bomb-detection machines at hundreds of airports. Also, temporary measures would have caused long delays and crowding, they said.

David Stempler, president of the Air Travelers Association, said the extension was "a big, big, big deal."

The compromise passed the House on Wednesday as airport managers meeting in Salt Lake City expressed concern that many airports would not meet the deadline. The Senate is expected to pass it next week.

Managers of airports that handle 75 percent of U.S. air traffic sent a letter to Congress on Tuesday predicting chaos and damage to the economy without an extension.

Benefit concert tonight

Proceeds to go to former student's educational fund

By Tina Deines
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three regional musical acts will perform tonight in a benefit concert for Ali Kemp, the 19-year-old former K-State student who was murdered at a Leawood, Kan., swimming pool in June.

Admission to the concert, which will take place at the Wareham Opera House starting at 8 p.m., is a $5 donation to the Ali Kemp Educational Fund.

Albert Bickley, singer and guitarist for the band Mrzeroknew, said the main goal of the concert is to commemorate Kemp.

"We want to raise some money and give the students and community the opportunity to remember Ali," he said. "It's an opportunity to make some good out of bad."

Pat Lehan, bassist and guitarist for the band Regis Page, also said the concert is a way to remember Kemp.

"It's a way to not let people forget," Lehan said. "It's kind of easy to forget about things as time goes by."

Lehan said he also wanted to raise awareness of Kemp's unsolved murder case.

"The main thing is just awareness because they haven't found who did it yet," Lehan said.

Cook's veto nullified

Senate votes to increase Counseling Services fee

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate overrode Student Body President Zac Cook's veto of a bill to increase privilege fees at its meeting Thursday night.

The bill increases privilege fees by 2 percent for University Counseling Services. The bill passed because a two-thirds majority of Senate voted against the veto.

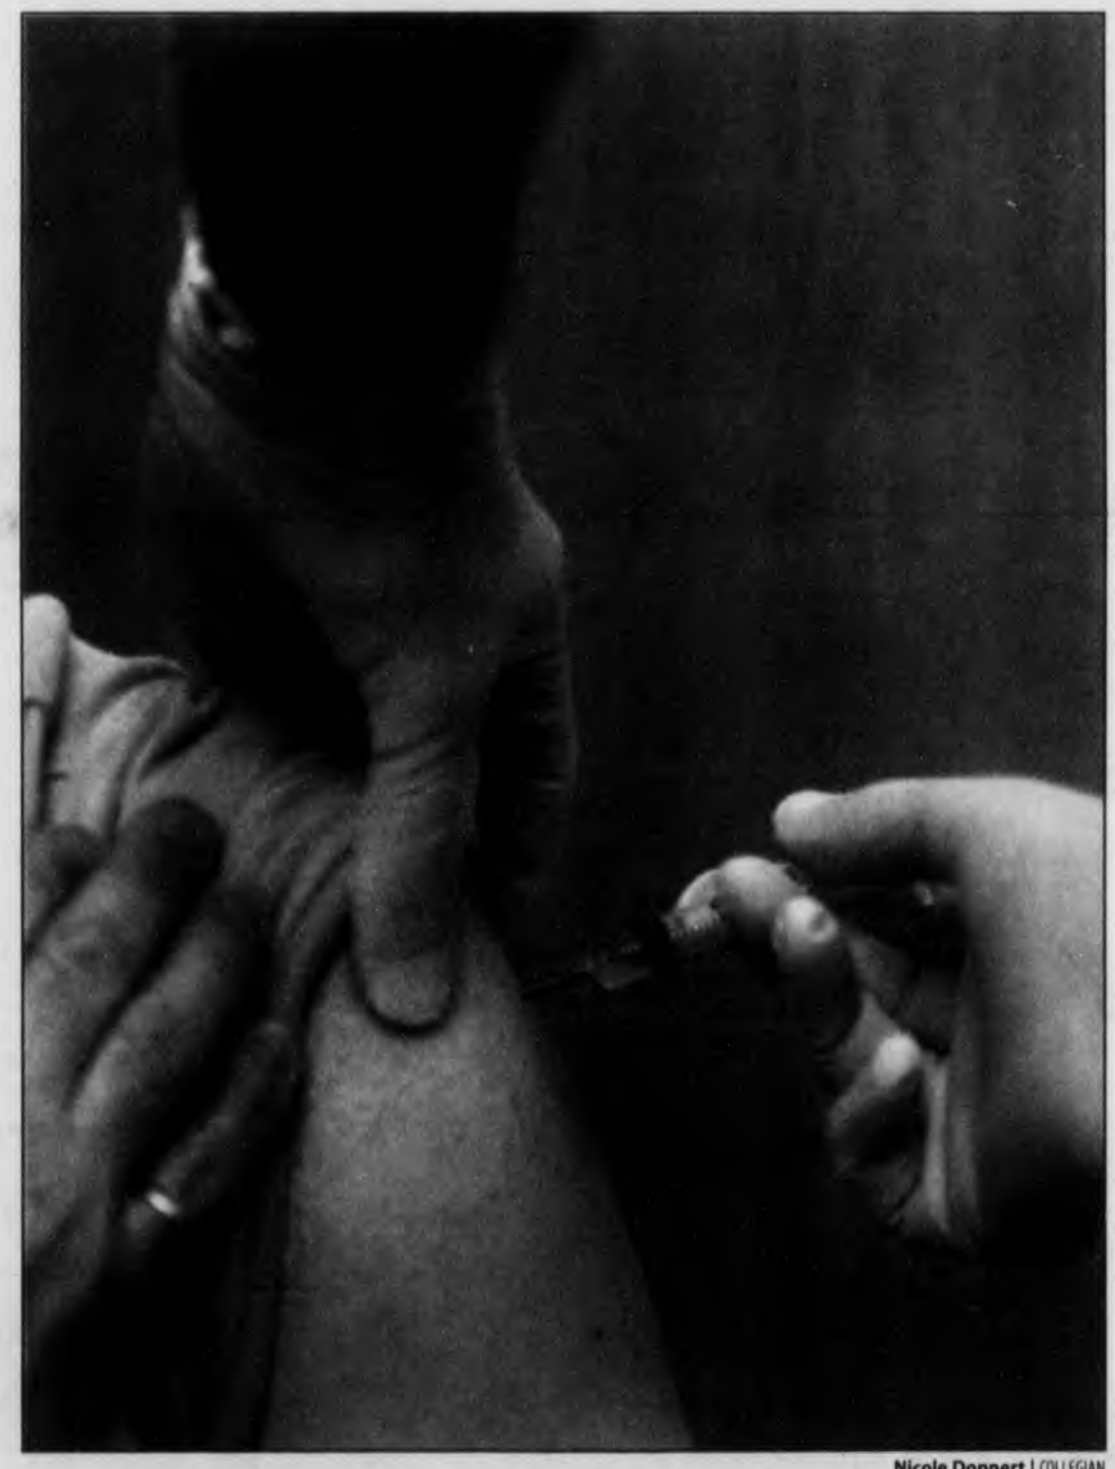
Cook vetoed the bill because he said he believes Counseling Services is experiencing financial problems because of shortfalls in the state budget. Privilege fees, he said, should not be used to make up for state budget cuts.

In an e-mail to the Student Governing Association Listserv, Cook said, "I will not sign any piece of legislation that requires students to cover a revenue shortfall from the state of Kansas.

"I ask that each senator remember the 500 students who attended Tuesday night's event and demanded that the state of Kansas take care of students. Those at the rally did not ask Student Senate to raise tuition and privilege fees to cover the state shortfall."

Bill Harlan, Senate Operations Chair, disagreed with the veto and argued that privileges should be funded by the students.

"If the state were to completely cut funding, I would argue that this body should and would pick up the slack," he said. "It is our duty to maintain this level of funding."



However, Vicki Conner, Senate vice chair, said that since the privilege fee is reviewed every three years, the potential for an economy upswing would leave Counseling Services overfunded.

Conner said senators should be aware of the message they are sending to the Legislature when students are willing to fill in the shortfalls.

"It is naive to think no one

FLU FIGHTER

Nicole Donnert | COLLEGIAN
Flu shots are being administered at several locations in Manhattan, including the Dillons Pharmacy and Lafene Health Center. With flu season beginning in December, physicians say now is the ideal time to get a flu shot.

Lafene officials encouraging flu prevention

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One shot, a 20-minute wait, and two weeks later you're off to a healthy, flu-free winter.

Or are you?

When the leaves start falling and temperatures become cooler, students across the nation begin lining up for the miracle shot that will get them through their busy winter months.

Flu shots

"The biggest reason students get their shots is because the flu usually hits during one of the busier times of the year," said Earl Reppert, medical director and physician at Lafene Health Center. "The flu hits several times in December in the weeks leading up to finals – it's an unfortunate time to be sick for four or five days."

Carol Kennedy, director of health education and promotion at Lafene, said that each year, the flu tends to affect college students, especially those suffering from upper-respiratory problems.

Therefore, she said, Lafene strongly encourages students to receive a flu shot.

"We recommend that students with any ongoing respiratory condition get a shot," she said.

"We also recommend the shot to students that don't want to be bothered with the flu all winter long.

"Anyone can get a flu shot – you don't have to any of those conditions."

In addition, as the temperature drops outside, a majority of people choose to stay indoors and not circulate fresh air, a breeding ground for bacteria and the flu virus, Kennedy said.

"People get indoors more, where there is no fresh air and people start to rebreathe everyone else's air," she said.

When Holly Mayer, freshman in biology, went to Lafene last week for a meningitis and hepatitis shot, she also decided to get her flu shot.

Although Mayer does not suffer from respiratory problems, she said the nurse encouraged her to get the shot for the first time.

"She said I should get it because I'm living in the dorms," she said.

Since the virus changes from year to year, those wanting a shot are required to get a new one at the beginning of each flu season, which is from October to early March.

"Every year, there's a study of which flu is going around, and they develop the shot for those strains of flu," Kennedy said.

Reserves provide discipline

By Pete Elsasser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Erin Green joined the Army Reserve as a junior in high school for the challenge and to help pay for college.

She's developed leadership skills and discipline. She's also a better citizen, she said.

But if she had to do basic training over again, she's not sure she would.

"I hated almost every minute of it," she said. "It was miserable and really hard, but it made me grow up a lot, I think."

Green said she joined partly because her sister joined a year before she did.

"Sibling rivalry was definitely a factor," she said.

The money she receives was a factor as well – including tuition assistance, a monthly stipend and being paid for attending Army drill every month.

Green said she pays attention to world events, especially since her sister was called to active duty after Sept. 11.

"I kind of panic if anything happens in the political arena," she said. "I have to talk to my professors to let them know it may happen, especially with Iraq."

Green said she plans to graduate in December 2003, and she hasn't decided what she'll be doing after that.

"I'm not thinking about re-enlisting. I think I've served my time," she said. "Because of the political situation, it's gotten more iffy. I'm glad I did it, but I don't know if I'd do it again. It's had a good impact on me.

"If someone had told me before what it would be like, I don't know if I could have done it."

Student heeds call to service

By Leslie Knoyer
DAILY KENT STATER

KENT, Ohio - For one weekend a month, Courtney Hugill is part of Unit 347 in Farrell, Pa., where she trains in case she is called to serve in a war.

Hugill never received a call to serve in the war in Afghanistan, but she knows it is always a possibility.

She did get a momentary scare on Sept. 11, 2001.

"One of my commanders called and verified my phone number and address just in case they needed me," Hugill said.

"I figured in the eight years I was signed up to be in the reserve something would happen."

Staff Sgt. Elizabeth Moten, political science major at Kent State University, has the same understanding about her Army responsibilities, which include being called to war.

"If I'm told 'Pack up your stuff,' I go. So be it," Moten said.

Part of her time serving in the Army Reserve is doing her advanced individual training as a petroleum supply specialist.

For the remainder of the month, she lives in Ravenna, Ohio, and attends Kent State working toward her degree in nursing.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Legislators, not students, must fix budget problems

Student Senate on Thursday night overrode Student Body President Zac Cook's veto of a bill to increase student privilege fees to help fund Counseling Services.

Counseling Services also depends on state contributions. They have suffered recent budget cuts from the state, along with many other K-State programs.

Although we do not support the loss in services of K-State programs, we agree with Cook's decision to show Kansas legislators that K-State will not cover state budget shortfalls.

K-State students should not bear the burden of state budget problems.

Student Senate's decision to override Cook's veto not only results in higher privilege fees for services funded, in part, by the state.

It also shows Kansas legislators that they do not need to find ways to support higher education. The override, in effect, was a vote for students to shoulder the load.

That is unacceptable.

Nearly 500 people rallied Tuesday night to support higher education and denounce budget cuts – not to pay more in privilege fees.

Cook's decision to veto the bill was the correct one.

We can't show legislators that we can pick up the slack for the budget shortfalls they are supposed to be fixing.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Macs rule digital world

RENEE MCDANIEL

For those of you who are not in the school of journalism, I realize the PC-versus-Mac debate might seem stupid. However, there is a world outside Bill Gates' reach – a world of high-definition graphics with rich, vibrant colors and programs that maneuver with such ease that even those who are a fry short of a Happy Meal could find happiness on the World Wide Web.

To illustrate my point, I provide my top five reasons why Macs outweigh PCs:

5. Transition is made easier to a Mac from a PC because the applications are the same as those you already know. However, with Mac OS X (10), there are exclusive features to improve on the Windows counterparts. Programs are also easily transferable between PCs and Macs because the networking is the same.

If you work on Microsoft Word at home and transfer it to a Mac on campus, the files will work both places. This is extremely useful for those of us who hate to carry around disks.

Also, Macs are easy to use. They have built-in Ethernet and connect via USB or Fire Wire, two other industry standards.

4. Macs are one of the most beautiful pieces of machinery ever invented. Where PCs settle for stickers and plastic screws, Macs have laser-etched text, along with an elegant optical mouse, tough, colorfast polycarbonate cases and spring-loaded screws.

The iPod is amazing because it is about the size of a guy's wallet and can hold up to 100 CDs. And what other computer is able to move so that everyone in the room can view the flat screen monitor?

Also, the new iBook and Powerbook can go everywhere you go. Light, thin, bright and clear, are four things not associated with PC laptops, but are facts about the Mac products. They can switch between Ethernet, dial-up and wireless connections with just a few clicks, unlike the messy reconfiguration style of PCs.

3. From digital music to photography, the Mac is unmatchable. Not only does iTunes turn the Mac into an amazing digital stereo, there is literally no match to the iPod on the market today. You can convert music from CDs to MP3s and make play lists, with one-button burning features.

It can hold more than 4,000 songs. How many hours of music is that? Enough music to last you to western Kansas and back multiple times. And as far as photos go, from the time you enter the disk or plug in the computer, iPhoto pops up and walks you through all the steps needed to save, organize, enjoy and share your digital photography.

2. Macs don't crash. If you are too familiar with the infamous blue screen, a Mac is your key to interruption-free work. With the new OS X operating system, the memory is fully protected, and applications can't conflict with the OS or one another. This means a Mac doesn't lock up and tell you that you can't do something, right in the middle of your 14-page paper.

1. The Mac ... it just works. Macs come with USB, Fire Wire, Ethernet, modem, built-in antennae for wireless networks and flawless integration of hardware and software. Turn it on and you are ready to roll. There is no messy setup involved.

If you are still not convinced, I invite you to check out the Mac Web site at apple.com where a version of this list, along with more explanation, is available.

Once you go Mac, you never go back.

PC: powerful computers

AMBER KOEHN

Once upon a time, in a galaxy far, far away, there were no Macs. There was no Windows or even MS-DOS. The phrase PC didn't mean "politically correct" or IBM-compatible – it just meant personal computer.

And the minute there were two different platforms, the battle to declare which was better, a PC or a Mac, began. Nowadays, mention Mac and Windows and it's guaranteed to become a name-calling war.

We all know how it goes: my PC is a great husband. He takes out the trash, takes care of the kids and even does windows. He's very intelligent to boot. Or: My Mac is a great wife. She's beautiful, intelligent, does the laundry and is an excellent mother.

But if you think about it, all of our computers and operating systems are more similar than they are different – they are all tools.

The simple truth, from a functional standpoint, is that it shouldn't matter what type of computer you own, as long as it performs the functions you need it to.

I've used both PCs and Macs, so I have experience to weigh each side fairly. But, since I'm writing this in the newsroom for the second time (apple.com swears Macs don't crash, giving people the "blue screen of death," but I have proof otherwise), it seems only fair I end the debate and stop the fight.

Simply, the PC is the best computer built – bar none.

One of the reasons PCs are so attractive to many is choice. Until recently, Apple hardware was limited – you basically got what Apple gave you. Also consider that, for many years, before OS X, multitasking on the Mac was pretty pathetic, if nonexistent. It was too confusing to figure out how to find everything on a Mac when all you had to do on a PC was right click the mouse.

Also, available PC software significantly outnumbers the Mac. Plus, several programs originally designed for Macs are now accessible for PC at a lower price.

PCs are cheap. Just consider the cost of any regular laptop compared to an iBook. Macs are more expensive because only Apple is licensed to produce them.

Any number of companies – Sony, Dell, Gateway, among others – can market PC products. You can walk into any computer retailer and build your own system for a few hundred dollars. You can't do that with Macs.

PCs also are the industry standard in the workplace. With faster processors, more mainstream software and a diverse product offering, they remain an attractive alternative to the Macintosh.

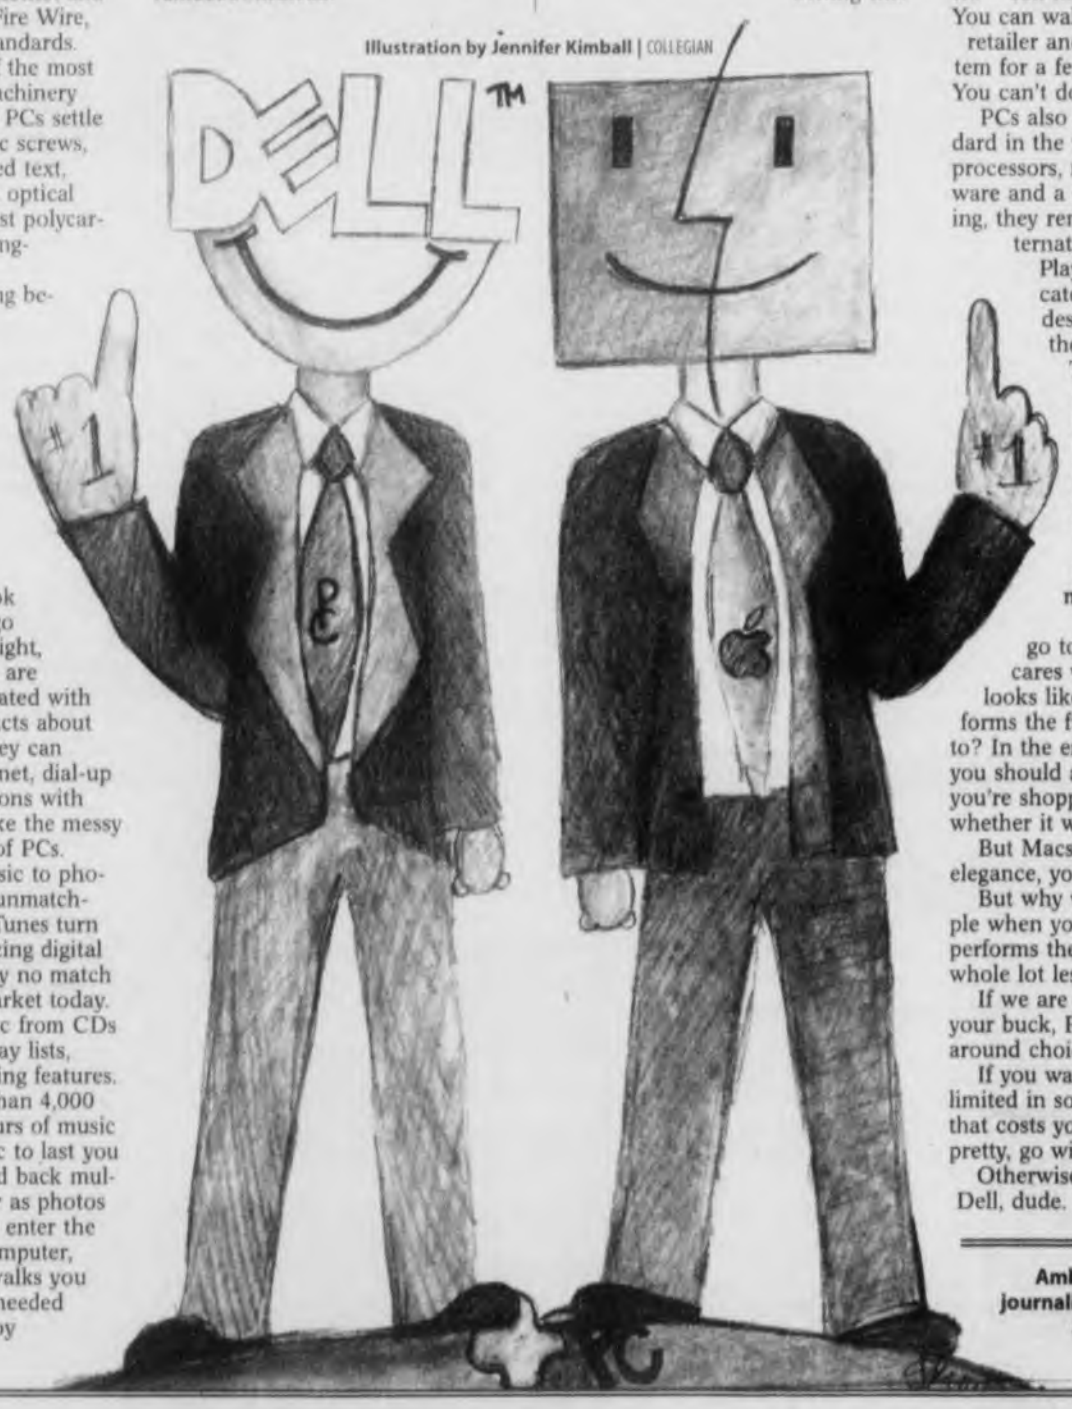
Playing the devil's advocate, Apple brings style, design and innovation to the computer industry. The refined iMac2, stupefying titanium PowerBook, mighty iBook and magnificent QuickSilver G4 desktop are all works of art.

Somebody stop me. I just can't bring myself to say any more.

If you want style, go to a fashion show. Who cares what your computer looks like, so long as it performs the functions you need it to? In the end, the only question you should ask yourself when you're shopping for a computer is whether it will do the job well.

But Macs have style, class and elegance, you say.

But why would you buy an Apple when you can get a PC, which performs the same functions, for a whole lot less?



If we are talking more bang for your buck, PCs are a better all-around choice than Macs.

If you want a computer that is limited in software and hardware, that costs you more, but looks pretty, go with a Mac.

Otherwise, it's time to get a Dell, dude.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

This is the Manhattan Fire Department, and D-Day polished our poles really well.

To the person who was wondering about the people who are pro-abortion: I have always pondered that myself. But my question is, Why do they think it's better for a child to be killed than not wanted?

Here is a real deal: $2.50 Coronas all night. That's $26.64 a gallon.

DCSA quote of the day: "Why must I fail at every attempt at masonry?"

To the person who called in last week asking about what happened to the goth couple: Here's an answer. We're married now. She graduated, and I graduate in December. Next step: get the hell out of Kansas.

To the person who called the Fourum complaining about anti-war protesters: No. 1, we have the right to protest government policies, as guaranteed by the Constitution. No. 2, I assume you've already enlisted so that you can participate in the Iraqi invasion. Hope you survive it.

Whatever happened to the bike cops on campus? Those guys were hot.

I heard the pathological liar with the seven boyfriends also steals.

Don't be reckless with other people's hearts, and don't put up with people who are reckless with yours.

To the guy in Durland Hall who ordered pizza on Thursday afternoon: Thanks for the tip. Next time, I'll spit in your pizza.

Here's my fashion tip for winter: pea coats are in, and French manicures are totally out.

Top three ways to get run over on campus: use crosswalks, but walk slow. Don't use crosswalks. Use crosswalks, walk slow and give me a dirty look.

What's brown and sticky? A stick.

You know your roommate's pathetic whenever that roll that was hidden lasts about six times longer than it would have in the bathroom.

The Toys 'R' Us giraffe is hilarious.

Looks like somebody has the hots for the British geography lab teacher, or should I say "precipitation?"

You know what really sucks? When your roommate steals your stuff and sells it on eBay.

For the people who believe smoking should be banned on campus: Smokers have rights, too. This is supposed to be a free country, and banning it would, therefore, not be freedom.

I hope it's not against K-State policy to sleep with your T.A. from last semester, because one of my students is quite hot.

Hey, Jason, come on. Pick up the phone and call the Fourum. You can do it, man.

Simpsons quote of the day: "Principal Skinner, I got car-sick in your office."

Oh, look. The ants have come to carry away my studio. Fun.

Isn't it weird the way all the counties and the government are fighting over which area they can try the two sniper suspects in, all based on which area has the death penalty? Shouldn't they be proven guilty and assumed innocent? I thought that was the way it worked here.

If you try to microwave the ninth-floor guinea pig, it's going to pee on you.

Two words: naughty biscuits.

It's a good thing that Petey finally moved, but did he have to move in with me?

You know people are from small towns when they get excited about glitter gel pens.

Forget lemonade. When life gives you lemons, make lemon margaritas.

My roommate and I actually have a competition on who has to change the toilet paper roll, and yes, you better believe I'll get out a new toilet paper roll and leave the last ply on there for her to change.

To hell with athletics. Support the arts.

Is there anyone left out in this world who just wants to snuggle?

Drive-thru liquor store business proves successful

Community accepting new service, competitors not worried about sales

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Mark Bylkas made his drive-thru service available to the public, he was worried.

"At first, I thought people would be a little scared of having a drive-thru liquor store," said Bylkas, owner of 11th Street Liquor Store.

However, one week later, Bylkas is finding that the city of Manhattan is responding positively to the first drive-thru store in the community, with about 30 percent of last week's sales coming from the new convenience, he said.

The idea of adding the drive-thru to his liquor store developed slowly during the past couple of years, when Bylkas would go skiing in the Colorado mountains in the winter.

Before his ski group headed to the slopes, they would always stop and buy their alcohol at drive-thru liquor stores along the highway, he said.

As a result, Bylkas decided to bring the idea to Manhattan, and he has been surprised at its success.

"I was expecting a lot of flack from the older people," he said.

"But I would be willing to bet you that 90 percent of the drive-thru customers are over 35 years old.

"What I found so far is that the younger crowd keeps coming in and shopping because they don't know what they want and have to look around."

In addition, Bylkas said he initially had a number of concerns, including the possible congestion the drive-thru might have.

Therefore, in order to ease long lines on the weekend, Bylkas has one employee ring up the order while another one works as a "runner" and fills it.

However, Bylkas still had another concern – showing identification.

"The biggest issue is the ID," he said. "At the top of our drive-thru value menu we have a sign that states we refuse to serve anyone intoxicated, and they must have a valid ID. If they appear intoxicated, we prefer them to park their car and to come inside.

> "I was expecting a lot of flack from the older people. But I would be willing to bet you that 90 percent of the drive-thru customers are over 35 years old."

> OWNER OF 11TH STREET LIQUOR STORE

"So far, every person in the drive-thru gets carded."

While the new service at 11th Street Liquor has increased business, area liquor stores said they have not been affected.

"There's never been too much out there that has affected us," said Rodney Craig, night manager at Rickels Liquor. "We have the most competitive prices in town."

In addition, Craig said the drive-thru would be more of an inconvenience to his store.

"You would lose a lot of impulse buying," he said. "It's also really hard to ID people through that little window – you'd have to hire an extra person just to work the drive-thru.

"It would be convenient for the customers, but not for the workers."

Mike Towne, owner of the Library Discount Liquor Store, said his store prefers working with their customers face-to-face rather than having a drive-thru service.

"My personal preference is to do business face to face," he said. "Drive-thru is a nice convenience but probably not anything we would offer."

Although the neighborhood of liquor stores has not made any plans for drive-thru services, Bylkas said he feels the trend will catch on in the near future.

"I think that now we've pioneered it, I would not be surprised to see at least two or three more within the next year," he said.

"One thing about the liquor business is that 100 percent of it is derived from taking a piece of the pie from someone else."

Name of Ackert addition to honor former dean

By Pete Elsasser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State received approval from the Kansas Board of Regents in October to name the Ackert Hall addition in honor of John Chalmers, former dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said the decision to name the addition was suggested by the College of Arts and Sciences. Rawson said Stephen White, interim dean of the college, wrote a letter to President Jon Wefald suggesting that the building be named after Chalmers.

Rawson said the board has official responsibility to name buildings. He said the proposal was submitted and approved at the October meeting.

While Ackert Hall will keep its name, the addition will be formally dedicated as Chalmers Hall in spring 2003.

"Ackert Hall is an Arts and Sciences building," Rawson said.

"And the Chalmers addition will provide space for the Division of Biology and for the Terry C. Johnson Center for Basic Cancer Research."

Chalmers came to K-State in 1963 and served as dean of arts and sciences until 1969 when he became the university's vice president for academic affairs.

He went back to teaching in 1980 as a professor of economics and finance, and retired in 1985.

Rawson said that because Chalmers' influence helped to modernize departments in the arts and sciences college, naming the addition after the former dean is well-deserved.

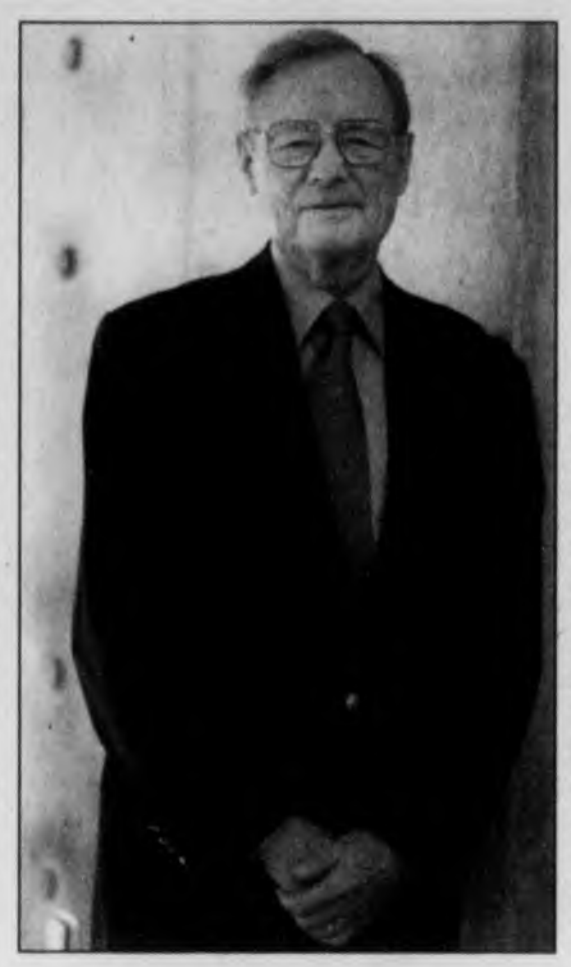
"He certainly pushed for the creation of the Division of Biology," Rawson said. "He was a big part of the success that these programs have now. I think that it's highly appropriate to honor him like this. He really was a leader for the university."

Wayne Nafziger, university distinguished professor of economics, worked with Chalmers when the honoree served as vice president for academic affairs.

"I think he is highly competent, and I think he had a good vision of the direction K-State's academics should go," he said.

"He did a great deal for the university. He's very deserving."

Chalmers said he was surprised but very honored when he heard the addition would be named after him.



He said that when he came to K-State in 1963 as dean, President James McCain said he wanted to upgrade arts and sciences substantially. Chalmers said he consolidated departments including botany, zoology and microbiology to create the Division of Biology.

Eliminating departments is difficult, he said, because department heads have concerns while younger professors were in favor of the consolidation.

"I think that's why they're such strong programs now," he said. "In the end, it helped increase the quality dramatically."

While Chalmers said he appreciates the honor very much, he isn't taking himself too seriously.

"It's a very great honor, especially while I'm still alive," he said. "Usually they do these things after you're dead."

Former dean of the College of Arts and Sciences John Chalmers will be the namesake of the new Ackert Hall addition in spring 2003. He was involved with the university from 1963 until his retirement in1985. Karen Mikols COLLEGIAN

Professor invites students to join Earthwatch trip to Ecuador

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State professor is planning an Earthwatch expedition to monitor Ecuador cloud forest birds during winter break and wants to take interested students with her.

Dusty Becker, assistant professor in natural resource management, said cloud forests differ from rain forests because they are lush due to ocean fog, and not rain.

Becker is the principle investigator of the Earthwatch expedition dealing with Ecuador forest birds.

Becker said the Earthwatch Institute, which promotes the conservation of natural resources and cultural heritage, has had trouble getting people to participate.

"Since Sept. 11, there hasn't been as much international travel," she said. "Earthwatch has not been able to fill spaces for expeditions, so since I'm a professor here I thought it'd make sense to give our students an opportunity to participate."

Students who go will complete nine days of field research in the mountains as a part of the 14-day expedition.

"We'll observe hummingbird species and see if they're using the refuge," Becker said. "We're also interested in what flowers the birds are using and how the local indigenous people are doing."

Students who go on the expedition will earn three credit hours from K-State in forestry problems, which is a 600-level course for graduates.

"It'll be all hands-on," Becker said. "No quizzes or tests."

The expedition is from Dec. 29 to Jan. 11, and costs $1,600 for tuition and field time. Interested students should plan and pay for their own airfare, which Becker said usually costs around $800.

Becker, a former Peace Corps volunteer in Kenya, said her experience in the Peace Corps sparked an interest.

"It opened doors and my eyes to diversity in a more international sense," she said. "I became more concerned and that concern led me to want to know how to make both local people and wildlife species coexist."

Becker talked about several things students should know before going to Ecuador.

"The two most important things to bring is a mosquito net and rubber boots – everything else is what you would have to go camping anywhere in Kansas," Becker said.

She said students interested in going must be in good physical condition because there will be a lot of hiking involved.

"Students should be able to easily walk five miles with a pack on their back and like to be outdoors," she said.

Lafene Health Center can give students any medications they need before going.

Sonya Conrad, of the allergy and immunization clinic, said the types of medications students should take will depend on individual health and previous immunizations.

She said students can sign up for a free foreign travel consultation at Lafene, and a nurse would make sure the student was properly prepared.

Becker said students who go on the expedition will meet others who like to travel, and will learn a lot.

"It might be one of the coolest things you've ever done in your life," Becker said.

FLU SHOT | Lafene encourages student vaccination to prevent flu

flu mutates very rapidly and changes from year to year, and that's why there's a new shot every season."

However, while past research shows its effectiveness, some doubt the benefits of getting the shot.

"It's difficult to determine how beneficial a flu shot has been," Kennedy said. "Studies have indicated that a person who gets their shot doesn't get the flu or they get a mild case that doesn't put them out for a long time."

Although people have their doubts, Reppert said that overall, the shot is about 75 to 90 percent effective.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Web site, an annual flu shot is the best way to reduce the chances of catching the flu.

In addition, the Web site said the best time to get a flu shot is between October and November, since flu season in the United States usually peaks between late December and early March.

One thing students need to take into consideration is the time it takes for the flu shot to be effective, Reppert said.

"Since it's part of the actual flu virus being injected, your body has to develop its own antibodies," he said. "That takes about two weeks for that to happen."

At Lafene, flu shots are available throughout the year with walk-in appointments. Student shots are available for $7 and faculty and staff shots are $10.

After the shot has been given, individuals are required to stay for an additional 20 minutes to monitor any allergic reactions, Kennedy said.

Commissioner of tailgating to come to K-State, raise money for anti-hunger charity

Coke sponsors man to travel to football games to research tailgating

By Amy Link
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Imagine getting paid to tailgate.

Joe Cahn, who has dubbed himself the commissioner of tailgating, does just that.

Cahn travels from football stadium to football stadium in his 40-foot motor coach researching tailgating habits, and he's coming to the K-State versus Nebraska game on Saturday.

"I have the best job in the world," Cahn said.

Cahn, originally from New Orleans, said he owned a cooking school when he decided to make a career change.

Cahn wanted to combine his love of food and football, so decided to sell the cooking school to pursue his dream.

In 1996, he convinced Louisiana's tourism commission to let him encourage people to come to New Orleans for the Super Bowl.

Cahn enjoyed this so much that he wanted to expand beyond Louisiana.

"I knew there was very little research about tailgating, so I decided to convince people to sponsor me, " he said.

During Cahn's first year on the road, he only went to NFL stadiums.

After the encouragement of fans he met, he decided to tour college stadiums as well.

This year, Cahn's travels are being sponsored by Coca-Cola in exchange for his tailgating research.

Cahn convinced Coke to donate money to the Share Our Strength Foundation, an anti-hunger charity. Coke will donate $1 to the charity for every mile Cahn drives.

Alex Cook, Cahn's spokesman, said Cahn already has raised a large amount of money for the charity. Cook said that so far this year, Cahn has burned 34,286 gallons of gas.

In fact, Cahn said that when he rolls into K-State, one of his favorite places, he will have traveled about 19,000 miles this year.

Cahn said he wasn't sure whether he would come to K-State or go to the University of Kansas, so he let people vote on his Web site, www.tailgating.com.

"I got hundreds of e-mails that told me to go to K-State," he said.

And he said he knows why.

"K-State has a lot more (parking lot) space than most places, especially Nebraska. K-State also has a great color – purple really shows up," said Cahn, who visited K-State two years ago.

"The number-one job of a fan is to show your colors, and K-State does that."

Cahn said tailgating provides a great atmosphere for students to network with alumni.

He encouraged students to invite their parents to join the fun.

"Tailgating provides a good opportunity for parents to meet their child's friends in a non-threatening way," he said. "It also is a chance to get free food, which is always important for college students."

Cahn said the type of interaction among people that tailgating provides is really special.

"Everywhere I go, I see people talking without distractions. (Tailgating) has become the new community social," Cahn said.

PRESEASON DANCE

Women's recruits look solid

Patterson expects next year's class to contribute

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Deb Patterson should have no problem filling a full bench next season.

Knock on wood.

The women's basketball team has announced the signing of five recruits, all of whom will suit up for the Cats next season.

Patterson said all five will be expected to contribute for the Cats right from start.

"I'm real excited to think that these are young players that are going to work their way into a rotation," she said. "I don't look at any of these five and say, 'You know, it's going to be a couple of years before they start to put the pieces together.'

"I think they bring the type of experience and talent to the floor that early in their careers and early in their season, they are going to be on the floor, spotting some of these veteran players some minutes and learning what it means to assume a major responsibility early in their career."

All of K-State signees are from the Midwest. Tiffany Brooks is from Leavenworth, Kan.; Claire Coggins is from Lee's Summit, Mo.; Jetta "Twiggy" McIntyre is from Sapulpa, Okla.; Shanda Murdoch is from Oklahoma City, Okla.; and Naytanda Smith is from Enid, Okla.

Patterson said it shouldn't be surprising that all of these future Wildcats are from the Midwest because that's where K-State does most of its recruiting, she said.

"I certainly feel it is an area we have had a lot of success in and will be an area we will always start in," Patterson said. "We're always going to look in the state, then slowly work around our state, in the region, because we tend to be the kind of program that attracts young people that bring these Midwest values – hard work, commitment, you know – work-12 hours-a-day-for-your-paycheck type of a mentality."

Perhaps the biggest addition

Cats to use tournament mentality

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's time to see how good they really are.

The K-State women's basketball team will tip off its 2002-03 campaign, for real, tonight when it faces Ball State in the first round of the Women's National Invitational Tournament.

It will be the first legitimate action for the Cats since the NCAA tournament last season, where they rolled all the way to the Sweet 16.

But they had an entire year to work out all the wrinkles and problems before those games. This time, they begin their schedule in that similar type of format.

"It's got to be the same mentality because if you lose, you're done. It's do or die," sophomore guard Laurie Koehn said. "Really, we're just ready to get a chance to play our first game of the season."

This is K-State's first appearance in the preseason WNIT tournament.

The format allows K-State to be host to all rounds if its attendance is higher than the other schools in the bracket.

Of course, the Cats will have to win as well.

"In the WNIT, fan support is an absolute critical aspect of us remaining here in Manhattan," Coach Deb Patterson said. "We understand we

Mahoney content to trade recognition for team's success

It just doesn't matter to her.

Kendra Wecker, Nicole Ohlde and Laurie Koehn, K-State's Kansas natives, have been getting a lot of the credit for what happened for K-State women's basketball program last year – and for what might happen this year.

But there is another piece to the puzzle people seem to forget Megan Mahoney.

But the sophomore guard said her getting recognition, or rather not getting it, isn't important to her.

"It's not really about who gets the pub or who gets the credit," Mahoney said. "Those three are tremendous players and they deserve that credit. I'm just doing what I do and try to fulfill my role and help the team out as much as I can.

"Whether that gets me in the paper or not, really doesn't matter to me."

Mahoney said her focus is helping the team by making herself better.

"I'm just trying to be more mature out there," she said. "Now I kind of know what it's all about a little bit. I'm just going to try and contribute however I can, whether that's in passing, assists, rebounds or whatever."

Contribution is what Megan Mahoney has been all about so far this season.

In the Wildcats' two exhibition games, Team Concept and the Greg Maddux won his 13th-straight Gold Glove, and St. Louis Cardinals players won four of nine National League awards Thursday.

Maddux, who extended his own NL record for pitchers, moved within three of the overall record, held by Jim Kaat.

Cardinals second baseman Fernando Vina, shortstop Edgar Renteria, third baseman Scott Rolen and outfielder Jim Edmonds all were winners.

Edmonds has won three straight NL Gold Gloves after winning three in the AL.

Acoustic music receiving warm welcome at Radina's

Coffee shops are attractive to some college students because they can offer a relaxed, quiet atmosphere for studying.

But one local coffee shop has been making some noise.

Radina's Coffee House & Bakery, 616 N. Manhattan Ave., recently added live music to accompany their café lattes. Since September, local artists have been invited to play acoustic sets, Matt Johnson, employee and organizer, said.

"We used to have live music here a couple of years ago," Johnson, senior in journalism, said. "Then it stopped. But I started talking to my boss about bringing it back. Finally, I told him if he wanted, I'd be in charge of it."

The sets begin at 8:30 p.m. every Monday. The artists normally play soft jazz, singer/songwriter music and other soft acoustic rock. The response to the new venue has been somewhat overwhelming, Johnson said.

"It started with just Monday nights," he said. "But then it sort of exploded and I had to turn a few musicians away. Now we're going to start offering it Sunday and Monday nights."

Most patrons enjoy Radina's due to the atmosphere, good food, coffee and friendly service, Emily Van Eman, senior in geography, said. She said she was surprised with the addition of live music.

"I really didn't know that they had live music on Mondays," Van Eman said. "I normally come here to study because it's quiet. But, I'll come back expecting it, and I'll see what other types of performers they might have."

The surprise was not a bad one, and Van Eman said the addition of another venue for performers is good because it gives them another artistic outlet.

Karen Mikols | COLLEGIAN
At Radina's Coffee House & Bakery, Tommy Lee Holder plays the saxophone while a patron studies during a Monday night with live music. The coffee shop offers an outlet for local musicians.

"This place can give some people a place to come out and play," Van Eman said. "I guess the good thing about it is it's taking some people from the community and giving them an opportunity to perform."

The venue offers an atmosphere for some musicians to broaden their horizons. Tommy Lee Holder, saxophonist, has played in several bands that included a Dixie-land band, a big band and the Tommy Lee Band, which plays an assortment of styles.

Radina's offers a venue that fits well with his solo project, Just Tommy, Holder said.

"I love to play," he said. "I grew up with it, and I was self-taught. I've played for almost 50 years, and I've enjoyed getting out and playing. My wife says I'd rather play than eat."

Holder finds the intimate atmosphere of the coffeehouse to be beneficial to both artist and audience. He said he hopes his music helps some students relax and work on their homework.

"At first I was nervous. I wasn't sure how some of the college folks would like what I was going to play," he said. "But I got settled down and played. I was hoping that I didn't bother anyone by being too loud.

"Afterwards, I got compliments from a lot of people. Some even offered to help me load up my equipment, which I declined, but it was a nice gesture. I'd like to come back and play because the people here are good people."

Live Music at Radina's Coffee House & Bakery
When: 8:30 p.m. every Sunday and Monday

Lori Wilson, senior in public relations, said she has frequented Aggieville's coffeehouses throughout her college career because the atmosphere is good for studying.

"I actually prefer if there is no music because I usually come in here to study," she said. "But I have come in here a few times and grabbed a drink to see what's going on. I think the music helps to bring in different crowds."

Wilson said she hopes people support the venue.

"I think it's awesome to have another venue," she said.

"I think Manhattan needs to compete more with Lawrence for local music, so any type of local music we can get to play here is good."

Since the reintroduction of music to Radina's, word of mouth and local support has kept people listening.

If the venue keeps receiving support, the tradition of live music will be around for a long time, Johnson said.

"I'm hoping that if we get good feedback then we could do it again next semester," he said. "I'd like to keep it on the same night and see where it goes."

Folk singers to present benefit concert for Audubon Society

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two singers will help preserve nature through art.

Celtic folk singer Connie Dover and folk singer Ann Zimmerman will perform Saturday at the Manhattan Arts Center. The show will benefit the Northern Flint Hills Audubon land preservation projects.

Jan Garton, treasurer of the Flint Hills Audubon Society, said the money raised will go toward preserving the Michel-Ross Audubon Nature Preserve.

The preserve encompasses 25 acres of undeveloped land near Stagg Hill Road. Besides being home to many native trees, the area also attracts song birds to the natural habitat that are rarely found in other parts of the area, Garton said.

"We want to protect the area from ever being developed, which will cost about $5,000 in attorney fees and other costs," she said. "We want to make sure the natural area is preserved forever."

Dover has released four solo albums and was the lead singer in the Kansas City, Mo.-based Scaraglen, a Celtic band.

She will be accompanied by guitarist and bouzouki player Roger Landes.

Zimmerman grew up in Kansas, and she also sang at the dedication ceremony of the Tallgrass Prairie National Preserve.

She now lives near Salina, Kan., and she has released two albums, "Love & Weather" in 1993 and "Canned Goods" in 1999. She won the 2002 Flint Hills Gathering songwriting contest as well.

Garton said she enjoys both performers and feels they are appropriate for the type of audience interested in helping the Audubon Society.

"They both sing about nature and those kinds of things," she said.

"Zimmerman has many good songs about the natural world. I think the people who care about their music will also care about nature."

Tickets: $15 for students, $18 for the general public, available at the arts center, the Dusty Bookshelf and Claflin Books

IN BRIEF

HBO loses Emmy bid

HBO failed in its bid to win the Emmy Awards away from the major broadcast networks but helped drive up the price those networks will pay to keep the ceremony.

The board of governors of the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences agreed Wednesday night to an eight-year, $52 million deal with ABC, CBS, Fox and NBC, academy chairman Bryce Zabel said.

That more than doubles the $3 million per year the academy had been receiving under its recently expired network deal. HBO had offered a five-year, $50 million deal.

BOX OFFICE

Eminem raps competition as '8 Mile' debuts atop box office

Eminem topped the movie competition as his film debut "8 Mile" collected $51.2 million in its opening weekend.

That was more than double the amount of second-place "The Santa Clause 2," which had $24.7 million in its second week.

Eminem attracted not only his traditional teen fan base, but many curious non-fans to the story about a poor boy trying to make it in the world of hip-hop.

"I think everybody was wondering what all the fuss was about," box-office analyst Robert Bucksbaum, of Reel Source Inc., said. "People who wouldn't necessarily spend money on his album or a soundtrack were just drawn in by the music, the critics and the director, Curtis Hanson."

The top 20 movies at North American theaters Friday through Sunday, followed by distribution studio and gross, as compiled Monday by Exhibitor Relations Co. Inc. and Nielsen EDI Inc. are as follows:

1. "8 Mile," Universal, $51.2 million
2. "The Santa Clause 2," Disney, $24.7 million
3. "The Ring," DreamWorks, $15.5 million
4. "I Spy," Sony, $8.8 million
5. "Jackass: The Movie," Paramount, $7.1 million
6. "My Big Fat Greek Wedding," IFC Films, $5.8 million
7. "Sweet Home Alabama," Disney, $3.8 million
8. "Ghost Ship," Warner Bros., $3.1 million
9. "Femme Fatale," Warner Bros., $2.7 million
10. "Frida," Miramax, $2.7 million
11. "Punch-Drunk Love," Sony, $2.5 million
12. "Red Dragon," Universal, $1.5 million
13. "Bowling for Columbine," MGM-UA, $1.5 million
14. "Star Wars: Episode II — Attack of the Clones," Fox-IMAX, $1.3 million
15. "Tuck Everlasting," Disney, $1.08 million
16. "Jonah: A VeggieTales Movie," Artisan, $1.06 million
17. "Barbershop," MGM, $1.05 million
18. "Brown Sugar," Fox Searchlight, $1.03 million
19. "The Tuxedo," DreamWorks, $649,104
20. "The Transporter," Fox, $588,301

SENATE | Senators, Cook disagree on reason behind funding increase

at the state level is looking at what we are doing," she said. "The economy of the state of Kansas will turn. We don't need to provide Counseling Services with an excess that we won't get back. Even though it is only a few cents, it all adds up and it all matters."

Fred Newton, director of Counseling Services, said that if he were to request the total shortfall monies, the privilege-fee increase would be up to 10 percent.

Cook, though, said that point is irrelevant.

"It doesn't matter if we are funding 2 percent or 10 percent of the shortfall," he said. "Just because you aren't funding all of it doesn't mean you aren't funding the shortfall."

Despite the state budget cuts, Julie Quackenbush, governmental relations chair, said Counseling Services is too important to the university for its programs to be underfunded.

"The one main thing in life that you really can not mess with is health care," she said. "Most people may not use the service, but for the people that do, it is an extremely vital aspect of this university."

Travis Weigel, arts and sciences senator, voted to uphold the veto because he said he wanted to send a message to the Legislature.

"This is our time to say no more cuts in education, not that we will fund them to get them by," Weigel said.

Quackenbush, however, said the issue should not be sending a message to legislators, but instead protecting the students they represent.

"Senate needs to be proactive," she said. "We need to focus on stopping problems for our students before they start."

KEMP | Benefit concert to raise funds for former student's education fund

said that although he has played at two other benefit concerts for Kemp, tonight's concert will be different.

He said the main difference will be the emphasis of the show.

"We wanted to make this one more about Ali and not the bands playing," Woody said.

"We don't know if it will bring more people or less people, but hopefully more."

Sophomore Lindsay Courtney, friend of Kemp and fellow member of Pi Beta Phi sorority, said this show would be special.

"We've had a lot of events in Kansas City, and not a lot of stuff has gone on in Manhattan," she said. "I think it's cool that they came up with it."

Among the features of the show will be an intermission between acts in which people who knew Kemp will be encouraged to speak about her.

Also between acts there will be a showing of the "Ali Forever" DVD, which the Kemp family created to commemorate her life.

"Hopefully, that middle portion will be a chance to remember her and her life," Woody said.

Both Woody and members of Regis Page knew Kemp in high school and have prepared specially written songs to perform at the concert.

"Become an Angel" is a song written by Woody on the night he learned of Kemp's death. "No Regrets" will be played by Regis Page.

Woody said he believes a concert is a good way to pay tribute to Kemp.

"I've heard many people say that her life was like a song – it was written by one person ,but it touches many," Woody said.

While Bickley did not know Kemp personally, he said he was affected by the circumstances of her death.

"I remember hearing about it on the news when it happened and that it was tragic," Bickley said.

"As a musician, it touches me, and I wanted to do something to help out."

Courtney said activities, such as tonight's concert, that commemorate Kemp are helpful to the healing process.

"People showing they care helps in so many ways," she said.

Lehan said he thinks community involvement has been a key support system in helping people deal with the tragedy of Kemp's death.

Woody agreed but said the Kansas City community was much more involved than the Manhattan community.

"In Kansas City, the community was amazing," he said. "I think the community responded very honestly and was doing everything they possibly could for the cause.

"Many people in Manhattan don't know the cause. Hopefully, this will be a chance to get the word out to people that don't know about it."

MAHONEY | Sophomore's contributions won't go unnoticed this year

Solna Vikings, Mahoney put together a triple-double and a double-double.

Ohlde said the fire Mahoney brings to the Wildcats' starting lineup is priceless.

"Megan brings so much to our team," Ohlde said. "It wouldn't be our team without her. She brings the aggressiveness, the athleticism, she's able to penetrate to the hole, she's able to shoot a jumper and she can shoot the three.

"And she brings so much emotion to this team. It's incredible how much she brings."

Money Mahoney

Sophomore Megan Mahoney put up big numbers in her first two exhibition games. Here is a look at each game.

Nov. 2 vs. Team Concept — 13 points, 11 rebounds, 12 assists
Nov. 8 vs. Solna Vikings — 11 points, 6 rebounds, 11 assists

Part of Mahoney's success this season will depend on how much she is able to get the ball into the hands of Laurie Koehn, who led the nation in 3-point shooting last year.

Koehn said Mahoney is an irreplaceable part of K-State's attack.

"She's an unbelievable player," she said. "She's out there and she's a playmaker. Obviously, you saw her in the first two games. The first game she had a triple-double, and this last game she had a double-double.

"She's dangerous from 3-point land now, and she can drive, slash – she rebounds very well and she's just a huge, huge part of our success and a vital part of our team."

Coach Deb Patterson said Mahoney, who led the Wildcats in assists and assist-to-turnover ratio a season ago, is the kind of player it's impossible not to give credit to.

"When a game's over, and you look at Megan Mahoney when you watch film, you understand that she always impacts the game with intangibles as well as tangibles," Patterson said. "She just flat out makes you better, your team better, and her teammates better.

"She's just someone that has the ability to make the game a little easier for those she's on the floor with."

WNIT | 1st-round matchup to feature teams with similar styles

have to do our job of winning games, but provided we win, the opportunity to stay depends on our attendance. It's not gray, it's black and white.

"So it's exciting to think our community can almost assure us a home-court stand, provided we find a way to get the victories."

Standing in K-State's way in the first round is Ball State.

Patterson said the Cardinals are similar to her team.

"They like to spread you out, break you down off the dribble and shoot the three," she said. "It's a basketball team that is experienced, very well coached and they are going to play very hard. It's a little reminiscent of that Kent State first round NCAA team that came in here.

"They've had some great games with Kent State and I would expect that it would be a high-quality match up."

But if it's like the Kent State contest, fans could expect a blow-out.

Wildcat players aren't playing for such, though.

Forward Kendra Wecker, who led the Cats in scoring in the first two exhibitions, scoring 31 points in each, said that now everything counts, and each game should be taken seriously.

"Things now go on our record," she said. "I think that's something that gets you excited just in that. Looking at it that way, every game you play is either a win or a loss, and it matters."

Nicole Ohlde said the tournament format and atmosphere could be the biggest motivation.

"If you don't win, it's over for a few weeks – so we definitely want to win," she said.

"These are do-or-die situations, and we just want to keep winning and keep moving on."

is McIntyre – a 5-foot-5-inch point guard.

McIntyre averaged 22.1 points and four assists per game as a junior for Sapulpa High School.

Coggins, a 5-foot-11-inch guard/forward from Lee's Summit North High School, averaged 17.2 points per game in leading the Broncos to the 2001 Missouri Class 4A state championship.

Murdoch, a 6-foot-2-inch forward, averaged 15.3 points and 10.5 rebounds in 2001.

Smith, a 5-foot-11-inch forward, averaged 9.8 points and 6.9 rebounds as a junior.

Brooks, a 5-foot-11-inch small forward from Leavenworth High School, averaged 16.5 points in 2001.

New Cats

Here is a list of the five newly signed women's basketball players, announced by Coach Deb Patterson on Wednesday.

- Tiffany Brooks, Leavenworth, Kan.
- Claire Coggins, Lee's Summit, Mo.
- Jetta McIntyre, Sapulpa, Okla.
- Shanda Murdoch, Oklahoma City
- Naytanda Smith, Enid, Okla.

Sophomore Kendra Wecker said these players are as good as the numbers indicate.

"I like them all," she said. "We're really excited to have these girls, and they are ready to come here. Whether they are ready to get hit with Division-I basketball, I'm not for sure, but we'll get them ready."

GAMEDAY NOTES

Football tickets — The Nebraska game is sold out. For information about other events, call the K-State Ticket Office at (800) 221-CATS.

Radio — Fans can tune into KMKF-FM 101.5 or KMAN-AM 1350 for pre-game, game and post-game coverage of the Cats' game against Nebraska. Mid America Sports Network will be the official network carrier for K-State Athletics. The network covers 25 affiliates throughout the state of Kansas. Wyatt Thompson will be the Voice of the Wildcats for 2002, with former Wildcat quarterback Stan Weber on color and Chris Allison on the sideline. Steven Weber is the producer of the Mid America Sports Network.

Television — The game will be televised nationally on Fox Sports Net's regional cable syndication (Channel 34). Joel Meyers and Dave Lapham have the call, with Jim Knox on the sideline. Mike Helling is the producer.

Storyline — K-State is host to Nebraska in a battle of longstanding rivals in the Big 12 Conference North.

K-State comes into the game just one game behind Colorado in the Big 12 North. The Wildcats' win last weekend over Iowa State moved K-State past the Cyclones into second in the division.

The Buffaloes hold a tie-breaker edge over the Wildcats by virtue of their 35-31 win in Boulder in early October in terms of determining the North representative to the conference title game. Still, should Colorado lose either at home to Iowa State or in two weeks at Nebraska, the Wildcats could earn co-championship in the division.

With two games left in the regular season, K-State still has a chance at achieving a number of milestones in 2002.

K-State is within reach of only the seventh season in school history with at least 10 wins. In the 106 previous years of football at K-State, the Wildcats have had at least 10 wins in a season in 1910 (10-1), 1995 (10-2), 1997 (11-1), 1998 (11-2), 1999 (11-1) and 2000 (11-3).

The Wildcats have hit the nine-win mark nine times in school history, including eight of the last nine seasons.

Series — This will be the 87th meeting between Nebraska and K-State. K-State trails in the series 12-72-2, after the schools split the last four games in the series.

K-State is 5-32-2 in games played in Manhattan, and the Wildcats have won the last two meetings at KSU Stadium. K-State won 40-30 in 1998 to end a 29-game series win streak the Huskers held from 1969-98. The last Husker win in Manhattan was a 39-3 victory on Oct. 5, 1996.

The last time the Huskers were unranked coming into the K-State, the Wildcats won 12-0 in Lincoln on Nov. 9, 1968. That shutout stands as the only shutout of Nebraska in Memorial Stadium in the last 37 years. At no time in the history of the series has K-State been ranked and the Huskers been unranked when the two teams met.

Last season, Dahrran Diedrick led Nebraska with 108 yards on 24 carries, including a 2-yard touchdown run to help the Huskers erase a halftime deficit and earn a 31-21 victory in Lincoln.

The last time ...

The last time K-State had a running back rush for 200-plus yards was last season when Josh Scobey racked up 204 against Kansas on Oct. 27. K-State won the game 40-6.

Wildcats determined to protect KSU Stadium turf Saturday

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For 29 seasons, K-State couldn't buy a win over Nebraska.

Truthfully, in 80 percent of those games, the Cats didn't come close to upsetting the Huskers.

But times have changed.

K-State has won two of four meetings – both of which came at home.

Looking for their third straight victory against Nebraska in the friendly confines of KSU Stadium, the Cats look to take a stronghold on the series' recent home-and-home twist.

"That's the message we want to send," nose tackle Cory White said. "But all the talking we do is on the field."

Lately, K-State has indeed got it finished on the field.

In the Cats' last three wins, they have outscored their opponents 166-17.

It all culminated last Saturday.

The Wildcats handed a 58-7 whipping to then-No. 21 Iowa State. It was the second straight most-lopsided victory for K-State against the team they were playing. The week prior, the Cats trounced Kansas, 64-0.

White said it has been the team's "Never say die" attitude that has propelled it through these last few games.

"In this game, you just have to refuse to be beat," he said. "That's all it is – you just have to compete. That's what motivates you at all cost."

However, there is a different type of motivation this week.

For decades, Nebraska and K-State weren't rivals because of the Huskers' dominance. But with the Cats' recent success, storylines have changed.

Running back coach Michael Smith said the attitude hasn't, though.

"They always say that Nebraska is Nebraska, and that's the truth," Smith said. "The whole state of Nebraska, some people say, revolves around the university, which I believe is true."

K-State has a chance to win seven games at home in a season for the first time since 1999. That year, they were perfect at home.

Quarterback Ell Roberson said playing a home gives a team a little more bounce in its step.

"As long as you have the crowd behind you," he said. "That's all the motivation you need to keep getting it done."

In each of the Cats' wins at home this year, they have been able to get out to a fast start.

Against Iowa State, K-State was up 30-7 at halftime.

The same can be said about the game against Southern California, as the Cats were up by as many as 21.

Cornerback Terence Newman said it's important to establish the momentum early against a good team; that way, the pressure is on them to make something happen.

"It's important for us to get a good start as a team – offensively and defensively. That will set the tone," he said. "If we can get a score on our first drive on offense, then that would be great and set them back and make them think, 'Hey we have to go down and get a score.'

"They might try to do some things that are out of their limits and that would play in our favor."

What might also play into the Cats' favor is the fact that for 27 players, it will be their last game at home.

And it has been a successful career playing in front of the home fans for these seniors. The 2002 class is 23-4 when playing on Wagner Field.

White said No. 24 is all they are focusing on right now.

"It's always an edge when you got somebody at your house," he said. "It's the last home game for us as seniors, so we are going to take that into account and use it as momentum."

A change of pace

In 34 seasons, K-State has beaten Nebraska only three times. Two of those wins have come within the last four years. Here is a look at the last 13 meetings, whichf include the two most recent wins by K-State.

1989 — Nebraska 58, K-State 7
(Coach Bill Snyder's 1st season)
1990 — Nebraska 45, K-State 8
1991 — Nebraska 38, K-State 31
1992 — Nebraska 38, K-State 34
1993 — Nebraska 45, K-State 28
1994 — Nebraska 17, K-State 6
1995 — Nebraska 49, K-State 25
1996 — Nebraska 39, K-State 3
1997 — Nebraska 56, K-State 26
1998 — K-State 40, Nebraska 30
1999 — Nebraska 41, K-State 15
2000 — K-State 29, Nebraska 28
2001 — Nebraska 31, K-State 21

Road home will be long for Huskers

Nebraska's refusal to recognize K-State as rival won't prevent Wildcat win

CHRIS SHANK

The time has come.

It's November and Nebraska is coming to the Little Apple.

In recent years, Nebraskans have had the gall to say they don't consider the K-State versus Nebraska game to be a rivalry event.

Although the Cats have beaten Nebraska the last two times they've set foot in Manhattan, the Huskers still, for the most part, don't believe K-State is worthy to be called their "rival."

As John McEnroe would say, "You can not be serious!"

So why is it so impossible for the Huskers to admit this a rivalry?

For such an occasion, players and fans should circle the date on their calendars at the beginning of the season as being a red-letter game.

From the annoying bandwagon Nebraska fan that lives in your hometown to Coach Frank Solich, few respect K-State enough to call the Cats a worthy adversary

If you ask a Husker about this year's match up, he will talk about how deep Nebraska tradition is and that the Cats' tradition, in comparison, is about as shallow as a Fisher-Price wading pool.

Well guess what, Herbie Husker. All of that tradition doesn't mean jack squat come 11:30 a.m. Saturday.

Senior Day

When coach Bill Snyder was asked how to define the 27 seniors, he said it's still unclear what they'll be remembered for.

Something tells me it will be defined Saturday.

Asked about his final home game, defensive tackle Tank Reese said, "It's been a long trip."

Tank and the rest of the defense hope to make the Huskers describe their trek to Manhattan the same way.

Time to burn the book

Record books in the K-State-Nebraska series have not been kind to the Cats.

They are full of talk about Nebraska domination. But

Coaches' stage fright frustrating

Snyder, Solich leave reporters wishing for more insightful comments

DAVID DIEHL

Oh, Jim Mora, wherefore art thou?

More than ever you are needed in America's breadbasket.

It is not the sideline genius of the beleaguered NFL journeyman coach that we need. No, Jim, leave your X's and O's at home. All that is needed is your mouth and your wisdom.

Visions of your likeness popped into my head Tuesday as I sat in the Big Eight room at KSU Stadium, where Coach Bill Snyder serenaded a crowd of reporters to sleep during his weekly half-hour press conference.

Up north in Husker country, I knew the same thing was happening on the sixth floor of Memorial Stadium in the press box – Coach Frank Solich singing a lullaby of "certainly" and "on that end of it."

If nothing else, Nebraska versus K-State week teaches us that a deep rivalry burns between these two schools. The Powercat is a god-awful mascot and no, Herbie Husker doesn't date his sister. He wouldn't cheat on his cousin like that.

If something else is learned this week, it's that both these coaches would do well with a half-day workshop from Mora, the king of the sound bite. Mora is Pavlov. When he speaks, we drool.

Nebraska needs you, Jim Mora. K-State needs you.

As Snyder addressed the crowd of about two dozen reporting regulars Tuesday, I had to check my Powercat campus map to make sure we weren't in the library (the one with books and maps, not the Aggieville liquor store sharing the same name).

Snyder is barely audible from six feet away with his drawn-out generic responses. At least Solich isn't afraid to use something other than what my second-grade teacher called an "inside voice." But both pick and choose words carefully most of the time.

Like Solich, Snyder's words offer a portion of genuine insight. The insight just gets

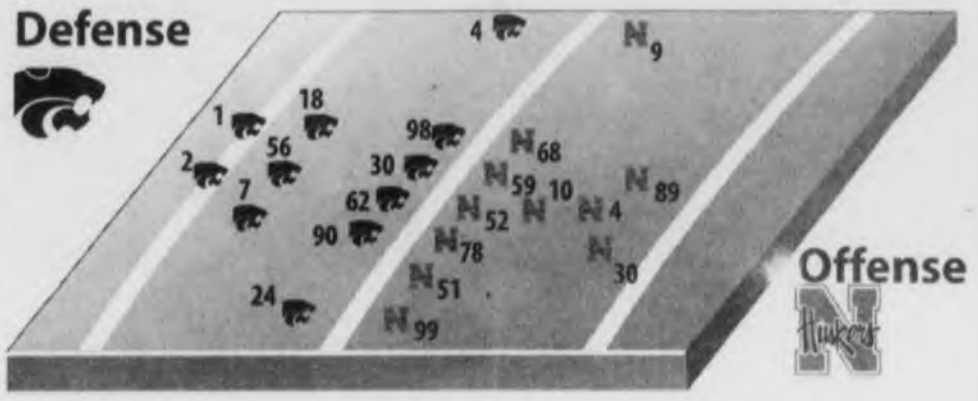
Offense



8 — Taco Wallace, wide receiver
65 — Thomas Barnett, left tackle
53 — Nick Leckey, left guard
78 — Steve Washington, center
60 — Mike Johnson, right guard
55 — Billy Miller, right tackle
88 — Thomas Hill, tight end
82 — James Terry, wide receiver
3 — Ell Roberson, quarterback
44 — Travis Wilson, fullback
43 — Darren Sproles, running back

5 — DeJuan Groce, cornerback
88 — Trevor Johnson, right end
94 — Patrick Kabongo, defensive tackle
59 — Ryon Bingham, nose tackle
57 — Chris Kelsay, left end
3 — Fabian Washington, cornerback
43 — Scott Shanle, linebacker
38 — Barrett Ruud, linebacker
7 — Demorrio Williams, linebacker
21 — Philip Bland, rover
20 — Josh Bullocks, free safety

Collegian Insight
This game could be won or lost on the line of scrimmage. Nebraska's defense is engineered around stopping the run, while K-State's offense is geared around running the ball. Darren Sproles will have to get off to a good start and get at least 100 yards.

Defense

98 — Andrew Shull, left end
30 — Tank Reese, defensive tackle
62 — Corey White , nose tackle
90 — Henry Bryant, right end
4 — Terence Newman, cornerback
24 — Randy Jordan, cornerback
18 — Bryan Hickman, linebacker
56 — Terry Pierce, linebacker
7 — Josh Buhl, linebacker
1 — Bobby Walker, free safety
2 — Rashad Washington, strong safety

9 — Wilson Thomas, split end
68 — Dan Vili Waldrop, right tackle
59 — Wes Cody, right guard
52 — John Garrison, center
78 — Mike Erickson, left guard
51 — Richie Incognito, left tackle
99 — Aaron Golliday, tight end
10 — Jammal Lord, quarterback
4 — Judd Davis, fullback
89 — Troy Hassebroek, wingback
30 — Dahrran Diedrick, I-back

Collegian Insight
Practicing against an offense that runs the option with regularity may prepare the Cat defense for Nebraska. Husker quarterback Jammal Lord is the team's leading rusher. Look for Nebraska to establish the rushing attack early and attempt to feed in a little play-action pass now and again.

Special teams explosiveness could play big role Saturday

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One is ranked No. 18 in the nation. The other is ranked No. 2.

One has yielded five touchdowns. The other has three to its credit.

Both K-State and Nebraska have good punt return teams. And each team has a potential All-American to handle their punt return duties. For Nebraska, that player is senior DeJuan Groce. Groce has returned three punts for touchdowns this season.

For K-State, that player is Terence Newman. Newman has returned one punt for a touchdown this year.

The two units will face off this weekend as the Wildcats play host to the Huskers at KSU Stadium.

Coach Bill Snyder said Groce and Nebraska's punt return unit are not to be taken lightly.

"He's tremendous," Snyder said of Groce. "He has the ability to field the ball and be athletic, and obviously he's got the built-in trait of great speed as well. He's run kicks back for three touchdowns so far this year, and they've blocked a punt for a touchdown.

"They've got a total of five blocks altogether. They're pretty good. They always have good special teams units – always."

However, K-State's punt return team isn't something to be taken lightly, either. The Wildcats are ranked third in the Big 12 Conference in punt returns, having returned three punts for touchdowns – two off of blocks and one off of Newman's return.

Matt Stamey | COLLEGIAN
Terence Newman returns a punt against KU earlier this season. Newman is averaging 32.4 yards per kick return and 15.7 yards per punt return.

Snyder said the punt return team is part of a recent history of success on special teams.

"We have been relatively good over the period of years," Snyder said. "Like anything else, we've had some years where we haven't been as good as we would like. But, overall, over the extended period of time, we've been above average.

"As far as how much time we invest in it, I would only guess that we probably spend a little bit more time than most others. But I know we spend a great deal of time that's invested in our special teams."

Newman's ability to return punts for big plays may well be the biggest asset that has developed out of the time K-State invests in its punt return preparations.

With passing success not coming easy, ground game key to both teams' success

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For 112 years, Nebraska has defined smashmouth football.

Riding an unparalleled dedication to running the football, the Huskers have racked up five national championships, three Heisman trophies and thousands upon thousands of rushing yards.

The Huskers sit at 7-4 and in fourth place in the conference. They are in the midst of their worst season since inception of the Big 12 Conference in 1996. But they still average 40 yards per game more than any other conference team and rank third nationally in the category.

While they haven't been able to pull out the wins, Coach Bill Snyder says there is no difference between the Cornhuskers of the past and the team he will face Saturday.

"I don't know how to distinguish from the Nebraska of old and the Nebraska presently. Offensively, I think they are pretty much one in the same," Snyder said. "There's not a lot of difference in what they do and not too much difference in how they do it. They are consistently one of the leading rushing football teams in the nation year in and year out, and this year has been no exception."

Nebraska's recent run has backed up Snyder's statements. After losing to Oklahoma State on Oct. 19, Nebraska sat at 1-2 in conference play. Since then, they have improved to 3-3. The Huskers helped even their record by rushing for more than 300 yards in five of their last six games.

Kelly Glasscock | COLLEGIAN
Darren Sproles is tripped up by ISU defenders in K-State's win over Iowa State on Saturday.

But Nebraska isn't the only team that has come to live-or-die by the ground game.

Through the years, K-State has adapted an offensive attack very similar to the one the Huskers have utilized so successfully.

Both teams rely upon swift, elusive, mobile quarterbacks to jump start their offense. Nebraska and K-State both try to stretch a defense around the corners and then feel comfortable trying to smash through the middle.

The option is central to both offensive philosophies – cornerback Terence Newman made the connection.

"I think they are very similar," Newman said. "We run the option here, and we have a pretty good quarterback running it, but so do they. They are a tough-nosed football team and they like to pound the ball inside and out, and I think we do too."

Passing is one aspect of K-State's and Nebraska's game plans that is similar. Both teams do it rarely, and often disguise it in the play action.

One pass play that the teams' option offense does allow for is the option pass.

Against Southern California, quarterback Ell Roberson used the option pass masterfully. But K-State defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said that is one area that Nebraska has written the book.

"Nebraska has the best play-action passing in the country," he said. "They are the best ones. The best flat out, the best conceived, the best play-action passing game that there is, so they are hard to handle."

Wallace making QB's job easier; senior leads Cats in receiving

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
Wide receiver Taco Wallace runs the ball while being tackled by Iowa State defensive back Ellis Hobbs last week at KSU Stadium. Wallace had 57 receiving yards in the game.

Statistically, Taco Wallace isn't among the Big 12 Conference's best receivers.

But he leads K-State receivers in most every statistical category.

Wallace leads the team in receptions (34), yards (571) and average yards per game (57.1). James Terry, K-State's second-leading receiver, has 18 receptions and 334 yards on the year, averaging exactly 20 yards less than Wallace.

Ell Roberson said Wallace makes playing quarterback an easier job.

"He's a good guy," Roberson said. "He's a guy that's starting to learn the defenses and find open spots. And when you have a guy that can find the open spots, it's good for you as a quarterback.

"He'll catch the ball and make a few more yards after. That will always help. He can get a three-yard catch and turn it into eight yards by getting five yards after the contact. And when you have that, you have a good receiver on your hands."

But Wallace only has three touchdowns on the season, a total that probably has something to do with how little K-State throws the ball.

Leckey paving way for powerful run game

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nick Leckey
OFFENSIVE LINEMAN

In the third quarter of last Saturday's game, Darren Sproles scampered for three yards.

The yardage drove Sproles' game total past the century mark for the sixth straight time, tying a school record.

Sproles smiled.

As the stadium's announcer informed the crowd of his accomplishments, he accepted his teammates' congratulations.

But somewhere away from the action and out of the spotlight, junior offensive lineman Nick Leckey might have been smiling as well.

Running backs coach Michael Smith said Leckey and his offensive line teammates have played a large role in Sproles' achievements this season.

"Darren knows he wouldn't be where he is and have had the success he had if it wasn't for those guys," Smith said. "For him to accomplish that feat this weekend, they are the first guys he comes to on the sidelines."

Leckey probably should take some pride in the achievement, but he said he doesn't plan to do that until all is said and done.

"When you think about it, it's not really so much about records," Leckey said. "Records are for after the season. It's more about how many wins we get and what kind of bowl we go to."

Helping Sproles to those records and helping the Cats to their wins is all part of the job, Leckey said.

Shouldering that responsibility is nothing new for him, either.

Leckey has spent his entire career at K-State tackling difficult assignments and achieving beyond his coaches' expectations.

In 2000, as a true freshman, Leckey threw away his redshirt and came in to start for an injured Andy Eby. The line that year allowed only nine sacks and paved the way for a running game which tied the school record for rushing touchdowns.

He was the first true freshman to ever play on the offensive line for Coach Bill Snyder.

"He came here straight out of high school and had a chance to play on a pretty good team here in 2000 as a true freshman," Smith said.

"I think that says a lot that he could do that especially on the offensive line, because there aren't a lot of guys around the country doing that."

It was a storybook tale, and Leckey said it meant a lot to him.

He said his time on the field was a result of his work off the field.

Work off the field and – he admitted – some luck.

"I felt like I was lucky to land an opportunity like that," he said. "Eby got hurt my freshman year, that's why I got to start. It was a lot of luck and a lot of proper preparation on my part and on the coach's part."

But Leckey's achievements don't end there. Prior to this

Gameday breakdown

Here is a look at the top three matchups for this weekend's game between K-State and Nebraska.

Nebraska key components

Jammal Lord
NEBRASKA QUARTERBACK

The Nebraska offense has finally started to play like they are capable of. That's because Lord is finally finding his niche. Lord's efficiency numbers and yardage through the air aren't far behind Roberson's numbers. Lord also has ran for more yards than Roberson, as well as every running back on his own team.

DeJuan Groce
NEBRASKA RETURN SPECIALIST

Groce is quite possibly the most dangerous man on special teams in the nation. Such was the case against Texas two weeks ago. Down three points, the Longhorns elected to punt to Groce — he nearly returned it for a touchdown. There's no telling whether the Cats will test the talent Groce on Saturday.

The Husker wall
LED BY HUSKER LINEBACKER BARRETT RUUD

Many thought it was just a fluke last season when the Nebraska defense gave up so many yards to Colorado. But in the Huskers' first two losses of the year, the front four gave up yards in bunches. After a few decent performances; they are back to their old habits, surrendering nearly 500 to Texas two weeks ago.

Advantage

Reason: Roberson is playing his best ball of the season.

Reason: Got to believe Newman's words — faster and better looking.

Reason: Tough pick, but can't pick against a guy that's rolling.

K-State key components

Ell Roberson
K-STATE QUARTERBACK

Three weeks ago against Baylor, Roberson had arguably his worst game of the season. Since then, the junior has been on a roll. A hot first half against Kansas, coupled with an overall effective performance versus Iowa State, has Roberson playing as confident as he has all season.

Terence Newman
K-STATE RETURN SPECIALIST

He's the fastest man in the Big 12, but lately, he hasn't showed a whole lot. His last punt return for a TD was against Louisiana-Monroe, and his only kickoff return for a score was against EIU. He has come close a couple of times, but kicks to him have been few and far between. On Saturday, Nebraska will kick to him.

Darren Sproles
K-STATE RUNNING BACK

Sproles can see the light at the end of the tunnel. A 100-yard rushing game, and he sets the record for most consecutive games in a season with at least 100 yards rushing. Sproles is also within reach of moving into second place for the most rushing yards in a season. A 100-yard game would do that easily.

WALLACE | Final home game could bring out best in Wallace

-lowest total in the Big 12. That total tops Nebraska by just five attempts and trails third-from-the-bottom Oklahoma by 40.

The Wildcats' low passing numbers probably can be attributed to an area in which K-State ranks very well in the Big 12 – rushing.

K-State is third in the conference in rushing, behind Nebraska and Colorado, and of the Cats' 52 touchdowns this season, 41 have come on the ground.

Coach Bill Snyder said Wallace has been able to grow as receiver despite how little he sees the ball come his way.

"Taco has played well," Snyder said. "He's a vastly improved receiver over a year ago. He's catching the ball well and he has a better understanding of what we're doing offensively.

"He's also contributed a little bit in regards to leadership and has been helpful to the other wide receivers."

Unfortunately for Wallace, his opportunities to show the world what he can do are becoming limited.

K-State's contest against Nebraska on Saturday will be the senior's last home game.

Wallace said he is well aware his time at K-State is almost gone.

"I'm going to be thinking about a lot," Wallace said. "It's going to be my final game, it's going to be against Nebraska, at home, and I won't play them anymore. So I'm going to give it everything I can."

And maybe it won't be all over for Wallace after the season after all.

It's difficult to see if Wallace is destined for the pros, but K-State has recently been well-represented by its wide receivers in the NFL.

Since 1996, there have been six K-State wide receivers that made the pros. Kevin Lockett, Darnell McDonald, Everett Burnett, Quincy Morgan, Aaron Lockett and Brandon Clark all put on NFL uniforms after leaving the purple and white behind.

Of those six, though, Clark is the only one who holds no receiving records at K-State.

So it may not work out for Wallace to break into the pro ranks.

But Wallace said he isn't counting himself out.

"K-State has always produced receivers," he said. "They have a couple of receivers in the league right now who are still playing. I was hoping I would be one of them. And I still have a chance to."

TALKING SMACK | K-State will win rivalry game

forget that.

For the first time since 1968, the Huskers enter the K-State game unranked.

To enforce that, this Nebraska team has the wonderful honor of being unranked for the first time in my lifetime.

The Cats' largest win in the series was a 27-0 shutout clear back in 1953.

But with the Cats averaging more than 55 points a game during the last three games and holding their opponents to under six a contest, that 49-year-old record could get rewritten Saturday.

Successful as Crouch in the NFL

Eric Crouch accomplished many feats during his career, including playing in a Rams preseason game. He was a captain, an All-Conference selection, an All-American and even won the Heisman.

But one thing Crouch never won was a football game in Manhattan.

Crouch had a decent arm and posed a threat against the Cats, but his successor, Jammal Lord, couldn't hit the Husker blow-up doll, Lil' Red, from a foot away.

If Crouch couldn't get a win in KSU Stadium, an inexperienced Lord won't either.

"Balanced" attack?

This year's Husker team, like every team before it, is about as one-dimensional as an 8-bit Ninetendo game.

But what about freshman receiver Ross Pilkington? He has been mentioned as a receiving threat for Nebraska.

Remember, though, any receiver with any talent wouldn't go to Nebraska. That's like a star tailback going to Texas Tech and expecting to get 20 carries a game.

Some would say the Cats aren't much better throwing the ball, averaging less than 150 yards in the air per game.

But the Cats are No. 1 in the conference in pass efficiency compared with Nebraska's 11th.

Nebraska

This eight letter word has a powerful meaning to thousands of K-Staters – a meaning that runs deep.

Memories, passions and adrenaline will be flowing Saturday when the Cats take on the Huskers. Nebraska's trip to Manhattan every other year is circled in the hearts and minds of those who bleed purple. The breakthrough game in 1998, and the 2000 "Snow Bowl" game hold a special meaning to any Wildcat.

Saturday, Wagner Field will be electric.

The fine folks of northern Kansas along US-77 help set the tone even before kickoff.

After the historic 40-30 win in 1998, a K-Stater along the highway put up a sign that read "Losers Turn Here."

This is what a rivalry is all about.

Saturday will be no different. The Cats will show Nebraska that this is a rivalry, like it or not.

So dust off that sign, because the losers will be traveling north on US-77 after their third straight loss in Manhattan.

SPECIAL TEAMS | Newman ready for last game

And the senior may very well have added incentive to turn in a big play against the Huskers – his last game at home.

Newman said he will never forget his first moments as a Wildcat.

"I can remember when I first got here," Newman said. "Running out of the stadium and hearing all the fans screaming and yelling. And I knew I wouldn't play that year, but it was just the feeling that I had."

Newman went on to play very well in his time at K-State. So well that many thought he was good enough to skip his senior year in the interest of entering the NFL draft.

But K-State's top return man said leaving early never entered his mind.

"I didn't come back for draft status," he said. "For us to go 6-6, that wasn't the way I wanted to end it. I wanted to come back and do better.

"I wouldn't trade this for anything in the world. Coming back here was probably the smartest thing I've done. I have a lot of memories from this year and nothing will ever take away from that."

Co-punt return coordinator and defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said Newman makes K-State dangerous, just as Groce makes Nebraska dangerous.

"I think we have a good punt return team too," Elliott said. "Terence Newman is as good as anybody's got. But Groce is one of the best also. I think we're doing a good job.

"We had one called back last Saturday that would have gone for a long ways. I think we're somewhere between 13th or 14th in the country, and I know they're number one or two, but our guys are doing a pretty good job with it."

Newman said Groce is a force that will have to be kept in check Saturday.

However, Newman said he has two advantages over Groce that will aid K-State when two of the best punt-return units in America face off on Saturday.

"He has more interceptions than me and more touchdowns," Newman said.

"But I'm still faster and I still look better than he does."

CLASH | Columnist hoping for inspired pep talks

tences. For fans it's just boring, if nothing else. For the media, it's torment.

Halfway through Snyder's conference, notebooks sat tucked under armpits and eyes scanned the ceiling.

At least Nebraska's press room offers a television off to the side broadcasting ESPN News.

That wouldn't be necessary if a captivating anecdote or thought-provoking comment emerged once a season.

Snyder has his shining moments. Solich's are few and far between. Neither are too grand.

Take, for example, Snyder's thoughts on the BCS formula. It reeks of potential.

"I've always been hard-pressed to understand," Snyder said Tuesday, "how two college-aged students could hole up in an apartment someplace in Spokane, Wash., or wherever, get on a computer, never see a football game and affect who's going to play for a national championship."

It's OK, but it doesn't make you want to dance. Like a second-round NBA draft pick, Snyder's got upside. A little coaching from Mora would help.

It wouldn't hurt Solich either.

During the bleakest parts of NU's early 2002 season, just once I would have loved to see Solich blitz into a voice-cracking tirade a la Mora's legendary "playoffs" rant.

"Bowl game!? Bowl game!?" Solich would ask rhetorically as slumbering scribes leapt to their feet, eyes ablaze as the sound bite hits ear drums. "This team just lost to Oklahoma State, and you're talking about a bowl game?!!?"

A writer can dream, can't he?

If Solich would drop one – just one – "diddly poo" reference like Mora once did after a loss, all will be forgiven. Never again will I mention his public-speaking gaffes.

But some are too hard to pass up. Check out this gem he dropped Tuesday regarding Saturday's game. It's taken verbatim from tape.

"For our coaches, for our players, we don't see it as there being a surrounding of this game in a manner that is really not coming from the end of it being an exciting football game."

Huh?

A Rosetta Stone, please?

Go ahead, read it again, but be careful. Your head explodes after the fourth time.

How much does all this tongue-tied-coach nonsense really matter? Admittedly none.

If Snyder's and Solich's pregame pep talks are similarly incomprehensible we would surely run into a bit of a motivation problem. Certainly play calling would have its speed bumps.

But they're not. Both have managed to run their programs quite nicely and are remarkable coaches, stage fright be damned.

But where's the fun in that? We want more color. K-State and Nebraska need Mora.

He just got fired in January. It's not like he's got diddly poo to do.

NEBRASKA | Despite early-season struggles, Wildcat defenders not underestimating Husker offense

But the play-action option pass hasn't been enough to earn either school high marks in the aerial department.

Nebraska ranks 12th in the Big 12 and 113th nationally in passing offense, while K-State fares only slightly better, ranking 11th in the conference and 104th in the country.

Despite all of their similarities, Snyder downplayed the significance of it all and said there was more to the K-State offense than meets the eye.

"We have a system that's pretty broad-based," he said. "We can do a lot of things within the system. Some of them you've seen in other years and you don't see now. But it's all there. We think it's pretty much all-encompassing.

The important thing is to try to mold it to what your players are capable of doing. That's pretty much been our approach."

season he was named a team captain, an honor bestowed upon only five players on the team.

Being named a captain helped Leckey solidify his role as a leader of this year's squad, and as the season winds down and the Cats dig for those extra wins and that more prestigious bowl, Leckey said he knows his job is becoming all the more important.

He said he's doing everything he can do to make a difference.

"I think I've come a long way," he said. "I know at the beginning of the year I was performing very poorly, and I feel that as the season has progressed I have gotten more focused," he said. "I've gotten stronger mentally. As far as play goes – identifying the different defenses, different fronts – I think I've gotten better at that.

"I think I have to become more vocal because I'm not that much of a vocal person. I feel that I am more of a by-the-example captain. I just do everything to the best of my abilities and expect the same from other people."

Ridge dismisses letter

Adviser says alleged al-Qaeda letter contains no new threats

By Darlene Superville
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – With the Senate set to approve the agency he's expected to lead, President Bush's homeland security adviser on Sunday played down as "really nothing new" an alleged al-Qaeda threat of attacks in New York and Washington.

Tom Ridge also said he doubted the Bush administration would create an agency to gather domestic intelligence. Some senators did not dismiss the idea, and others said the White House should not pursue it without congressional input.

Ridge declined to discuss whether he wants to become secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

A senior administration official confirmed Sunday that Ridge, a former Pennsylvania governor and friend of Bush, is the president's choice for the job.

Appearing on three Sunday morning talk shows, Ridge tried to minimize the alleged al-Qaeda threat.

"The war on terrorism has come to our shores. We have to deal with it."

Tom Ridge
HOMELAND SECURITY DIRECTOR

A correspondent for the Arab satellite TV station Al-Jazeera told The Associated Press he received an unsigned, six-page document on Wednesday, a day after the station broadcast an audiotape believed made by al-Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden.

The United States and other governments blame bin Laden and his al-Qaeda terrorist network for the Sept 11. attacks.

While the correspondent says he is certain the statement came from al-Qaeda's leadership, Ridge said the administration was unsure of its source, but recognizes that the United States is a primary target.

Sodomy trial advances

Ex-liquor store owner charged with 1 felony

By Nancy Foster
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The man who owned former Dean Retail Liquor in Aggieville will be charged with one felony count of aggravated criminal sodomy, a judge ruled at a nine-hour preliminary hearing Friday.

Kent Dean, 38, who owned the liquor store for 11 years, originally was charged with two felony counts of aggravated criminal sodomy in connection to a May 9 arrest. The prosecution, however, dropped the second count prior to the hearing.

"We made a decision based on evidence we had available and decided to focus on the stronger charge," said Valerie Peterson, assistant Riley County attorney.

He still will be charged with two misdemeanor counts of criminal restraint.

Dean was arrested at his home May 9 for two felony counts of aggravated criminal sodomy and two counts of criminal restraint. He was released from the Riley County jail on a $15,000 bond.

Dean's arraignment will be at 9 a.m. Nov. 25 in the Riley County Courthouse.

The prosecution alleges that on Jan. 6, 2002, Dean engaged in sexual acts with a 22-year-old female who was incapable of giving consent due to alcohol and drugs. Peterson also

Consumer confidence increases

Holiday shopping could contribute to recent upswing

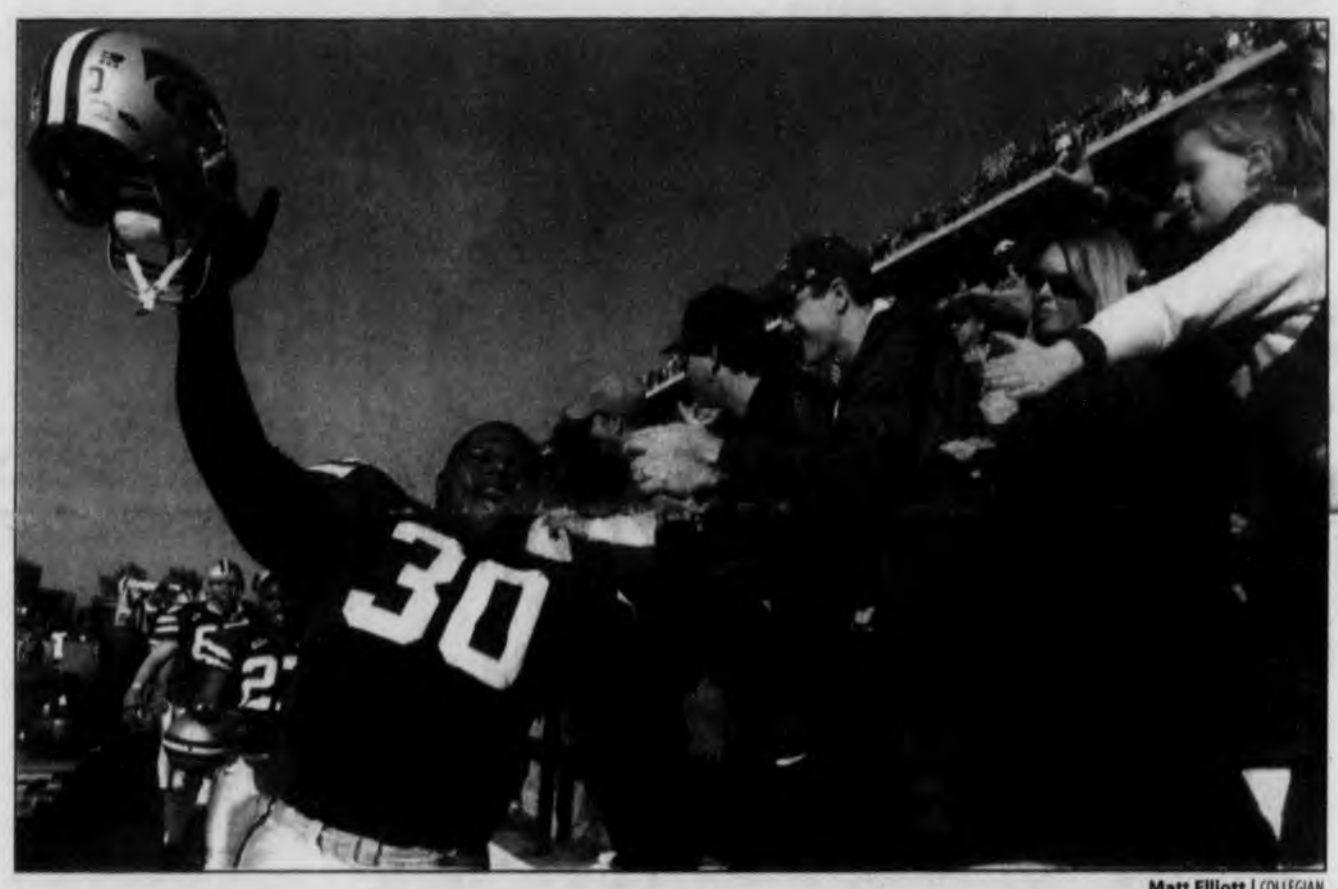
By Shannon Hartenstein
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Americans' faith in the economy plunged in October to the lowest level in nearly a decade. But consumer confidence might be rebounding in November, according to a recent report.

Consumer confidence is recovering slightly from a 14.3-point drop in October, according to an ABC News/Money Magazine report.

The report showed 27 percent of Americans said the economy was in excellent or good shape, a one percentage point rise from the end of October, when consumer confidence tumbled to 79.4 points, the lowest level since November 1993.

Consumer confidence data reflects consumers' views about where the economy is going, Steve Cassou, associate professor of economics, said.



"If (the numbers) are dropping, they indicate that the consumer thinks the economy is going in the wrong direction and may want to withhold savings or spending until they feel more comfortable about their own financial situation," he said.

Cassou said it is unclear

Tank Reese, senior defensive tackle, celebrates with his teammates and fans at KSU Stadium after the Cats defeated Nebraska 49-13. "The last time on the field against a powerhouse like Nebraska, and we won. We came out great and made it happen. Our defense, the Lynch Mob, is a very powerful defense. I hope by now we're No. 1 in the nation because we can stop any run," he said.

Roberson runs wild over Husker defense, sets records

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the saying goes, records were made to be broken.

It seems K-State has bought into that quote because week after week the story has been the same.

The Wildcats roll over an opponent, and a few more shoe-polish engraved accomplishments are erased and changed.

Nebraska was just another speed bump in the road of what has been a three-week stretch of dominating performances by the Cats.

K-State beat the Huskers 49-13 on Saturday at KSU Stadium in front of 52,221 fans, the fourth largest crowd to watch a football game in Manhattan.

It was quarterback Ell Roberson who stole the show, rushing for a career-high 228 yards on 29 carries.

Roberson not only shattered the single-game rushing record for a QB, but his day was also the second best in school history.

After the game, his teammates reflected on how

See NEBRASKA Page 8

K-State holds Nebraska to fewer than 100 yards rushing

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nebraska had the No. 1 rushing offense in the conference and third-best rushing offense in the nation coming into Saturday's game.

But K-State featured the No. 1 rushing defense in the conference and the third-best rushing defense in America.

Something had to give, and when all was said and done, it was the Huskers that were sent packing for Lincoln after a season-low 97 rushing yards.

Coach Bill Snyder said the defensive effort against Nebraska was excellent.

"I thought our defense played so well," Snyder said. "You talk about the No. 1 rushing team in the conference and the No. 3 rushing team in the nation, and we held them to 97 yards rushing – that's a day's work.

"That's excellent work. They got a few plays on the option with Jammal (Lord), and Jammal is a very talented, very fine quarterback. But by and large, we played extremely well."

The Wildcats held Nebraska to just two of 15 on third down conversions and stopped the Huskers on a crucial 4th and 1 on the K-State 11-yard line in the third quarter.

Linebacker Terry Pierce, who dropped Lord for a three-yard loss on the play, said K-State is one of the best defenses in the nation.

"I'd like to be humble, but right now, I'm astonished myself how well we're playing," Pierce said. "Not very many defenses can say they held Nebraska under 100 yards rushing.

"I grew up watching college football and knowing how good Nebraska was running the ball. For us to be one of the few teams that has ever held them under 100 yards, for me, is just so exciting."

Senior Tank Reese, who had seven tackles, said Nebraska might not have been ready for K-State's attack.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD

Coffee enema fails to entice patients to enroll in study

By Chuck Shepherd
UNIVERSAL NEWS SYNDICATE

Even with a $1.4 million grant from the National Institutes of Health, Nicholas Gonzalez is having trouble attracting pancreatic cancer patients for his Columbia University study (only 25 of 90 slots filled), perhaps because the treatment's most prominent component is twice-a-day coffee enemas. A Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center doctor called the regimen "ludicrous," but Gonzalez said the caffeine stimulates nerves in the bowel, helping the liver with detoxification, according to an October Wired magazine report. His initial pilot program reported significant benefits but was regarded with skepticism in that it included only 11 patients.

Names in the news

Scheduled to marry in December in Flint, Mich.: Laura Kah and Scott Boom (although she plans be just plain Laura Boom).

In May, the prosecutor in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., charged four men with stealing tires: Edgar Spencer, his son Edgar Spencer (Jr.), the older man's brother Edgar (W.) Spencer, and his son, Edgar (W.) Spencer (Jr.). And the Santa Cruz (Calif.) Sentinel, in an August story on the town's shrinking 1960s and '70s hippie population, interviewed among others (legal names) Climbing Sun, Shalom Dreampeace Compost and (no last name) Chip. Other recent residents, such as Darting Hummingbird Over a Waterfall, Moonbeam Moonbeam and "XXXXXXXX X," were not available.

Government in action

Several doctors of the government-funded British National Health Service plan to start prescribing personal vibrators for female sexual dysfunction, according to a September report in The Observer. A sex boutique operator welcomed the development, describing the previous devices "used for dilating vaginas" as "frightening" and crosses between "toilet brushes and medieval torture implements." In October, the medical clinic at the private Cornell University was close to begin selling them.

Great art

A state humanities and arts panel named Amiri Baraka the poet laureate of New Jersey earlier, after writing a poem suggesting that Jews and President Bush had advance knowledge of the Sept. 11 attacks. Gov. James McGreevey, who announced the appointment in August 2002, now wants Baraka to resign, but Baraka has refused. In addition to the money the poet laureate receives, Baraka has received several five-figure taxpayer grants, favorite themes of which are attacks on religion, whites and Jews.

People different from us

Recent paraphilias: Ian Cheeseman, 34, already locked up in Ottawa, Ontario, was charged in September with having made about 250 collect calls from prison trying to trick young girls into urinating into a cup near the phone.

And a judge in Omaha, Neb., ruled in October that a confession made by former teacher Mike Florea, 35, was admissible in his sex-abuse trial. He told police he would pay boys $20 to $25 if they would ejaculate into containers, which Florea then stored in his freezer.

Least-competent criminals

Chattanooga, Tenn., police told the city's WTVC-TV in October that they had arrested Rudy Raines for possession of marijuana after Raines allegedly walked into a Fast Food and Fuel convenience store, past officer David Ashley, and placed a stash of marijuana into the microwave oven because, he said, he needed to dry it out. Raines was arrested, along with another man sleeping in Raines' car in the parking lot.

Also, in the last month ...

James F. Welles, author of the book "Understanding Stupidity" and an authority on dumb decisions, was arrested for soliciting sex on the Internet from a "15-year-old girl" who was really a 40-year-old policeman (Lantana, Fla.) Besh Serdahely, 58, and his wife vacated the tree house on San Bruno Mountain (just south of San Francisco), which, for the last 12 years, they have called home (to the consternation of county officials).

ECONOMY

Holiday spending to aid country in time of recession

what is driving the trend. A stock market downfall in September likely made many consumers uneasy, he said.

Other reasons for the October drop could be the weak labor market, threats of military action in Iraq and a decline in financial markets, according to The Conference Board's report.

But consumer confidence data released last week brought hope for holiday sales revenues and the economic outlook, according to money.cnn.com.

"We have a habit of spending a lot of money this time of year," Michael Oldfather, associate professor of economics, said. "The predictions see that it won't be up very much from last year, maybe even down a little. But those are just predictions."

Despite consistently falling numbers, high consumer spending has helped support the economy through a recession beginning in March 2001, according to money.cnn.com.

"Although consumer confidence has been eroding for two years, consumers continue to spend money on new cars and new homes," Cassou said.

But if holiday spending does decline, profits will fall, meaning workers receive smaller holiday bonuses and jobs might be cut, Oldfather said.

"Consumer spending accounts for roughly two-thirds of all goods and services purchased and produced in a year's time," he said. "So, if consumers are pessimistic and decide not to spend, particularly when business spending is down, then it's pretty hard for an economy to have a particularly robust future."

Students might also experience negative effects if consumers give up.

"If that happens, that affects students' abilities to find jobs, the state budget and perhaps may imply tuition costs have to go up another increment in the future," Cassou said.

"It's something to watch," he said. "My own view is that the economy is going to struggle, but it will get through this."

PARKING LOT PARTIES

Enthusiast travels country to study art of tailgating

Tara Patty
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In two hours, he met an 88-year-old woman, a bus driver, the mayor of a town in Nebraska, the chaplain of the K-State football team, a restaurateur and a 4-week-old baby at her third tailgate.

Joe Cahn, self-proclaimed commissioner of tailgating, arrived at KSU Stadium early Saturday morning.

He and his cat, Sophie, parked their motor coach in spot six, right behind the buses that brought Nebraska's football team to Manhattan.

Armed with a digital camera, a video recorder and two canvas bags filled with beads, surveys, seasoning and business cards, he walked the parking lot talking to K-State and Nebraska fans.

"This is one of the fun things, walking around and eating everybody's food and enjoying their hospitality," he said.

Cahn, whom Coca-Cola is sponsoring this year to research tailgates, said tailgating fulfills a need for socialization.

There is nowhere else in America, he said, where one can walk around and have conversations with strangers.

"I was thinking that maybe the friendliness stems from days gone by," he said. "People were on a farm and got together for the Fourth of July function or the picnic or the church dance – that is, what this has really replaced.

Cahn said the parking lot can be like a neighborhood where people have more in common than simply living on the same economic level.

Their common bond is a love for football, a love for Kansas and a love for K-State, he said. The football game is like the banquet, he said, and the tailgate is the reception.

People don't want to leave the reception.

Inside the stadium, fans are there to yell, cheer and scream, not to socialize.

"Inside, you can be happy, or they can break your heart," he said. "Out here, there is no heartbreak."

Kati Lawson, sophomore in psychology, talked to Cahn briefly at Saturday's game.

"He seems really outgoing. He probably has a lot of fun with it," she said. "I think that it probably would be fun."

The community atmosphere of tailgating adds value at no cost for universities.

It's the finest networking opportunity students will have in their lifetimes, he said.

Students can talk to alumni they wouldn't meet under normal circumstances, and the smart ones will hand out résumés, he said.

"Wherever I am, I'm at home," he said. "There is so much energy, so much goodwill."

Nicole Donnert | COLLEGIAN

Joe Cahn, New Orleans, shakes hands with Dennis Meyers, Parkville, Mo., while Meyers' mother Helen and friend Dick Sanford look on in the Meyers' RV parked outside KSU Stadium on Saturday morning. Cahn is sponsored by Coca-Cola to tour football stadiums around the country and visit with the tailgaters in the area.

A good tailgate includes fans wearing team colors and friendliness to everyone,especially opponents, he said.

Cahn's Web site, www.tailgating.com, contains information about football stadiums, recipes from tailgaters and e-mail addresses of tailgaters at different stadiums, he said.

Visitors to stadiums can e-mail these tailgaters and go to their tailgates before the game. The site also includes tailgating tips and products.

Portions of Cahn's data can also be viewed on the Web site.

Cahn's research will be used by industries, entrepreneurs and manufacturers, he said, who are marketing tailgaters but don't have data about the demographics.

The report will be a resource for tailgaters to share.

Cahn has been tailgating for seven years and visits 45 to 50 stadiums a season, including college and professional games. This year, he will be at 31 or 32 National Football League stadiums. He will be at the Rose Bowl and the Fiesta Bowl, and he will end his season at the Super Bowl.

"I know that I'm the luckiest person in the country, and nobody's having more fun than I get to," Cahn said.

TO THE POINT

Local spending would help cure recession

Having faith in an economy continuing to show signs of fatigue is going to be a challenge this holiday season.

According to a recent ABC News/Money Magazine report, consumer confidence in October dropped to 79.4 points, the lowest level since November 1993. This says consumers are concerned about where the economy is going and whether they should spend any extra money.

If holiday spending does decrease, jobs might be cut because demand is down.

But by supporting local businesses, you can help curb this economic trend. If you have the money to spend, why not stay in town to purchase your gifts? Manhattan has a lot to offer, including specialty shops like Mercado, Pathfinder and Digital Shelf.

The more money we spend here, the better our local economy will be. When helping the national economy recover, we have to start somewhere, and local businesses are the places to do just that.

Consider Manhattan before leaving for the holidays. You should consider its shops and restaurants before driving to Topeka or the Kansas City area.

Doing our part to help Uncle Sam get back on his feet requires a little faith in our "home away from home."

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

I miss you, Fred.

How come Paul White's four horsemen of the Apocalypse all look like donkeys?

I'm sorry, but anybody who voted for Phill Kline is just a moron.

Quote of the day: If anybody tries to get tough, just show 'em your underwear.

The workers at the language learning lab are quite possibly the rudest people I have ever met in my life.

My roommate just called her friend a butt-munch. How old-school is that?

The problem with living in an apartment complex with a wooden staircase happens to be that insulation was left out of the entire building, and the walls are paper-thin.

FALL'S BIG SHOW

Football not just about technical understanding, offers insight to culture

LORENA BARBOZA

Saturdays during the fall, I rush to my apartment window to look at the crowds. Cars, buses, motorcycles, bicycles, skateboards and people walking come from everywhere in Kansas and neighboring states.

The parking lots and streets around KSU Stadium receive a new sense of vitality, and enthusiasm rises from the friendly air of community. It is the community of those who love football and who are ready to celebrate, once more, the ceremony of the game.

Hours before the stadium doors are opened, the crowds look for parking spots, set up their food, light their barbecues, set out the chairs and open the coolers. For hours, they wait, having fun, eating, laughing, flirting, playing, discussing and betting on the results of the passionate man-to-man battle.

Saturday, after watching the ceremony, I went with some close friends to the stadium. We showed our tickets and went through the checkpoints into the stadium.

We were ready for football.

It was like going into a different city. The party atmosphere fans enjoy every week was alive and vivid. The colorful ceremonial pomp was displayed, and the beautiful and slender cheerleaders danced acrobatically, singing their team's glories. Everything in the stadium vibrated when Willie performed.

Once his theatrical show against Nebraska was finished, he paraded across the field, inviting his followers to shout the holy K-S-U chant. The band went across the field in beautiful uniforms, and the air was filled with its celebrating and friendly melodies.

Suddenly, the players popped up, wrapped in their huge uniforms, half-hidden behind their helmets, like children ready for a Halloween party.

Sitting in the middle of a crowded stadium, dressed in purple and lost among the spectators, I wondered if a powerful violence was hidden beneath the athletes' festive calm – the rite of aggression, along with the force and the Olympic ideal and the glorification of physical strength and vigor.

The friendly war to control the ball started with speed and power. The gigantic players crashed, ran and twisted their bodies on the ground. Euphoria rose under an impressive discipline. Cheerleaders led the crowd with shouts of encouragement and frustration.

"Go! Go! Go!"

Among the screams, some gave instructions from the gallery, others sipped their drinks and ate their food. There were some who desperately ate their nachos or cotton candy, while others swallowed their hot dogs, pretzels and sandwiches.

Some people even begged those standing on the first row, blocking the view of those behind, to sit down and let others see the game.

The fans kept shouting to the players, some their idols. They wanted and demanded points, they asked for victory, they demanded the maximum effort from players.

They got it. K-State beat Nebraska for the third time in a row at home.

For my friends and me, coming from cultures where this sport is not played, it took some time to understand the rules and to be aware of what was happening on on the field. Slowly, I discovered that the most important thing was not that the technical understanding of the sport but the willingness to open my heart to these unknown emotions and scream from the bottom of my heart, "Go, State!"

TO THE EDITOR

Potential smoking policy would be impossible to enforce; critics need to stop targeting smokers as brunt of criticism, ridicule

Editor,

Recently, there has been some mention of banning smoking on campus. Such a policy would carry as much weight as an anorexic gymnast.

Do you really think people will immediately put out their cigarettes the instant they arrive on campus?

How would they expect this to be enforced, when "No smoking within 30 feet of entrances" is blatantly disobeyed?

Since the last policy, I have made no effort to limit my smoking to designated areas.

All the old policy has done is move the ashtrays away from the doors, so now I leave my butts laying in front of the door, as I am too lazy to actually walk to the ashtray 30 feet away.

Personally, I do not see the big deal.

I can somewhat understand walking out of a building into a group of 10 people smoking, but the only place this seems to occur is in the Union Courtyard.

Even there, we must be segregated to a small corner so as not to endanger the health of all the students eating their Taco Bell.

I could understand it if I had just drenched myself in cologne and driven my car four blocks to park on campus, only then to have to get out and be met with a brief whiff of smoke.

I mean, everyone loves the chemically penetrating smell of cologne, and driving to school actually reduces the amount of dangerous carcinogens released by cigarettes into the atmosphere, right?

But even looking at the smoke coming out of someone can cause irreversible mental and physical anguish, and no one should be subjected to that.

All smokers know and understand the consequences of their actions. "So, why don't you just quit then?"

Oh, why didn't I think of that? I mean, smoking isn't addictive or anything. Everyone smokes because they want to, right?

Cigarettes are addictive – very addictive. I have personally quit smoking at least 30 times. It is no different from alcoholism, crack addiction or caffeine addiction. It is classified as a disease.

Instead of constantly poking fun at us, you should feel sorry for us, the same way you might look at someone with a life-long debilitating disease.

Because in the end, that's what it really is.

As to all of you who constantly call in about us dirty, smelly, non-respectful-of-your-needs smokers, I will end it all right here.

Yes, you are better than we are. You always have been and always will be.

Now, put the paper in the recycling bin, put on your hemp shirt and shoes made from recycled tires, and go to the nearest coffee shop where you can reflect on how we are so below you.

1-sided article misleading to readers; newspaper failed to inform readers about opposing viewpoint of effects of flu shot

Editor,

The "Flu Fighter" article from Nov. 15 is mostly devoid of an opposing viewpoint and reads like an advertisement for Lafene Health Center's flu vaccination program.

Lafene Health Center is also the source for a very weak opposing view, hidden way inside the newspaper.

One place to find an opposing viewpoint is www.909shot.com, the Web site for the National Vaccine Information Center.

It should be the job of our newspapers to keep us informed of both sides of an issue.

Here is the other side of the issue, taken from various sources, including the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and vaccine manufacturers:

The flu is a respiratory infection that produces fever, chills, sore throat, muscle aches and cough, lasting a week or more.

The most serious reaction that has been associated with the flu vaccine is Guillain-Barre Syndrome (GBS), which occurs most often within two to four weeks of vaccination.

GBS is an immune-mediated nerve disorder characterized by muscle weakness, unsteady gait, numbness, tingling, pain and sometimes paralysis of one or more limbs or the face.

Recovery takes several months and can include residual disability. Less than 5 percent of GBS cases end in death.

The flu can be deadly for the elderly and those with compromised immune systems or who are suffering from diabetes, kidney dysfunction and heart disease.

The flu vaccine also can be deadly or cause long-term problems worse than the flu itself. Those with contra-indications to the flu vaccine are as follows:

1) sick with a fever
2) have an impaired immune system
3) have an egg allergy
4) have a mercury allergy
5) have a history of Guillain-Barre syndrome

Federal health agency officials try to guess which three flu strains are most likely to be prevalent in the United States the following year.

If they guess right, the vaccine is thought to be 70 to 80 percent effective in healthy persons and 30 to 40 percent in the not-so-healthy. However, sometimes officials do not correctly predict which flu strains will be most prevalent, and the vaccine's effectiveness is much lower for that year.

Like all vaccines, the flu vaccine only gives a temporary immunity. The only way to get permanent immunity is to recover from the flu naturally, without vaccines.

The evidence clearly indicates you're far better off taking your chances with the flu and avoiding the vaccination altogether.

Do your own research if you like. After all, this is a university.

TAKE 2

Harry Potter flick heavy on special effects, monsters; cartoon feel appeals more to younger generation

"HARRY POTTER AND THE CHAMBER OF SECRETS"

★★★½☆

Movie review By JJ Duncan

The second year at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry holds no surprises in its chamber of secrets and paces itself just like the first year.

At two hours, 40 minutes, "Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets" is a darker movie followed by an almost inappropriately light ending. But the movie is simply a theatrical adaption of the weakest link in a series of books so popular that director Chris Columbus and screenwriter Steven Kloves would have been thrown in Azkaban if they changed much.

That isn't to say the movie is bad, but it does come off as more of a children's movie than the first film.

The cartoon quality of Ron's (Rupert Grint) squeamish face makes it seem as if his heart might stop beating every five minutes or so. The leering Draco (Tom Felton) says more mean things about Harry (Daniel Radcliffe), Ron and Hermione (Emma Watson). The bumbling braggart Gilderoy Lockhart (Kenneth Branagh, "Wild Wild West") plays yet another cartoonish character.

For those familiar with the ongoing Potter saga, the second part of the story leaves the least room for character development, and that transfers on screen. Hagrid and Voldemort are the only characters who really seem to progress and become more real, while Snape and Dumbledore are still one – dimensional and dormant.

For fans, the movie is still worth seeing and improves upon the first movie in other areas.

For one thing, Columbus is experimenting with ways to condense the book for the big screen. It's a good thing, too, since the movie could have sprawled beyond three hours.

The quidditch match is much more interesting and intense the second time around. The first movie made quidditch seem somewhat trivial, but this time Harry and Draco quickly maneuver through the stands at the field in a way reminiscent of the speeder scene in "Return of the Jedi."

Then there are the monsters. Spiders and trees and basilisks, oh my. The final scene will have you more tensed up than that big three-headed dog in the first movie ever could have done.

The performances are strong all around. The characters still look exactly like the book says they should. Branagh's Lockhart steals a few scenes, including one at the end of the credits if you stay to watch. But the 36-year-old Shirley Henderson is the cameo highlight of the movie as Moaning Myrtle, the ghost of a 12-year-old girl in an abandoned restroom.

Henderson's bratty little angst-ridden ghost is cute, funny and annoying all at the same time.

"Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets" is as good as anyone could hope for in interpreting the book. The real test of Columbus' and Kloves' talent will come next year when the two will be forced to condense a much larger book and take on more grown-up themes in "The Prisoner of Azkaban."

Adam Sandler defies critics in reflective P.T. Anderson film

"PUNCH-DRUNK LOVE"

★★★½☆

Movie review By Adam Lee

If you take a closer look at "Happy Gilmore," or for that matter any of Adam Sandler's characters, you'll notice the humor and the violence usually stem from his inability to handle himself in social situations.

So, what if you took away his primary defense system – the ability to make people laugh – and kept his communicative inadequacies? According to Paul Thomas Anderson's "Punch-Drunk Love," you'd be left with an incredibly sad and frustrated man.

Anderson, director of "Boogie Nights" and "Magnolia" and a fan of Sandler's movies, wrote this script specifically for the Saturday Night Live alumus. The in-depth character study is new ground for Sandler, but it's not much of a stretch. Just imagine Bobby Boucher in an art film.

Sandler stars as Barry Egan, a young entrepreneur managing a novelty toilet plunger business out of a small and dismal Los Angeles warehouse space. We are first introduced to Barry as he is making phone calls in the early morning, long before any of his employees have arrived. His office is simple and industrial, decorated only by a map of the United States broken up into different sales zones.

The set combined with Sandler's unusually mundane intonation make it clear that Barry doesn't lead a very exciting life.

Barry is not only boring – he also lacks any sort of social skills after being raised with seven overbearing sisters. They hassle Barry about dating, his business and his weird behavior. Their invasive scrutiny leaves Barry backed into a corner, both figuratively and literally, where he is most likely to attack.

At a birthday party for his sister, Barry is reminded of a childhood instance when he broke a glass door with a hammer after his siblings repeatedly called him "gay boy." Barry denies remembering the event, but amid the deafening chatter of the family sitting down to eat, Barry pulls a repeat performance and kicks out three windows.

What follows is a dissection of Barry's life and the influences of his behavior. Along the way, Barry gets harassed by a phone-sex company, rips off Healthy Choice and American Airlines, and even falls in love. This is a very strange movie, one that is sure to confuse the majority of Sandler's fans. But it also is sure to dismiss Sandler's critics who consider him unable to do anything besides lowbrow slapstick.

Sandler's performance is utterly pathetic, which is just what the role calls for. Sandler is incredibly empathetic, so much so that it is surprising that audiences haven't started ripping apart theaters mid-show. Anderson's script conveys such an understanding of his main character that the film imposes an underlying sense of aggression that will stick with the audience long after the credits roll.

Lawrence group's latest album combines history, outlines future

"LOST SONGS"

★★★½☆

Album review By Adam Lee

The Appleseed Cast, of Lawrence, Kan., has now reminded us of a time in Kansas history when you had to be overwhelmed with bitterness in order to truly rock.

"Lost Songs" lies somewhere along the lines of Kill Creek's "St. Valentine's Garage" and the Get Up Kids' "Four Minute Mile," but this album is also distinctly modern and definitively Appleseed Cast.

The theory behind the title lies in the Cast's 1999 transitional period, after drummer Louie Ruiz left the band and before Josh Baruth had joined. Four of the tracks on "Lost Songs" were written during this time, but apart from some preliminary recordings and a handful of live performances, they were left alone.

After the induction of the current drummer, the band focused on developing a new repertoire for the new lineup.

According to the album's liner notes, a reminiscent listen to those old recordings re-sparked the band's interest in releasing them. So last May, the Appleseed Cast went back into the studio to put the finishing touches on those four-year-old songs and along the way managed to record five new tracks.

"Lost Songs" lies in limbo between the sound of the band's first album, 1998's "End of the Ring Wars," and last year's two-volume release, "Low Level Owl." It serves as both a synopsis of the group's stylistic history and an outline of what is still to come.

Here, the Cast digresses from the conceptual approach of "Low Level Owl" and its piano, sleigh bells and tape loops, for a more basic, raw sound centered on guitar distortion and feedback.

Aaron Pillar's guitar on the opening track, "E to W," sounds more heavily influenced by the songs of the humpback whale than those of Sunny Day Real Estate. Its sweeping wail spreads the listener's interest, allowing Chris Crisci's piercing vocals to become even more caustic. "E to W" aches as much as it blares, a trait that continues through the following eight songs.

"Novice," the album's third song, slows things down a bit and switches between being ravishing and soothing. Some of this polarity relies on guitar effects, but after listening to the closing track, an instrumental version of the song renamed "Novice Ambient Cannibalization," it becomes clear that most of the distress comes from Crisci's throat.

The acoustically driven "Beach Gray" is an exception from the overall sound of the album but one of its greatest accomplishments. The picking is sharp and tight, but it's impossible to tell if the sound is coming from three guitars or 300.

The ambiguous aesthetic of the Appleseed Cast's music causes this album to be both absorbing and cathartic. It would have been unfortunate if these songs had remained lost.

Cats get 1st win at A&M

Volleyball team sweeps Aggies

Game 1: K-State 30, A&M 21
Game 2: K-State 30, A&M 23
Game 3: K-State 33, A&M 26

By Michael Watson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is no longer winless in College Station, Texas.

The 20th-ranked Wildcats (18-6, 14-2) marched into G. Rollie White Coliseum in College Station and ruined the Aggies' Sunday – winning for the first time on A&M's home court.

Not only was it K-State's first sweep against the Aggies in College Station, but it was also the first time Texas A&M had been swept at home since the team was blanked by Nebraska in 1996.

Coach Suzie Fritz said Texas A&M was a strong home team, but the Wildcats did their homework and were able to anticipate the Aggies' moves.

"We were able to do some things early to frustrate them," Fritz said. "We were serving aggressively, and we were able to get them out of system. They started trying to avoid our block early, and when they started doing that, they started making errors."

Sophomore setter Gabby Guerre turned in another impressive all-around performance with six kills on .455 hitting, 39 assists, five digs and five blocks. One thing Guerre said she is known for is her mind games – dumping the ball to get the point herself instead of setting it to her outside hitters.

Guerre said she didn't dump a lot against Texas A&M, but used the technique enough to keep the Aggies respecting her.

"I wanted to let them know that if they didn't respect me, I would hurt them," she said.

The win extended K-State's school-record road conference winning streak to 12 matches. It was also the 15th three-game sweep on the season – one shy of the school record, set in 2000.

The Wildcats now have the opportunity to tie a 25-year-old record – posted from Sept. 24 to Oct. 8, 1977 – when K-State plays Oklahoma at 6 p.m. Wednesday at Ahearn Field House.

Guerre said it is important for the Cats not to let up against the Sooners.

"OU has not been a tough game in the past," she said. "But we need to stay focused and play like a team. We are really peaking at the right time, and I think we are going to keep coasting."

Cats convert on late Tech turnovers to advance in WNIT

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At the half, the "ramblin' wreck" was still hanging around.

But thanks to a 50 percent shooting performance from the field and a 69.2 percent showing from three-point range, K-State was able to defeat Georgia Tech 83-59 on Sunday at Bramlage Coliseum.

The win qualified K-State for a matchup with South[illegible] California on Wednesday. K-State will be host to the Trojans as one of four teams left in this year's Women's National Invitational Tournament.

Georgia Tech coach Agnus Berenato said the credit for the win went to K-State.

"They're very well prepared, they're very well coached and they should win the tournament," Berenato said. "We were excited to be in the NIT, and we were excited to win our first game. And before the game, we thought we could win."

But the Wildcats proved too much for the Yellow Jackets.

K-State was able to build on a four-point halftime lead by turning 14 Georgia Tech turnovers into 21 Wildcat points.

Sophomore guard Megan Mahoney, whose 12 assists on Sunday set a new Bramlage Coliseum record, said turnovers allowed the Wildcats to get into a transition game.

2nd-half surges lead to wins, propel K-State into semifinals

They may have started slow, but they finished strong.

K-State advanced to the WNIT semifinals this weekend after defeating Ball State and Georgia Tech at Bramlage Coliseum.

It wasn't easy, though.

Ball State led by three points at halftime Friday, and Georgia Tech was down by just four Sunday.

But in each case, the Cats found a way to win.

On both occasions, the will to win came by way of second-half defense.

Against Ball State on Friday, K-State was outrebounding the Cardinals by one as the Cats went into the locker room down three.

But the Cats outrebounded Ball State by 17 in the second half and cruised to an easy 10-point victory behind sophomore center Brie Madden, who had 10 points and a career-high 11 rebounds.

pushing the ball up," Mahoney said. "We have a great half-court offense, but that will open our half-court offense."

Kendra Wecker, who had 19 points Sunday, said execution was better.

"I think this game, as compared to last game, we executed a lot better in the half court," Wecker said. "We just need to stay disciplined enough to run our plays all the way through."

Coach Deb Patterson said the WNIT wins over Georgia Tech and Ball State belonged, in part, to the team's fans.

"We want to express our greatest appreciation to the fans in our first and second round game," Patterson said. "They've allowed us to play these two games and get these two wins at home."

- Brie Madden — 10 points 11 rebounds

Swatting the Yellow Jackets

K-State's "Big Four" led the way in the Cats' 83-59 romp over Georgia Tech.

- Nicole Ohlde — 20 points
- Kendra Wecker — 19 points
- Megan Mahoney — 16 points, 12 assists
- Laurie Koehn — 13 points

"Big. That's the only way to describe it," sophomore forward Kendra Wecker said after the game of Madden's play. "All over the place – she had tons of rebounds and assists when she needed to do it. She stepped up and got some key blocks toward the end of the game. That's what we need out of her when she's in."

Against Georgia Tech on Sunday, K-State faced a different type of team. The Yellow Jackets had 6-foot-5 Sonja Mallory inside to bother the Wildcats' post players.

At the intermission, Mallory had 15 points and was a presence down low.

The Cats also were being outrebounded by eight going into the locker room.

Once again, Coach Deb Patterson had to stress physicality in the paint.

"We had to establish we were willing to bang it in the paint – offensively and defensively," Patterson said. "It just took us playing defense as five, as opposed to one or two."

K-State did that and held Georgia Tech to four of 29 shooting in the second half – a 13.8 percent effort.

The Cats outscored the Yellow Jackets 36-16 for the half and made what had been a close battle into a laugher.

"In the second half, we finally put a body on somebody and played defense," center Nicole Ohlde said. "Hopefully we can do that a whole 40 minutes instead of 20."

DEAN | Witnesses, detective testify in sodomy case

alleged Dean drugged the victim with cocaine.

Pedro Irigonegaray, Dean's attorney, said any sexual acts were committed by consenting adults. And, he said, the women were never drugged.

The prosecution first called the alleged victim to testify. The victim testified she and her then-22-year-old friend went to Fat's Bar and Grill at around 1 a.m. on Jan. 6. The victim said she drank prior to entering Fat's but was not drunk.

At Fat's, Dean approached the women. The alleged victim said Dean invited them to go with him to the liquor store, which was next to Fat's on the corner of 12th and Laramie streets.

They went with him, and he gave them each three drinks in the back of the liquor store, she said. She saw him pour only one of the three drinks.

She said that after hearing a noise at the back door, they all three went into a small storage room at the back of the store.

There, she said, Dean turned the lights off while they were all pressed up against a wall. Then her friend left to look for a cigarette lighter, leaving Dean and the victim alone.

The victim said she blacked out, and the next thing she knew, her pants were down around her ankles.

"I felt weird and uncomfortable and didn't know what was going on," she said.

She said she felt drunk and drugged. Then, she said she searched for her friend and found her in another room. Dean started kissing both of them, she said.

"It was different. It was weird, but I wasn't fighting it. I didn't say no," she said.

But then, she said, she became more aware of the situation and wanted to leave.

"It was like I was waking up," she said.

She said she kept turning the light on to find the women's coats, and Dean kept turning it off. Eventually, she found the coats, and they left. They forgot their purses, however, and went back to the store.

She said Dean pulled her friend into a small room, but the victim grabbed her friend, and they walked back to her home at around 4:30 a.m.

At her home, the victim noticed her pants were on inside out, and her underwear were shifted sideways.

She went to Mercy Health Center early the next morning to have a rape kit done. Tests showed she had cocaine in her blood, but there was no trace of a date-rape drug or semen. Her blood alcohol content was .06.

The victim said she did not take any non-prescription drugs that night nor in the week prior to that night.

The defense then asked the victim about discrepancies between her testimony and prior statements to the police.

The victim initially told police she walked to the bars, when she testified she drove to the bars.

She also did not tell police about a shot she consumed before going to the bars, and she did not tell the detective about kissing Dean.

The victim said she concealed some things during her initial interviews for fear she would get in trouble for drinking and driving. Plus, she said, she was required to file a report before Mercy would perform any tests. So, she said she was in a hurry and did not include every detail about the night's events.

The victim also testified she chose to both go to the liquor store and kiss Dean.

Riley County Police Department Detective Darla King was then called to testify.

She said she interviewed Dean one day after the victim filed a report. The taped interview was then played.

Dean said in the taped interview that the women asked if they could accompany him to the liquor store. He said he served them several drinks at the store but began to notice the victim's friend was getting extremely drunk.

He said he offered to get them a taxi ride, but "they said it was OK. They were just thrilled to be in the liquor store."

He said he went to his office and when he returned to the back room, he saw bottles they took protruding from a purse.

"At that point, I knew they were pretty damn drunk," he said in the taped interview.

After hearing a noise at the back door, he said they went to a back room. One of the women turned the lights off, he said.

Then it got physical, he said. The victim was kissing him, while her friend took off his pants. The victim's friend, he said, was extremely aggressive.

"If there was ever an aggressor in this situation, it was them," he said.

They all started kissing, he said, and at one point, both girls had their shirts off. He also said he gave and received oral sex from both women.

At no point, he said, was either of them passed out.

"I put myself in a bad situation," he said, "but there was nothing about it that was non-consensual."

King then was asked about the effects of cocaine. She said it is a stimulant and has a mood-altering effect.

She said its effects on alcohol include memory lapses and passing out, but not completely passing out.

The defense then called the alleged victim's friend, now 23, to testify.

The friend said that when she left the two alone to find a lighter, she returned to find the alleged victim lying in the floor with her pants around her ankles and Dean between her legs – something she did not include in her written police statement.

Irigonegaray said the women later remembered events because they were interviewed at the same time during a follow-up interview.

"That is why her memory is now filling in those spaces where before they were blank," Irigonegaray said.

King said she did not recall interviewing the women simultaneously in the same room, but the victim's friend did.

The friend also testified she kissed the defendant and put her arms around him, but she said she never touched him anywhere else, nor did she ever have her shirt off.

She also said her friend was not the type of girl to participate in such alleged acts.

The prosecution and defense both gave closing remarks.

"Our theory is (the alleged victim) was unable to give consent because she was under the influence of drugs and alcohol," Peterson said. "You don't have to be unconscious for five hours in order to be unable to give consent."

Irigonegaray said the acts were committed among consenting adults. There was no evidence, he said, that the women were rendered powerless or unconscious.

"Her friend says she's not that type of girl," Irigonegaray said, "but on that day, that's the type of girl she was."

NEBRASKA | Cats set new record against Huskers

good an outing it truly was for Roberson.

"Ell had a great game," wide receiver James Terry said. "I think he should be up for Heisman, personally. In every big game, he just steps up to the plate and plays."

Terry caught just one catch on the day, but that's because Roberson had to throw the ball only eight times.

K-State rushed for 415 yards against a Nebraska defense that had allowed just 121 yards per contest.

It was evident from the opening drive that the Cats weren't going to disguise much. They were going to run the ball right at the Huskers.

In the eight plays K-State ran in that drive, all eight were on the ground.

Roberson had 43 of those yards, including a 1-yard touchdown run to cap off the drive.

But Roberson's day of running wild was only getting started.

Midway through the first quarter and pinned back on the K-State 9-yard line, Roberson decided to call his own number.

A play fake to fullback Travis Wilson got a Husker defensive end to bite. Roberson elected to keep the ball, which turned out to be a good call.

He scampered 91 yards for the score, crossing the goal line right in front of a nearly Husker-filled north end zone section. The run was the longest since Gerald Hackney's 96-yard gallop in 1948.

"It looked like the Red Sea – I just saw the goal line and just tried to run away," Roberson said. "Then I saw the guys coming out of the corner of my eye, so I just wanted to hold on to the ball so they wouldn't strip it."

Roberson completed a nearly flawless quarter of play with 139 yards on the ground, and he still hadn't thrown a pass.

Isn't a quarterback supposed to throw the ball?

Not this quarterback on this day.

Roberson threw just two passes in the first half and eight on the day. He completed four of them for 92 yards.

Cats claw Huskers

For the third straight week, K-State's win was the largest in the series with its opponent. Before Saturday's 49-13 win over Nebraska, the largest margin of victory (of K-State wins) was when the Cats beat the Huskers 27-0 in 1953.

Coach Bill Snyder said running the ball had a lot to do with where the K-State drives started.

"You go back and look at field position, and there were times you would like to throw it, but the field position wasn't what we needed it to be," Snyder said.

"And we were playing with the lead – not playing conservatively – but we wanted more field position to throw it, and we felt there were things we could do to run the ball effectively."

With Roberson's day on the ground, he now has 898 yards rushing for the season. That number surpasses Michael Bishop's 748 yards in 1998 as the most rushing yards by a Wildcat quarterback in a season.

Once again, the comparisons to the former Heisman Trophy runner-up swirled around the post-game room – along with other comments about where Roberson has been and why he hasn't done this before.

But Roberson just smiled and shrugged off the usual parallels and criticisms.

"Ell Roberson has always been here," Roberson said. "It's just a simple fact of, 'Can he get it done?' That's what I've been trying to do."

DEFENSE | Nebraska ground game stifled in loss

"Nebraska was the most physical team we've played all year," Reese said.

"I guess they just didn't come ready to play. I know we did."

Linebacker Josh Buhl said K-State's defense is getting better by the week.

"Every week, it's getting better and better," Buhl said. "We shut them down. We did what we had to do. I'm really proud of the defense and we're really proud of ourselves."

Defensive end Andrew Shull said it was an honor to play with K-State's seniors at home against Nebraska.

"I'm very proud," he said. "It's been a very emotional day. This is the last time I'll play with some of the guys on this field. I'm proud of those guys."

Coming into Saturday's contest, the Huskers had outgained K-State on the ground in 33 consecutive meetings.

And Nebraska had topped 200 yards rushing 30 times in that stretch.

Shull said it was just time for that to come to an end.

"We're the type of defense that doesn't want to give up a touchdown, doesn't want to give up three points," Shull said.

"We don't want to give up any points at all."

U.N. initiates weapons search

U.S. officials report Iraqi anti-aircraft fire

By Bassem Mroue
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq - U.N. arms inspectors returned to Iraq Monday after a four-year hiatus, calling on President Saddam Hussein's government to cooperate with their search for weapons of mass destruction in the interest of peace. But Washington said it already sees likely violations.

Chief U.N. inspector Hans Blix and about 30 inspectors flew into the Iraqi capital aboard a white cargo plane emblazoned with the black letters "U.N." as allied warplanes bombed Iraqi air defense systems in the northern no-fly zone. The U.S. military said the jets were fired on during routine patrols.

The return of the inspectors is widely seen as Saddam's last chance to avoid a devastating war with the United States.

At the White House, spokesman Scott McClellan said Monday the Iraqi anti-aircraft fire "appears to be a violation" of the U.N. resolution that sent the inspectors back to Iraq.

It was unclear whether other countries on the Security Council would consider incidents in the no-fly zone serious enough to merit a response, because the council never explicitly authorized the patrols. Iraq considers such patrols a violation of its sovereignty and frequently shoots at them. Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld, traveling in Chile, said the United States is waiting for a pattern of Iraqi misdeeds before going back to the council.

The return of the inspectors is widely seen as Saddam's last chance to avoid a devastating war with the United States. President Bush has warned Saddam that failure to cooperate with the inspectors will bring on an American attack and that Washington will pursue a policy of "zero tolerance" toward Iraqi infractions.

Saddam's deputy, Izzat Ibrahim, told the official Iraqi Rally against hate

Flags inspire thought, talk among students

By Jamie Barrett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People stare as they walk by.

The red, purple, blue, yellow and green flags covering the lawn in front of Waters Hall cause people to stop and look. They talk about what the flags mean and analyze the reason the flags are there as they hurry on toward their classes.

In the middle of the grass, a white sign reading "Haymaker Hall's Campaign Against Hate" lists types of hate crimes and the total number of crimes committed in the United States during the year 2000.

The hate crimes include crimes because of race, religion, sexual orientation, ethnicity and disability. The numbers total 9,413, and the flags represent these numbers.

Alex Brooks-Schrauth, sophomore in anthropology, said the bright colors of the flags caught her attention as she walked by. She said she wanted to figure out what it was all about, so she stopped and read the sign. She said she thinks a lot of people get so busy that they close their eyes to things like hate crimes.

"Something like this makes me more aware of what happens in the world," Brooks-Schrauth said. "Looking at this has made me more concerned and aware of what goes on, not just in the community, but the world."

And that is the point, said Tanya Massey, residence life coordinator for Haymaker Hall.

"People are catching the flags as they walk by," she said. "We hope that something like this can have an impact on the way people view hate crimes."

The campaign, which began Sunday, is in its first year at K-State. Jacob Schuler, resident assistant for the sixth floor of Haymaker and junior in graphic design and digital arts, said he and another resident assistant got the idea for a campaign from a conference they went to.

He said he hopes the campaign affects people because so many people look past hate crimes as a serious problem.

"With hate, it can go as far as a crime but can also go as far as bad word choice," he said.

"We hope to make people consider others' feelings. I hope they think a little mor about what they say."

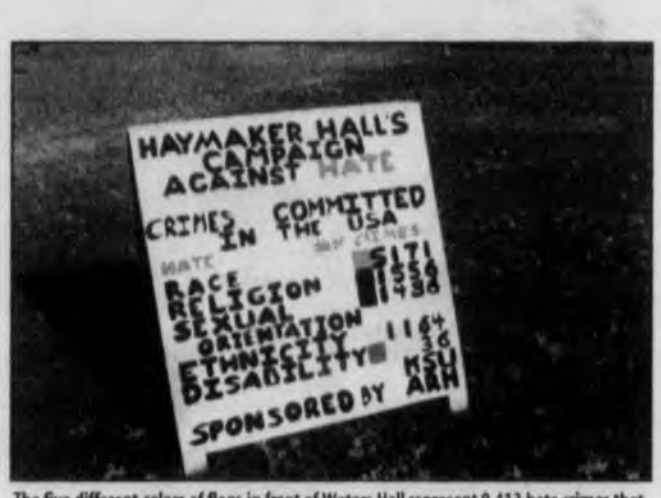
Standing in front of Waters Hall, Megan Montgomery, freshman in animal sciences and industry; Jenni Sellke, junior in business management; and Alex Brooks-Schrauth, sophomore anthropology, life sciences and international studies; look at the flags planted by residents of Haymaker Hall as part of their Campaign Against Hate. The purple flags represented the 1,556 religious hate crimes committed in 2000 in the United States.



Schuler said the flags put hate crimes more at the front of people's minds.

"People hear about it sporadically, but it isn't something a lot of people concentrate on," he said.

In coordination with the flag campaign, Schuler said that Haymaker sponsored a program called Strikeout, which was held on Monday night.

He said students were invited to view a Powerpoint presentation about hate crimes as well as to read poetry and view a scene from the film "Boys Don't Cry," in which a hate crime is committed.

Massey said Haymaker will also sponsor a program called "A Day in the Life Of" at 7:30 tonight, in which students can experience what it is like to be a minority, and a showing of "The Laramie Project" at 6 p.m. on Thursday.

The five different colors of flags in front of Waters Hall represent 9,413 hate crimes that occurred in 2000 in the United States.

Schuler said he hopes the flag campaign will make people more aware of the fact that hate crimes are a problem in the United States today.

"We hope they make people more aware of how they act and treat people," he said.

"Flags don't do it by themselves, but they bring it to people's minds in the long run. The flags get them to think about it a few seconds more than they might."

Professors search for answers in milk debate

Studies show teens not getting enough dairy

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As kids, we were given a carton of milk with our lunch at school every day. If the cafeteria food wasn't good, it wasn't uncommon to drink the milk and shove as much food in the empty carton as would fit in order to leave the lunchroom.

Although this deception might sound negative, at least the milk was being consumed, which doesn't seem to be the case now.

According to the National Dairy Council, 54 percent of males and females consume only two to three servings of dairy foods per day, when it is recommended to have three to four servings.

Three K-State faculty members have decided to research why youth today may not be consuming milk.

Karen Schmidt and Ike Jeon, both professors in the Department of Animal Science and Industry, and Delores Chambers, assistant professor of human nutrition, received a $89,958 grant in July 2002, from the Kansas Attorney General's Office.

Unitarian faith brings religions together, puts individualism before institutions

Spiritualism found through acceptance

By Rachel Krier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They have no specific holy book to read – no single prophet to follow.

There is no certain creed they all adhere to. They don't have one god they all must believe in.

Yet the Unitarian Universalist Fellowship has the ability to bring atheists, Christians, Buddhists, Confucians and individuals of any other religion together for Sunday service.

Amelia Roudebush, sophomore in open-option, was raised Unitarian and said the key element for bonding the congregation starts on an individual basis.

"The interesting thing about Unitarianism is that you can get two different people – from two different backgrounds and two different spiritual walks in life – and bring them together by the basic principle of cherishing the worth and dignity of every person," Roudebush said.

The Unitarian fellowship is based on seven principles ranging from the inherent worth and dignity of every person to the respect for the interdependent web of all existence.

The principles drew Amy Walker, self-proclaimed atheist, to attend the Unitarian Fellowship of Manhattan. As a mother of two, Walker said she wanted to find a place where her children could learn about religion but not have it forced upon them. She found that in Unitarianism.

Montgomery Gentry's Gentry becomes a father

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Troy Gentry of the country music duo Montgomery Gentry is a new father.

Gentry's wife, Angie, gave birth last week to Kaylee Alexandra Gentry in Nashville.

Both mom and 5-pound, 1-ounce Kaylee are doing well.

Gentry and Eddie Montgomery won the Country Music Association's best vocal duo award in 2000, the first time in nine years that Brooks & Dunn didn't win it.

Myers attends KSU game

Taking a break, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Richard Myers was just a fan at Saturday's Nebraska-K-State football game.

Myers, who earned a degree in mechanical engineering from K-State in 1965, visited the Cats' locker room and spoke to the team following Saturday's 49-13 win over the Huskers.

Coach Bill Snyder noted it was the second time the Air Force general has taken in a K-State game since he became President Bush's top military adviser in the fall of 2001.

Myers grew up in Merriam, Kan., and tries to visit Manhattan for at least one football game a year.

George goes back to school

Jason Alexander, best known as George Costanza on "Seinfeld," has a new role – he's a college professor.

Alexander, who dropped out of Boston University to pursue acting, has been at the University of Southern California this semester as the School of Theatre's first George Burns Visiting professor.

Eppie Lederer, known as Ann Landers, died in June at the age of 83. Her 11-room Lake Shore Drive apartment was filled with possessions that an Elgin auction house will put up for bid Nov. 23-24.

Producer visits film festival

Andy Karsch, producer of the upcoming Kevin Kline movie "The Emperor's Club," was back on familiar turf when the film premiered at the Boston Film Festival.

Karsch is a longtime friend of the Kennedy family, and managed Sen. Edward Kennedy's 1976 Senate campaign. He's also close with Sen. John Kerry, a Massachusetts Democrat.

Crowell readies 2nd album

Country songwriter Rodney Crowell is set to release his new album, "Learning How to Fly," on the DMZ/Columbia label run by legendary producer T Bone Burnett.

The follow-up to his critically acclaimed and deeply personal album, "The Houston Kid," is due out this spring.

UNITARIAN | Seven principles guide Unitarians in search for personal truth, meaning

place," Walker, senior in architectural engineering, said. "It's an intellectual environment where all opinions are welcomed, and that challenges your way of thinking."

Roudebush found herself in this same environment every Sunday morning of her childhood.

With sermon topics including politics, literature and numerous religious texts, Roudebush remembered having a lot of information to sort through.

She said the usual questions of early adolescence were sometimes amplified by the nature of Unitarianism. Although she may have been more confused by so many different ideas, Roudebush said she also found support from her congregation.

"There were times when I was mad at my parents for not raising me in a religion that had more structure, with a book I could look to for answers or something," Roudebush said. "Now, I am so grateful for my free search for truth and meaning in my life.

"My father was raised Unitarian and my mother American Baptist – I have been equally influenced by both of them."

Along with her parents, Roudebush said she also found support from her minister, the Rev. David Grimm, and from her congregation.

"It's wonderful to have Rev. Grimm – he watched me grow up," Roudebush said. "I feel I learn a lot from other people's spiritual journeys. Unitarians believe personal experience, conscience and reason are final authorities rather than an institution."

While growing up in Topeka, Kan., Roudebush heard Grimm speak three Sundays of the month. Now, since she lives in Manhattan, she only hears him speak one weekend a month.

Though Grimm has been a constant in Roudebush's life as a Unitarian, she said her faith today is different than what it was a year ago. Roudebush said her faith is always changing because she is continually growing spiritually.

She said she's grown even more since she has come to college.

"It became a personal responsibility to get myself up in the morning," Roudebush said. "I was going to service for myself and no one else and that made it even more important. Once you get there, you feel good."

Along with attending the Unitarian Fellowship in Manhattan, Roudebush also goes to a Christian-based discussion group on campus, which she said is part of her individual and active search for truth. Roudebush said she also puts a lot of emphasis on daily prayer.

"I believe God is much greater and much more glorious than we can comprehend," Roudebush said. "Having a personal relationship with him through daily prayer is important to me."

Roudebush said that although she bases most of her faith on Christian teachings, that does not necessarily mean she is a Christian.

In the same way, Unitarianism originates from Christian and Jewish traditions, but Grimm said it is a religion of free-thinkers joined by certain principles.

"The principles encourage us to live our lives meaningfully and guide us in building a just society," Grimm said.

7 principles of Unitarian Universalism:

1. The inherent worth and dignity of every person.
2. Justice, equity and compassion in human relations.
3. Acceptance of one another and encouragement to spiritual growth in our congregations.
4. A free and responsible search for truth and meaning.
5. The right of conscience and the use of the democratic process within our congregations and in society at large.
6. The goal of world community with peace, liberty and justice for all.
7. Respect for the interdependent web of all existence of which we are a part.

Religious Symbol:

The flaming chalice is a widely accepted symbolism of Unitarianism. Most fellowships light the flame of the chalice at the beginning of services. It is a symbol used to unite the members of the congregation.

Unitarianism's main sources of ideas:

1. Direct experience of that transcending mystery and wonder, affirmed in all cultures, which moves us to a renewal of the spirit and an openness to the forces which create and uphold life.
2. Words and deeds of prophetic women and men which challenge us to confront powers and structures of evil with justice, compassion and the transforming power of love.
3. Wisdom from the world's religions which inspires us in our ethical and spiritual life.
4. Jewish and Christian teachings which call us to respond to God's love by loving our neighbors as ourselves.
5. Humanist teachings which counsel us to heed the guidance of reason and the results of science, and warn us against idolatries of the mind and spirit.
6. Spiritual teachings of earth-centered traditions which celebrate the sacred circle of life and instruct us to live in harmony with the rhythms of nature.

Brief history of the Unitarian Universalist Fellowship:

Modern-day Unitarianism known as the Unitarian Universalist Association roots from the Universalist Church of America founded in 1783 and incorporated in 1866. The Association was founded in 1825 and incorporated in 1847.

Web site offers tips to avoid mistakes

By Crystal Welborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At one time or another, most people have done something they wish they hadn't.

There is an interactive Web site, learnfrommymistakes.com, where visitors can read about mistakes some of America's most successful people have made in order to avoid repeating the mistakes themselves.

In a press release, the creator of the site – Lear Communications President Tony Scibelli – said he hoped the site can help college students, young professionals and high school students avoid mistakes in their careers.

Misty Ascher, junior in finance, said that although she has never heard of the site, she thinks it is a good idea.

"A lot of people don't want to listen to their parents, and people look up to famous people – sometimes it's just easier to hear it from them," she said.

The site contains interviews with several famous people in the worlds of sports, entertainment, health and business, as well as a few people from other facets of life.

The Web site is free to all users. According to the press release, this is so more people will have access to the information on the site.

Dan Bernardo, head of the Department of Agricultural Economics, said hearing from professionals about their failures and successes is important for students.

"What we try to show students is professionals in their disciplines. We want students to hear about what mistakes they made and how not to repeat them," he said.

Some famous names on the site are Country Joe McDonald, '60s musician and artist, and gymnast Dominique Moceanu, Olympic gold-medalist.

The stars details their lives and answers questions about mistakes they made along the way.

Bernardo saidthat with the academic diversity of K-State, students should explore a variety of avenues when it comes to researching career paths.

"Students can and should use this source to provide some guidance in their futures," he said.

Appeal panel vetoes court's limitations on terrorist wiretapping

By Curt Anderson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - The Justice Department has broad discretion in the use of wiretaps and other surveillance techniques to track suspected terrorists and spies, a federal appeals court ruled Monday.

In a 56-page opinion overturning a May decision by the ultra-secret Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court, the three-judge panel said the expanded wiretap guidelines sought by Attorney General John Ashcroft under the new USA Patriot Act law do not violate the Constitution.

The special review court ordered the lower court to issue a new ruling giving the government the powers it seeks. The spy court's restrictions, according to the ruling, "are not required by (the law) or the Constitution."

Ashcroft said the decision "revolutionizes our ability to investigate terrorists and prosecute terrorist acts."

The American Civil Liberties Union and several other groups had argued that Ashcroft's proposed guidelines would unfairly restrict free speech and due process protections by giving the government far greater ability to listen to telephone conversations and read e-mail.

"We're disappointed with the decision, which suggests that (the spy court) exists only to rubber-stamp government decisions," said Jameel Jaffer, an ACLU staff attorney.

Ashcroft said he believes there are adequate safeguards in the act to ensure the government does not overstep its bounds in gathering information.

"We have no desire whatsoever to in any way erode or undermine constitutional liberties," he said.

It was not immediately clear whether the ACLU or other groups will appeal the case to the Supreme Court. The government has sole right of appeal under the law, but attorneys were exploring other ways of getting the case to the high court.

The decision was issued by a trio of judges appointed by President Reagan: Ralph B. Guy Jr., a semiretired judge on the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati; Edward Leavy, a semiretired judge on the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco; and Laurence Hirsch Silberman, a semiretired judge on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

They are sitting as the U.S. Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court of Review, which is named by Chief Justice William Rehnquist.

The intelligence court, created in 1978, is charged with overseeing sensitive law enforcement surveillance by the U.S. government.

> "We have no desire whatsoever to in any way erode or undermine constitutional liberties."
> John Ashcroft
> ATTORNEY GENERAL

Its May 17 ruling was the first-ever substantial defeat for the government on a surveillance issue, and its unprecedented, declassified public opinion issued in August documented abuses of surveillance warrants in 75 instances during both the Bush and Clinton administrations.

The Justice Department had argued before the appeals panel that the spy court had "wholly exceeded" its authority and that Congress clearly approved of the greater surveillance authority when it passed the Patriot Act a month after the Sept. 11 terror attacks.

The changes permit wiretaps when collecting information about foreign spies or terrorists is "a significant purpose," rather than "the purpose," of an investigation. Critics at the time said they feared the government might use the change as a loophole to employ espionage wiretaps in common criminal investigations.

The spy court had concluded that Ashcroft's proposed rules under that law were "not reasonably designed" to safeguard the privacy of Americans.

But the three-judge panel overturned that, saying the new law's provisions on surveillance "certainly come close" to meeting minimal constitutional standards regarding searches and seizures. The government's proposed use of the Patriot Act, the judges concluded, "is constitutional because the surveillances it authorizes are reasonable."

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Hate campaign needs attention of community

It is not difficult to notice the flags located in front of Waters Hall, nor is it easy to avoid the message that each one sends.

Haymaker Hall's Campaign Against Hate is one of the many programs on campus that attempts to raise awareness for hate and crime-related issues, and should not be neglected by the campus community.

Other programs devoted to peace and acceptance, such as the Rally for Nonviolence in late August, did not receive the attention and support expected of a diverse college environment.

Students, faculty and others interested should not be deterred by the fact that the programs are sponsored by a single residence hall. Despite the publicity being hall-oriented, the concerns addressed by the weeklong program, which include minority awareness and diversity movie events, are vital not only to our campus, but also to the entire community.

Go visit the flags or attend one of the week's activities.

Programs like Campaign Against Hate are vital to awareness, but participation on the part of students and faculty is necessary for improvement of our campus and the surrounding community.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

TEMPER TUNE UP

Confidence, motivation 2 positive outcomes from emotional outbursts

ANGEL WILSON

There has been a hefty serving of attitudes going around this campus lately. Teachers have them, employees and employers have them, and the students definitely have them.

It's not easy to live in a town that is very similar to a petri dish – everyone sees and knows what you're doing. At least if this was a real petri dish, we would have constant supervision and get to have a cute research assistant change our dish.

But no one is discounting your right to have an attitude. What is being discounted here is the effects of attitude, mainly frustration. Attitude takes various forms: grouchiness, fatigue, smart-aleckness and even loneliness. Frustration is an effect of these.

Frustration starts on a low level. Example one: imagine being ticked because somebody steps on your new Nikes.

Extra peeved takes us to the second level. Example two: imagine trying to get to the bank at 4:50 p.m., but you get caught in the long line of cars on Claflin. You just want to scream, "I know you have the right of way, but hurry up and cross the street, dag blam!"

The third level is being mad. Example three: imagine your significant other saying he would spend time with you this evening, but he got so consumed in Madden 2003 or "The Sopranos" that he conveniently forgot.

Anger rounds out the list as the fourth level. Example four: imagine taking your parents' car – after they have told you not to – and bringing it back with a dent and busted taillight. They tell you they are not mad, but angry, that you would do something after they have told you not to.

There's nothing like having the parents angry.

My personal favorite (it doesn't even have a level) is extreme pisstivity. This occurs when you can't get enough financial aid because the form says your parents make too much money.

Of course my parents would have enough money to pay for school – they have real jobs. That income on those forms is theirs, not mine.

Although these are different levels with different examples, frustration occurs in each of these circumstances. Truthfully, nobody wants to be frustrated all the time. It can begin to have an emotional toll on your body and spirit. It can make people not want to approach you or have anything to do with you.

People wear frustration just like any other garment. Sometimes it matches perfectly, and other times it clashes tremendously.

But don't get me wrong – it's OK to be a little frustrated sometimes. A little irritation does wonders for the psyche. It gives some people confidence ("I don't like the way you treat me. I deserve better than you can give right now. See ya!") and motivation ("I'm unhappy with the way this team is playing. I can do better than that! I think I'm gonna try out").

Just think about the important things that have been accomplished by people who have been frustrated by something: integration, coeducational schools and residence halls, voting rights, equal opportunity employment. Frustration can be a catalyst for negative and positive things.

Hey, why not get frustrated about the recent budget cuts, the 25-percent tuition hike, the cut in library hours or the lack of parking across campus?

Get frustrated about something. Get emotional and wear your feelings on your sleeve for at least one moment. Frustration is the product of something affecting you. This doesn't make you a punk or a sissy. This makes you a passionate human being.

And passion is sexy.

Unobtainable financial aid creates exclusive American dream for students

NASRINA BURNETT

Financial aid is crucial to a great number of college students. Without it, many would be unable to attend even the more modestly priced universities and colleges.

Yet, despite its importance, many students unknowingly risk permanently losing their ability to qualify for any financial aid at all.

I'm talking about the Drug-Free Student Aid Provision, an amendment of the Higher Education Act of 1998. This legislation causes any student who has been convicted of any drug charge, regardless of severity, to be permanently denied financial aid.

This policy is counterproductive, racist, hypocritical and illogical.

The basis of the American dream is that through hard work, a person can better his life and that of his family. Education is the most effective way to move above the social ranking into which you are born. By achieving a higher level of education than that of your parents, you will more than likely end up in a higher income bracket than them, allowing you to give your descendents more opportunities.

Without access to education, a group is not going to be able to achieve social progress.

Experimental drug users who are denied access to a college education will either sink below the poverty line or become criminals to support themselves and their families. More than 30,000 college students were denied federal aid for the 2002-03 school year, according to the Students for Sensible Drug Policy Web site, www.ssdp.com.

With it becoming increasingly difficult to get a decent-paying job without a college degree, what do we expect these people to do when they have families to support? If this policy didn't needlessly cut the aid these students were receiving, it would be likely that they would grow out of their "wild" youth and become contributing, tax-paying, law-abiding citizens.

Additionally, this legislation targets minorities. Author Mike Gray writes in his book, "Drug Crazy: How We Got Into This Mess and How We Can Get Out," that policies claiming to be tough on drugs are only tough on minorities. Since minorities are more frequently convicted of drug crimes than whites, minorities are more affected by this policy.

Minorities are told that if they work hard enough, they can attain equality, when the reality of the situation is that policies like the Higher Education Drug Act simply stack the odds against them.

African-Americans and Hispanics are already the largest racial populations below the poverty line. With this policy in place, racial inequality is likely to get worse.

It makes sense for hypocritical legislators to enact this policy. After all, the only people harmed by this policy are those who are financially disadvantaged.

A wealthy legislator can foot the bill for college tuition, rendering this policy completely ineffective. If the argument is going to be made that this policy is to be used as a deterrent to stop college students from engaging in drug use or trafficking, the policy should have the capacity to punish equally without regard to socioeconomic status.

Anyone who can afford college tuition faces absolutely no effect from this policy. If legislators want to claim a dedication to decreasing drug use among college students, they should enact a policy that would actually apply to their own children.

The only thing this policy can accomplish is a dramatic expansion of the rich-poor gap. The upper class will easily maintain their position without fear of competition when the lower classes aren't able to educate themselves.

I am completely baffled at the supposed logic behind this piece of legislation. How much sense does it make to allow rapists, murders and child molesters to receive financial aid regardless of conviction while your friendly neighborhood pot-smoker has to drop out of school because his financial aid is cut off?

If the American dream is to be preserved, the Higher Education Drug Act Provision must be repealed. A nation that claims to care about justice and opportunity shouldn't allow this policy to exist.

I miss you, too, Christine.

Hey, Collegian, thanks for ruining the most monumental K-State football front-page article by having the word "sodomy" at the top of the page. That's really nice.

It became my anti-Catholic bashing fest when they started basically ruining the world.

For all you people talking stuff on Nebraska, I just have one question: How many national championships has K-State won? Oh, yeah, none.

Wanna hear a funny joke? Nebraska football.

You know you have a bad memory when every Wednesday, you go to Longhorn's and dance with the same people, yet you introduce yourself every time.

This past weekend was the first time ever that the men's basketball team, women's basketball team, football team and the Chiefs all won.

My bobble-head Willie from McDonald's won't stop staring at me.

First of all, I wasn't complaining about anti-war protesters, I was complaining about you having your children out there. Second of all, yes, I have enrolled for the draft.

Our forefathers went to war so that you would have that constitutional right. Now I will go to war to keep Saddam from dropping nerve gas in your backyard. You might want to stop and think what you're protesting against.

What sexual position makes the ugliest babies? Ask your parents.

I'm from Johnson County, and my parents are paying for my college, my Beamer and over Christmas break, I'm going on a cruise. What up now?

It's funny. I have a box of matches in my hand, and all I can think of is that sculpture made out of dried-up, old branches next to the art museum.

If you're looking in a mirror with X-ray vision goggles, would you see a reflection of yourself in X-ray vision, or would you look right through the mirror?

I'm so glad I go to K-State, the school that flips off the opposing team. Way to go, Wildcat fans.

I just want to snuggle, but way too many girls have asked if I'm gay.

Academic advising process ineffective; other steps should be taken to ensure that each student has equal opportunity to graduate on time

Editor,

An individual's college experience is intended to prepare him or her for society and its challenges. This experience entails a variety of bliss and misfortune. However, the sole association to college is always the student.

While in college, a student will progress through many phases and responsibilities, but one constant will remain: the curriculum.

The student body has the right to an effective academic advising policy that not only will ensure high-quality education but also will be known as a central component to K-State's educational mission. The current policy is extremely inconsistent and has amounted to numerous accounts of prolonged graduation dates.

The Kansas Board of Regents set specific measures that each university must establish and provide. They are goal setting, information, transitions, accessibility and referral to campus resources. Many student concerns and adviser evaluations have proven that K-State does not consistently fulfill each construct.

Therefore, new, innovative means must be established.

I suggest we cultivate a culture that realizes the importance and accountability of academic advising. Annual adviser evaluations are another mechanism absolutely critical to advising effectiveness.

College administrators also should investigate ways to reduce the number of students each adviser has to see. This would dramatically increase adviser competency and students' personal experiences.

This letter was written not only to instigate awareness but also out of concern for students. I personally know many students who have been affected by inadequate advising and think the suggested changes or even simple reevaluation could dramatically relieve many hardships.

This is merely a proposition to my fellow colleagues to promote awareness. I ask that you please consider my stance and begin to implement the necessary steps to make these changes.

'Wrap it Up' exhibition provides early option for Christmas shoppers

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most people go to art exhibits to enjoy the art that is hanging on the wall. A pair of local art exhibits, however, give viewers a chance to take the art home.

Two local art exhibits are underway, providing the community a chance to see the results of several artists' labor.

It is also an opportunity for individuals to purchase the art that they like most, Susan Oviatt, organizer of the Manhattan Arts Center's exhibit "Wrap it up," said.

"If you see something on the wall, you can take it," Oviatt said. "That's what makes this unique to a gallery with the cash and carry. Normally you have to wait for like a month, for the show to be over until you can go back and pick it up.

"So, this show is run more like a shop – you can leave with it that night. And we'll even wrap it up for you, too."

The Manhattan Arts Center and Urban Designs are having art exhibits and sales just in time for Christmas. Both venues are letting people take the art home at the time of purchase.

They offer a wide variety of types of art in different medias that include painting, clay, glass, textiles, jewelry and photography, Oviatt said.

"There's something here for everybody," she said, "from dolls and rocking horses for children to lace bookmarks and paintings for older people."

Art enthusiasts are welcome to come out and enjoy what some local artists have on display, and purchasing art is optional, Oviatt said.

Many artists enjoy the opportunity to share their work with the public, Nicole Copel, graduate student in ceramics, said.

"It's a wonderful annual event for Manhattan," Copel said. "And it's a real honor to be among the other artists and crafts people who are showing their work here. It's a wonderful way to get in touch with the community."

The opportunity to get some early Christmas shopping done can be very tempting, Copel said. She said shopping shouldn't be the only inviting quality of the exhibit.

"I think anyone who is connected with the Manhattan community would enjoy this exhibit," she said. "There's something for everyone, and if you're looking for gifts, there's something in all price ranges, and they're all handmade by some local artists. So it's a good event for someone who wants to buy a gift, or just to see what's going on."

"Wrap it Up" is an exhibit that features not just local talent, but regional and national talent as well, Oviatt said.

Artists are from a variety of places, including Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and even California.

The opportunity to create art for individuals to use is one reason why artists labor so hard, Copel said. She said that with ceramics, not only does it look pleasing, but it actually serves a useful purpose.

"I think when I first started, it was a lot more difficult to part with my stuff," Copel said.

"I was new to working with clay and it took that much more to make something.

"But after a while and I was getting used to it and more familiar I liked people to have my work. I like how someone will be using it. It continues the process from me making it to someone using it, which is nice."

"Wrap it Up" is considered a benefit, and the center only takes 30 percent of the artists' sales. Artists weren't enticed to display their work in "Wrap it Up" just for exposure and money, Oviatt said.

Artists were glad to help support the Manhattan Arts Center with the benefit, she said.

"This has gone on for four years, and each year it has gotten bigger and bigger, with 76 artists represented this year," Oviatt said.

"And the support from the art community has been outstanding. We haven't had to call anyone for volunteer positions. They were filled almost immediately."

Oviatt said that their art is accepted based on a committee's decision. She said they try to keep the quality of the art as high as possible while still having a wide variety.

"Artists appreciate the fact that we only take 30 percent," she said. "This show is used as a fundraiser for the center, and I think everyone sees that. And what it's turning into is that people have become generous to help support the center and the artists."

King of Pop calls lawsuit 'interesting'

Michael Jackson, arriving at the courthouse to testify in a $21 million lawsuit claiming he backed out on concerts, smiled as he offered his one-word assessment of the litigation process so far: "Interesting."

Jackson showed up early Friday to greet fans before the third day of testimony. Court officials hosted a lottery to dole out a handful of courtroom seats to spectators.

Jackson fan Zully Crawford kissed the box the names were placed into.

"I was here Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and I didn't get nothing yet," she said, then squealed with laughter after winning one of the tickets.

Jackson is being sued by his longtime promoter, Marcel Avram, for allegedly backing out of two millennium concerts scheduled for New Year's Eve 1999.

Jackson maintains that it was Avram, not he, who canceled the shows over concerns they would not be profitable.

'Harry Potter' waves box-office wand, draws $28.86 million on opening day

Harry Potter is working box-office magic again, though the boy wizard couldn't quite conjure up a revenue record.

"Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets," the second movie based on the fantasy book series by J.K. Rowling, took in $28.86 million domestically on opening day Friday, distributor Warner Bros. estimated Saturday.

That's about 11 percent behind the $32.3 million the first film, "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone," grossed on its opening day last year.

For the full weekend, "Chamber of Secrets" is expected to take in less than the $90.3 million gross of "Sorcerer's Stone," which was then a record debut, Fellman said.

Nebraska nose tackle Ryon Bingham tries to strip K-State's Darren Sproles. Sproles has totaled 1,231 yards this season, averaging 6.4 yards per carry for the Wildcats in 2002.

Sproles' unique style rewriting record books

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Against Iowa State, consecutive game No. 6 was good enough to tie the record.

And coming into last Saturday's matchup with Nebraska, 100 yards more would make Darren Sproles the only man in K-State history to rush for at least 100 yards in seven consecutive contests.

With less than three minutes left against the Huskers, Sproles took his last carry and went 70 yards for a touchdown, setting the new record.

But Coach Bill Snyder said his running back could care less.

"In that stretch," Snyder said, "where we were struggling a little bit, he's right there, looking up, tugging at you, saying, 'Coach, I'll do it. I'll do it. I'll do it.' And he doesn't care about the 100 yards.

"What he cares about is what can he do to contribute to help this football team be better and be successful."

Sproles' 155-yard effort accounted for a good chunk of a Wildcat rushing attack that rolled up 437 yards against the Huskers.

Snyder said Sproles' toughness shined through against Nebraska.

"He's a tough nut," he said. "He runs hard. You don't just run through the University of Nebraska. That's a very sound, very solid, excellent defensive football team, and you don't run through their tackles, and Darren did that."

Sproles said his late-game run against took place for a reason.

"I just saw daylight and ran up," Sproles said. "I just saw daylight."

Sproles now has 1,227 rushing yards on the season. With two more games remaining and him averaging 107.2 yards-per-contest, Sproles will probably end the year with some 1,400 yards rushing.

K-State's single season rushing record is 1,263 yards, set last year by Josh Scobey. With only 36 yards to go, Sproles will probably break that record sometime in the first quarter of the Missouri game.

But Sproles also has a good chance of surpassing K-State's all-time rushing yards total, 2,537, held by Eric Hickson.

If Sproles should gain 1,400 yards this year, and if he repeats that performance again next season, he would own the record before starting his senior season.

Offensive coordinator Ron Hudson said Sproles may break the record because of attributes most other backs don't possess.

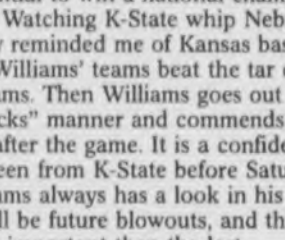
"Pound for pound, he's awesome, no question," Hudson said. "This kid is downhill, but at the same time, he'll break your ankles unless you break down real good. He brings that to the table.

"This kid appears to have pretty good speed, and his quickness is so unique. He's a downhill guy that can see and has great vision so he can make moves. That's probably some of the things other people don't have."

Sproles will probably own almost every K-State rushing record by the time his career is over. And he will probably own a number of records by the end of this season.

Regardless, Hudson said his job is easier with Sproles on the field.

"When you have a running back that can go for that many yards, a lot of people are pointing their fingers at me and giving me credit," Hudson said.



"Shoot, it isn't that hard when you have a guy like that in the backfield."

K-State's Darren Sproles has approached several K-State records in 2002. Against Nebraska on Saturday at KSU Stadium, the sophomore racked up 155 rushing yards.

2002 could be jump-off point

NICK BRATKOVIC

Forget about the national championship picture. Toss out the BCS figures.

It's all irrelevant – K-State is playing better than any team in America.

The Cats have defeated their last two opponents by a combined score of 107 to 20. Folks, that isn't Northeast Louisiana and Southern Illinois, that's Iowa State and Nebraska.

Against Nebraska, it was just another day at the office.

K-State beat Nebraska like a drum, and the fans didn't charge the field.

The players didn't seem overly excited. They took a jaunt around the track and shook some hands to commemorate senior day. It was just another day at the office for the Cats.

In the process, they raised the bar for quality football in Manhattan.

That is how you know a program has arrived – when whipping one of America's most storied programs isn't cause for a ruckus.

It's also how you know K-State is an annual national championship contender.

K-State is no longer a Cinderella story. The program had a remarkable run of 11 winning seasons. In 2001, after a 6-6 season, people wondered if it was over. Could the Cats rebound?

The answer is yes.

This season moves the program forward.

Now, the Cats are a legitimate power.

K-State is becoming the type of program that shines in the national spotlight and has the potential to win a national championship.

Watching K-State whip Nebraska on Saturday reminded me of Kansas basketball.

Roy Williams' teams beat the tar out of good teams. Then Williams goes out in an "aw shucks" manner and commends the opponent after the game. It is a confidence I hadn't seen from K-State before Saturday.

Williams always has a look in his eyes like there will be future blowouts, and this one is no more important than the last.

I'm not sure K-State fans ever knew there would be more blowouts. To me, K-State fans have always kept their fingers crossed that K-State football will remain good.

From the looks of the postgame celebration Saturday, that has changed. K-State fans are expecting more.

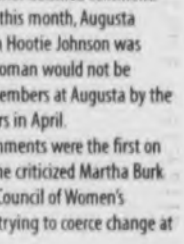
Cat fans want a BCS bowl, or the season isn't memorable.

Instead of feeling good about beating Iowa State and Nebraska, fans are upset at a seven-point to Colorado and Texas.

A few big wins aren't enough. These fans want more, and so does the program.

This season, despite little chance at a national title or BCS bowl, K-State has a shot at 11 wins – a big feat for people in Manhattan.

Darren Sproles and Ell Roberson are a dominating tandem. The defense is just as good. The special teams are coming along, and K-State has hit its stride. A national championship might be seven points out of the picture, but the future is bright.



Following the 1997 season, Snyder talked about it being a jumping-off point for 1998. Next season could be similar. If the Cats finish strong this season, next season will have an excitement level leading up to the season similar to 1998.

Volleyball | Cats climb to No. 19 in latest poll

On the strength of its first-ever win at Texas A&M on Sunday, the K-State women's volleyball team advanced one spot to No. 19 in the latest AVCA/USA Today Top 25 poll released on Monday. The Wildcats, who own their highest ranking of the season, are ranked in the association's Top 25 for the third consecutive week.

Volleyball | Time changed for Wednesday volleyball match

The K-State women's volleyball team's match with Oklahoma scheduled for Wednesday at Ahearn Field House has been changed from the original time of 7 p.m. to 6 p.m., according to athletic department officials.

The match was moved up due to the semifinals of the Preseason Women's National Invitational Tournament (WNIT) between the fourth-ranked K-State women's basketball team and USC, which is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum.

Golf | New York Times editorial suggests Tiger should skip Masters

The New York Times suggested in an editorial Monday that Tiger Woods skip the Masters next year because of the all-male membership at Augusta National Golf Club.

"A tournament without Mr. Woods would send a powerful message that discrimination isn't good for the golfing business," the editorial said.

Augusta National declined comment.

In interviews this month, Augusta National chairman Hootie Johnson was adamant that a woman would not be among the 300 members at Augusta by the start of the Masters in April.

Johnson's comments were the first on the subject since he criticized Martha Burk and the National Council of Women's Organizations for trying to coerce change at the golf course.

The Times said that if Augusta National "can brazenly discriminate against women, that means others can choose not to support Mr. Johnson's golfing fraternity. That includes more enlightened members of the club, CBS Sports, which televises the Masters, and the players, especially Tiger Woods."

NFL | McNabb out for regular season

Donovan McNabb took the Philadelphia Eagles to first place in the NFC East. Koy Detmer will have to keep them there.

McNabb probably will miss the rest of the regular season and could be out for the playoffs because of his broken right ankle. Detmer, who hasn't started a game since 1999, takes over for the two-time Pro Bowl quarterback.

McNabb was injured on the third play of Sunday's game against Arizona, but he stayed in and threw a career-best four touchdown passes to lead the Eagles past the Cardinals 38-14.

NFL | Griese to miss up to three weeks

Brian Griese's sprained left knee will keep him out of Denver's lineup against Indianapolis next weekend and could sideline him for three weeks.

Broncos coach Mike Shanahan said his quarterback will not practice this week after being injured in a 31-9 victory over Seattle on Sunday.

Griese was hurt late in the third quarter when defensive tackle Rocky Bernard rolled into his knee.

The Broncos initially said Griese could be out up to a month, but lowered the estimate Monday after an MRI exam showed a second-degree sprain of the medial collateral ligament.

Mortimer captures regional title

Senior steals show, locks up NCAA bid

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The entire K-State cross country team was in search of wins at the Midwest Regional Championship this weekend.

Senior Amy Mortimer succeeded with a victory and a fourth-straight invitation to the NCAA Championships in Terra Haute, Ind.

K-State coach Randy Cole said Mortimer used solid race strategy and her best performance of the season to earn her third region individual championship. She finished the 6,000-meter race in 20:26, and she edged out competitors in the last 200 meters to win by just one second.

"Amy ran her best race of the year," Cole said. "We are looking forward to taking her to nationals, and she should be in the hunt to be an All-American."

Amy Mortimer

If she accomplishes that goal, it would be Mortimer's fourth such honor.

Elsewhere for the women, Erin Mortimer was able to imitate her sister in turning in her best race of the season. She finished in 11th place at 21:02 – 15 seconds from qualifying for nationals.

Cole said that Saturday was her breakout performance, and that it was a long time coming.

"Erin ran steady throughout the year," he said.

"She made a huge breakthrough on Saturday. We have kind of been waiting for that to happen."

For the men, Mathew Chesang came the closest to earning a trip to Terra Haute – finishing just 12 seconds away. Even though Chesang was unable to achieve his goal, his No. 11 finish was still good enough for All-Midwest Region honors.

"Chesang was disappointed to not qualify," Cole said. "He wasn't strong enough at the end, but still had a very good season."

Freshman Drew Tonniges also raced well, just not well enough, Cole said. Going into the meet Cole had hoped that Tonniges could end his freshman campaign with All-Regional honors. But he fell just short, finishing 20 seconds and 13 spots back of the required 25th spot.

Cole said that this year's regional was about gaining experience, as many of his top runners are either freshmen or sophomores. He said that once they get more used to the training that builds up to the major races, they should be more prepared for next season.

"We were disappointed in our placing," he said. "But these are good, young kids, and they are all committed to the long haul."

Equestrian closes fall with record finish

By Brent Gray
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In their final show of the fall season, the Wildcats came away victorious – winning the Truman State Western Show on Sunday.

Junior Brandi Vogel led the Cats, winning High-Point Rider honors for the second-straight show, her third such honor of the year. Senior Jessie Baldwin won Reserve High-Point Rider, adding to the domination the Cats displayed.

K-State had nine individuals win their respective events on the final day, setting a school record.

"I could not be happier with my girls," Coach Lindsay Breidenthal said. "They did a great job especially on the final day."

On Saturday, the Cats competed in two shows, winning the second show with a total 21 points.

Breidenthal said she was pleased with the way the team handled a new judge.

"I couldn't have asked the women to ride any better than they did those two shows," Breidenthal said. "When the judges are looking at horsemanship and skill, we will win every time. The quality of the judges matters, and we could see that today."

With the weekend's performance, the Cats sit in first place in the region and will try to hold that spot during the spring season.

WEAPONS | U.N. arms inspectors return to Iraq; U.S. warplanes bomb air defense systems in no-fly zone

News Agency that Iraq will work with inspectors to protect its people from America but will fight "if war is imposed on us."

Eventually more than 220 inspectors from 49 countries will be deployed, although how many at any one time would vary depending on what is required. At least five are women. At least six of the group are Arabs, and Mohamed ElBaradie, who oversees the International Atomic Energy Agency, is Egyptian.

ElBaradei and Blix, a Swede, sat down Monday night for a first official meeting with Gen. Hossam Mohammed Amin, who acted as an Iraqi liaison for past inspectors, and Iraqi presidential adviser Amir al-Saadi.

After the two-hour meeting, ElBaradei said the two sides had begun to discuss arrangements for the inspections and would continue Tuesday. "I think we are making progress," he said.

But the long history of confrontation between the Iraqis and previous U.N. inspectors - especially over sensitive sites such as presidential palaces, mosques and military bases - cast doubt on how smoothly the two sides will be able to cooperate this time.

Controversy swirled around Blix's mission from the moment he and his team landed at Saddam International Airport.

At a chaotic airport press conference, Iraqi and other Arab reporters demanded to know whether the inspectors expected friction with the United States and whether they would accept intelligence information from Washington. The inspectors said they did not expect trouble from the Americans and welcomed information from all over the world.

A front-page editorial in the ruling Baath Party newspaper Al-Thawra called the previous U.N. inspection program "an American organization to spy on Iraq," and said it hoped the new team would avoid that trap.

"The situation is tense at the moment, but there is a new opportunity and we are here to provide inspection that is credible," Blix said.

He said inspections could begin as early as Nov. 27. Blix then must report to the Security Council within 60 days about his progress.

"Total cooperation from Iraq is important to us," ElBaradei said. "We hope this is going to be the case." He promised that the inspections would be impartial and in-depth.

Under the new U.N. resolution, inspectors have the right to go anywhere and talk to anybody they want to determine whether Iraq still maintains banned weapons. In the past, weapons inspectors had to give advance notice of visits to sensitive sites including eight vast presidential palace complexes, losing the effect of surprise inspections.

The new resolution gives inspectors the explicit authority "to inspect any sites and buildings, including immediate, unimpeded, unconditional, and unrestricted access to presidential sites equal to that at all other sites."

Even mosques are not off limits, Blix said before leaving for Baghdad.

In the Bosnian capital Sarajevo, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan also called on Iraq to ensure a smooth inspection program.

"I urge President Saddam Hussein to comply fully for the sake of his people, for the sake of the region and for the sake of the world order," Annan said.

Now that the inspectors are back in Iraq, Saddam's government must file a detailed report of its banned weapons programs by Dec. 8, informing the United Nations either where the arms are located or providing convincing evidence that they no longer exist.

The inspectors must verify that Iraq is free of proscribed weapons before the Security Council will lift strict economic sanctions imposed after Saddam invaded Kuwait in 1990.

MILK | Professors to use grant money to study milk

The three will conduct a study called "Keeping Calcium in the Diet – Perceptions of Milk," which will focus on how the aftertaste of milk affects consumption.

"There was a strong competition to get the money," Chambers said of receiving the grant.

"I was surprised and pleased that we got everything we asked for."

Schmidt said she wants to know what the aftertaste of milk is and what contributes to it.

"I became interested in this because (the aftertaste) seems to be one of the reasons why the consumption of milk is declining," she said.

Schmidt said she has noticed changes in which beverages her students are bringing to class, and how often they are bringing them to class.

"They aren't coming in with bottles of milk," she said. "We're having a shift in our preferences in beverage consumption."

According to a research study on consumer beverage consumption done by Dairy Management Inc., only one in 10 people says milk is his or hers their favorite beverage.

The study shows teenagers prefer milk over coffee and tap water, but don't favor it over iced tea or carbonated soft drinks.

Schmidt and Chambers said there are several reasons to drink milk.

"It provides calcium for bone growth to prevent osteoporosis," Chambers said. "Calcium is just important."

Schmidt said milk consumption among teenage girls is declining at earlier ages.

According to the National Dairy Council, only 22 percent of teenage girls consumed the recommended three to four servings of dairy products a day.

This could be detrimental to girls' health, especially during child-bearing years, Schmidt said.

The research will take place over two years, and is set into two 10-month sections and a remaining four-month section.

In the first 10 months, they will work to characterize the aftertaste of milk.

Chambers, who is the director of the sensory analysis center at K-State, said that by using trained professional descriptive panelists, the researchers will be able to characterize the flavor of milk.

Schmidt said that after the panelists describe characteristics of the taste of milk, the researchers will correlate the chemical compounds in milk with the sensory characteristics described by the panelists.

In the second 10 months, the researchers will do conduct consumer tests. They will use these taste tests to find out which attributes of milk are positive and which are negative. If there are negative attributes, they will strategize to find out how to prevent those attributes in the taste of milk.

In the remaining four months, the researchers will take what they've learned from their research and strategize on how to enhance milk consumption.

"We want to get people to drink more milk," Schmidt said. "We want to improve milk consumption and the health of teenagers, which will in turn improve the health of Kansans."

WESTERN | 10 riders qualified for March regional

"That's where I want us to be," Breidenthal said. "We just need to keep it up and get our girls ready for the stretch run so we can get a team into regionals."

The Cats have qualified 10 western riders for postseason competition this fall.

Senior Darcy Ferguson, and sophomores Lindsey George, Jessica Dubin, and Caitlin Morrison earned spots in regionals on Sunday.

The weekend's qualifiers joined seniors Amber Fox, Jessie Baldwin, Beth Jones and Erin Rees, sophomore Krystal Briggs and junior Beverly Wilson in eligibility for regional action in March.

Regionals will be in Kewanee, Ill., at Blackhawk Community College.

The Western team's next show will be Feb. 8-9 in Manhattan. Next action for the English team will be March 1-2 in Springfield, Mo., when Southwest Missouri State will be host.

K-State lacks gun policy

State law doesn't cover universities

By Amy Link
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It wouldn't be normal to see your lab partner with a gun strapped to his belt.

However, according to state law, K-State Police can't arrest students who are carrying visible firearms on campus.

While Kansas law bans individuals from carrying concealed weapons, it permits citizens to carry a visible firearm in public places, said Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department.

"Anyone could strap on a gun belt and not be in violation with the law," Moldrup said.

He said citizens are allowed to carry weapons on public but not private property.

Kansas law states the possession of a firearm by a person (not a law enforcement officer) is prohibited on unified school district property for both public and accredited nonpublic K-12 schools.

Government takes over security at all airports

By Eric Fidler
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The government completed its security takeover at the nation's airports Tuesday, winning praise from travelers who said they felt more confident and were happy with the short lines at the X-ray machines.

"It looks like they're taking care of things," 78-year-old Henrietta Oetken said as she sat near a baggage-screening machine at the Las Vegas airport.

The Transportation Security Administration, created after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, met its deadline to put more than 47,000 federal employees in place to handle security at 424 airports nationwide.

They replace a private work force often criticized as inefficient, inattentive and poorly trained.

Federal screeners have been added in the past few months.

Congress has also set a year-end deadline to screen all checked baggage for explosives,

KSU job forms differ

Questions about criminal history not included on applications

By Nancy Foster
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They work here.

They attend school here.

And two weeks ago, students learned just exactly who "they" are. They are five registered sex offenders who are employed or enrolled at K-State. Their names were released as part of the federal Campus Sex Crimes Prevention Act, which tracks registered sex offenders at universities.

All five could have applied to K-State without ever having to identify their criminal backgrounds. Why? It is not K-State's policy to require that information.

The Office of Admissions collects only academic histories, and K-State's job applications only require applicants to report criminal backgrounds if they are applying for law enforcement positions. State law requires that law enforcement officials have not been convicted of a felony crime or its equivalent, which is why it is on the application.

K-State is the only Kansas Board of Regents university that does not require criminal history information from all applicants.

All five other regents universities ask about prior felony convictions, and the University of Kansas and Emporia State University even require applicants to report all non-traffic related misdemeanors.

Cheryl Grice, employment services manager in the Division of Human Resources, said K-State is not mandated to ask criminal-history questions of everyone.

'Tis the Season

Unhealthy habits cause students to catch colds

By Jessica Pitts
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Day One: The nose starts running.

Day Two: Here come the coughing, sneezing and all-over body aches.

Day Three: The throat is sore, and exhaustion sets in.

Jenny Burgdorfer, junior in chemical engineering, knew she was getting a cold, but she was determined not to let it slow her down.

"I think I just made it worse," she said. "It finally hit me, and all I could do was sleep."

The worst part, Burgdorfer said, is that it seems like she always gets sick during the busiest time of the semester.

"It never fails," she said. "I had two tests, and I didn't feel like I could miss class, but I felt awful."

But contracting colds is to be expected, said George Marchin, associate professor of microbiology and immunology.

"It is a challenge for college students not to catch a cold because they oftentimes are not following healthy habits," he said.

Those healthy habits – getting appropriate amounts of sleep, a modest amount of exercise and eating balanced meals – can help students stay clear of colds this winter, Marchin said.

"If the majority of students are anything like my kids, they have lousy diets and are not getting enough sleep," he said. "It seems like when they get away from home, things fall apart for a while."

Close living quarters also can cause students to catch colds.

"Living in crowds – with roommates and classmates – students can be exposed to new viruses almost daily," Marchin said.

This proved true for Burgdorfer, who said she caught a cold strain different from that of her roommate, Christen Battenfield, junior in French and international studies.

"The first half of my cold was more like a head cold," Burgdorfer said. "But then, after my roommate got sick, I started to develop her symptoms, too. I started running a fever and coughing. It was almost like we switched places."

Battenfield said they both used cough drops and over-the-counter cold medicine, but the only remedy that worked was sleeping.

"It hit me all of a sudden," she said. "I tried not to let it slow me down, but I finally gave in and just slept. That helped the most, I think."

Marchin said there are not many remedies for colds. He does suggest using over-the-counter medications and increasing sleep.

"There is always the chicken-noodle-soup remedy," he said. "The warm soup stimulates some antibodies in mucous, and of course, it makes you feel better."

Flint Hills Breadbasket, students help needy families during holiday season

By Crystal Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Needy families in the Manhattan community won't be envisioning sugar plums this holiday season.

Instead, hundreds of area parents will worry about putting gifts under the tree without breaking the bank, and that is where the Adopt-a-Family program comes in.

Shirley Bramhall, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket, said the Adopt a Family program provides for children who wouldn't otherwise receive presents.

"When you think about the families that are here, a lot of them can make it month to month paycheck-wise," Bramhall said. "When October, November and December come along though, there's school enrollment, flu and cold season, increased utilities, and sometimes car repairs with nothing left over. Compound that with the holiday, and the expenses just get to be too much."

Every fall, the Flint Hills Breadbasket assesses families in need and pairs them with participating businesses, organizations and private donors. Donors then agree to provide holiday gifts for the children of each family, whether that means donating money, shopping for gifts and wrapping presents, delivering gifts or dropping them off at the center.

Bramhall said parents give the Flint Hills Breadbasket a list with a variety of gift ideas for the children – like warm clothes or toys – to be bought at the donor's discretion. She said there is no dollar limit.

"It is such an intricate process," Bramhall said. "We have to match the perfect donor to the perfect family. We take all factors into consideration to make the right match."

Bramhall said they match families with what the donor can afford and if the donor wishes to deliver the gifts or remain anonymous.

"The neat thing is that donors can be as involved as they want and the clients can be as involved as they want," she said. "When you watch the program come together – when you look at the joy that it produces both on the donor and the client's face on Dec. 25 – it's absolutely incredible. It's kind of a miracle in the works."

The Flint Hills Breadbasket began Adopt a Family in 1986,

BANTER AND BELLOW | Emotional recovery

Refuse to linger in past; be down in the dumps ways to get through life's traumatic events

Get over it

Layton: My advice is to move on as quickly as possible. Go do something. Go camping. Learn to juggle. But don't just dwell on it like cold and stagnant sewage.

If you want to lose your mind, a sure-fire way of doing it would be to twiddle your thumbs.

I recall an old family saying, used widely in Lane County, Kan. My family, of strong German and Swedish pioneer descent and spirit, uses this saying when it is time to move past any event worth swearing over.

The saying is as follows: "The horse is dead," which subliminally continues, " ... so stop beating it." This is a paraphrase of the more famous version: "Don't beat a dead horse." It is usually used to get someone to shut up about any issue of sensitivity that has been overly discussed.

The adage embodies unspeakable and undeniable truths. Indeed, to beat a dead horse would be outrageous and would accomplish nothing. For instance, the "horse" mentioned could not become more dead, could it? Nor would a deceased horse become more alive if it were beaten. There is no point in dwelling.

Never linger in the past, because it will just make you old. Cling to your youth like you would to a speeding train jam-packed with Guinness and Swedish chicks.

Keep twistin', yo.

Question

What do you do about mildly traumatic events?

You can e-mail Banter and Bellow columnists Dana Strongin, junior in print journalism, and Layton Ehmke, senior in print journalism, at banter@spub.ksu.edu.

Wallow in your self-pity

Dana: Face it. Even the "little things" are capable of bringing us down.

Whether you are sick of school or accidentally said something mean to one of your best friends, some days will just drag you down.

The answer: go for it. Be down in the dumps and feel just as sorry for yourself as possible. And for your sake, don't turn that frown upside down. Snarl, growl, moan or weep all you like.

But you can only do it for a day or two.

Then you'll be ready for rainbows and lollipops all over again. Life'll be worth a million bucks after spending a day locked in your room, listening to Radiohead in the dark, bemoaning your very existence.

The reason for letting ourselves be moody is that we can't deny our feelings. We are people – hence, we get sad, mad and everything in between. To deny that is to deny our humanity.

When you have regrets or anger, wallow for a while, then go for a long run or listen to some hardcore music. The action will get the blood pumping in your veins, and you'll be on the road to recovery.

But there are limits. If you've been lying in your bed for, say, five weeks, you might be more than a little upset.

Otherwise, get sad, get mad and get over it. You'll be like a new person the next time you wake up happy, if you ever wake up happy – try lots of coffee if you don't.

I hate being in situations where I always feel like I have to be cheery. There is a reason my name isn't Sunshine Suzie – sometimes the sun just don't shine.

But after the storm passes, you've gotta splash through the puddles to get to dry land.

Commission approves Wal-Mart agreement

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first reading of an ordinance approving the development agreement between the city of Manhattan and Wal-Mart was approved Tuesday night with a 5-0 vote from city commissioners.

Because of the approval, the city of Manhattan will take the next steps toward finishing the developmental process of the Wal-Mart Supercenter, Ron Fehr, city manager, said.

Wal-Mart plans on occupying the Supercenter store in October 2003.

Included in the first ordinance reading were two main street improvements and the land sale of the storm-detention property.

Fehr said the city will sell the 2.4-acre storm-detention property to Wal-Mart and replace the land north of McCall Road with the detention area.

"There have been a lot of intricate details in working with this project," Fehr said.

Under the McCall Road Improvement, $1,121,500 would be spent to improve the road between Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Hayes Drive.

Financially, Wal-Mart will be responsible for 50 percent of the cost, with the city and Pottawatomie County each paying 25 percent.

"We envisioned that it will be a loan through Wal-Mart," Fehr said.

Fehr, along with Wal-Mart representatives, said he anticipated the payment process to be completed in a 5- to 7-year period, with payments beginning as early as January 2005.

In addition, a number of other street improvements were included in the first ordinance. All other public improvements, including traffic-signal coordination, and other improvements to Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Bluemont Avenue, will cost $2.6 million.

Funding for these improvements will be through the formation of the Transportation Development District, a program that includes a half-cent excise tax on all retail sales at the Wal-Mart store. This payment method is the first of its kind to develop in Kansas, Bob Johnson, representative of Wal-Mart Stores Inc., said.

"We feel it's been well researched," he said. "This approach is the conservative use of legislature in Kansas. We feel it's a win-win deal for the city, the county and Wal-Mart," Johnson said.

Mayor Ed Klimek said cooperation from both the city and county has been beneficial in the development stages.

"I appreciate the work that has been put into it," he said.

103 honor-code violations reported last year; awareness helps maintain student honesty

By Lindsey Tipling
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Honor Code: On my honor, as a student, I have neither given nor received unauthorized aid on this academic work.

K-State released its annual honor code violations report for the 2001-02 school year in September.

Phil Anderson, director of the undergraduate honor system, said there were 63 reports of honor-code violations last year. The violations involved 103 undergraduate students.

Anderson said the report contains demographic information about what happened during the past year with regards to honor-code violations.

"The overwhelming majority involve plagiarism or unauthorized collaborating," Anderson said.

There has been a slight increase in the number of offenders this year as compared to previous years, but Anderson said he thinks this is not necessarily a sign that more students have been cheating than in the past.

During the 2000-01 school year, there were 55 reports of honor-code violations involving 91 students, according to the report. Seventy-five males and 26 females were alleged to have violated the honor code.

Research on the national level has shown that males often are recorded for more violations than females, according to the report.

Anderson said he expects more reports to be filed as more faculty and students become aware of the honor code and what it means.

K-State is trying to educate its students about the honor system in many ways, Anderson said.

The most significant way is through a group called Honesty and Integrity Peer Educators, or H.I.P.E. Loni Marietta, president of H.I.P.E. and junior in marketing, said one of the group's key functions is to make the campus more aware of the honor code.

"Our job is to be the educational component of the honor system," she said.

Marietta said H.I.P.E. has three goals for this year.

"We want to reach more K-State students, we want to reach a high school, a community college and another university, and we want to increase membership to H.I.P.E.," she said.

Marietta said the main problem with regards to honor-code violations involves the line between plagiarism and using source material.

"Both the instructor and the student have an obligation to know where that line is," she said.

Marietta said the standard sanction for a violation of the honor code is an XF on the student's transcript. An XF designates that the course was failed due to academic dishonesty, she said.

The X can be removed if the student completes the Academic Integrity Course, Marietta said, but the F stays on the student's transcript permanently.

Most students simply need to be educated about the honor code, she said.

"When a student signs the application to come to K-State, they are already obligated to abide by the honor code," Marietta said.

"And most people don't even know that."

Marietta said most teachers work well with the honor system in many ways, Anderson said.

"When a student signs the application to come to K-State, they are already obligated to abide by the honor code."

Loni Marietta
PRESIDENT OF HONESTY AND INTEGRITY PEER EDUCATION

Deborah Murray, instructor of English, said, "We are certainly very lucky at K-State to have the kind of honor code we do."

Murray said she has not had many cases that have had to go before the Honor Council. She said she thinks instructors can minimize the amount of plagiarism that goes on in a classroom by designing assignments in different ways.

"I try to design my assignments to encourage original thought," she said.

She also said some students violate the honor code unintentionally.

"Sometimes the kind of plagiarism that students do is unintentional – when they use a source and don't use quotation marks because they may have cited the source previously in their paper," she said.

This kind of violation, Murray said, would be more forgivable than if a student were to knowingly cheat on an assignment.

It's pretty obvious when a student has plagiarized, Murray said.

"Especially if students are writing several papers for a certain class," she said. "Teachers become familiar with the student's voice, and Web site downloads are fairly generic."

FAMILIES | Needy families receive holiday help sponsoring about 30 families. Today, the program has 947 businesses, organizations and private donors assisting more than 1,100 area families during the holiday season.

Bramhall said the organization has grown through the years, helping 9,000 families every year to get food and jobs, and showing people how to help themselves.

"We get to watch them grow. It's really quite incredible to see someone start off as an unwed mother at 18 and become a manager at a local store and a donor for the program," she said.

Bramhall said the success of the program can only be attributed to the community.

"Kansas State University has a profound impact on us and indirectly on the families," she said.

Emily Lehning, assistant director of New Student Services, said about 20 student workers in her office participate in Adopt a Family.

"The students were the ones who actually brought it to my attention when I first began working here," Lehning said. "Every year, everyone pools their money together, and we buy what we can."

Lehning said they collect the gifts, then students can come in and wrap them during finals week.

"The students love the fact that they're involved in the community and helping someone," she said.

Bramhall said about 80 of the organizations who adopt a family are K-State-affiliated organizations.

She said individual students can also volunteer by using donor's money to shop for gifts or donating their time in Santa's workshop – helping to organize, distribute and wrap gifts.

"There is so much help that comes from the university," she said. "Those students aren't just going to school."

OPINION

TO THE POINT

University needs policy that bans guns on campus

With the increase in school shootings and other incidents of violence, it is becoming more of a priority for states and universities to establish weapons policies.

But K-State does not have a policy that prohibits students, faculty or staff from carrying visible firearms on campus.

The possession of firearms by people other than law enforcement officials or military personnel should be forbidden at K-State. School shootings were not as visible eight to 10 years ago, but the problem is growing.

Universities have a responsibility to protect their students, faculty and staff from potential threats to health and life. University environments should be safe.

K-State needs to enact a policy that prohibits guns on campus. If an established regulation goes against state law, university officials should be willing to work with the state to come up with a compromising solution.

There was no need for a gun policy in past years, but K-State cannot afford to keep its Student Governing Association's conduct codes unchanged.

Since state law mentions – but does not ban – firearms on university property, it's up to individual academic institutions to pass weapons guidelines.

It's time K-State made some changes.

HECTIC HOLIDAYS

Tis the season to give thanks for crazy families, create good, bad memories

Thanksgiving is one of the biggest holidays of the year. It's a time of reminiscing with friends and family, reflecting and giving thanks for the A you received on your organic chemistry midterm.

AMBER KOEHN

Thanksgiving is that day when truth and honesty hits you over the head and you realize your own family might just drive you nuts before it's over. It can be the best of times and the worst of times, but in the end, you take the good with the bad and realize what is really important in your life.

For instance, when my brother was in second grade, he wrote a Thanksgiving story about an Indian named Squanto, a boy named Shawn (that would be my brother) and a crazy turkey that always went around pecking everyone until Squanto bopped him over the head and served him as the main course at the first Thanksgiving feast.

Quite creative for a 7-year-old. We all praised him for his ingenuity.

In my family, as well as in others, that unconditional love for one another keeps holiday get-togethers from falling apart.

But planning quality family time during a hectic holiday season usually takes a little more than Squanto and an annoying turkey, especially if you're a college student who lives too far from home to celebrate with family.

After all, you don't want to wind up starring in your own version of "Home for the Holidays" – the Jodie Foster-directed film featuring Holly Hunter as a single mom who's just been fired from her job.

Reluctantly, Hunter's character boards a plane to fly back home to spend a good, old-fashioned holiday with her family: Aunt Glady, who has 210 plants to water (she knows the exact number), creates Fruit Loop necklaces and tips back one too many glasses of wine before dinner; Dad, who has heart trouble and can't stop munching on pumpkin pie before dinner; Mom, who is controlling and obsessively worried about her family (she also can't cease the fixation to set up her daughter with any available man); and an uptight Sister, who married a wuss of a man and had two bratty children.

It perfectly encapsulates all that going home for the holidays isn't supposed to be but ends up being anyway. You leave for home, inevitably on the absolute worst day of your life, hoping for some sort of relief from the rest of the world.

Instead, you get your family.

Old fights are dredged up, you're treated like you're 12, and everything sucks worse than it did before you left. You love these people and enjoy being with them.

Separately.

For short periods of time.

While I don't envision my brother walking in on me in the shower (he's not quite as crazy as Robert Downey Jr.), something like what Hunter's character has to deal with throughout the film is definitely a possibility. When families get together for the first time in quite a while, you just never know what could happen.

But that's the beauty of holiday get-togethers: the surprise, the mystery, the embarrassing moments.

We should consider ourselves lucky to have families to go home to.

Some people never have that opportunity. Relishing in the brouhaha and mayhem of the holidays is a privilege – one we shouldn't take for granted.

And though your family might bear a striking resemblance to the one above, just remember the love you have for one another will forever exist, even if it isn't always automatically visible.

If you think about all the people who aren't as fortunate, you'll realize you don't have it so bad after all.

User warning: online chatting might consume lives, computers

I installed a virus on my laptop computer last weekend – and I did it on purpose. Its name? MSN Messenger 5.0.

This program enables users to communicate almost instantaneously over the Internet with friends and associates. It seems like it could be a useful tool. So why do I call it a virus?

Infoplease.com defines a computer virus as a computer program "designed to disperse copies of itself to other computers and disrupt those computers' normal operations." If that doesn't describe instant messenger (IM) programs, I don't know what does.

MICAH HAWKINSON

A computer's purpose is to boost its owner's productivity. I call IM programs viruses because, all too often, they accomplish exactly the opposite.

And while these programs are not self-replicating, they might as well be.

People download the programs mainly in order to talk to friends who are already online. The new users, in turn, suck some of their other friends into the whirlpool of IM-ing. MSN Messenger alone has more than 75 million users registered worldwide, according to Microsoft.com, and the number of addicts is climbing every day.

You'd think that being able to communicate with millions of people around the world would be really useful, right? Yeah, that's a negatory, Houston.

Take, for instance, the writing of a simple composition for an English class. Without an IM program, it's relatively simple, as you can see from this timetable.

Noon – Enter library. Find place to set up laptop. Jack into Internet, check e-mail, Drudgereport.com and FARK.com.

12:15 p.m. – Start thinking about paper topic. Type rough outline.

12:43 p.m. – Grow weary of being productive. Play pirated copy of Tetris. Get high score on fifth try. Put "Yarr, this copy of Tetris be pirated, says I" on high score list. Be amused by this. Laugh aloud, making nearby studious people glare daggers.

1:09 p.m. – Shrug apologetically and resume paper-writing until eyes begin to burn with fire.

2:57 p.m. – Drift off to sleep.

3:33 p.m. – Go to work late with marks on face from couch in library.

8:04 p.m. – Resume work on paper. Get done at 12:34 a.m. Not great, but at least fairly productive. Now, here's the same thing with IM.

Noon – Enter library. Find place to set up laptop. Jack into Internet and begin to check e-mail. Get MSN message from cutie_gurl27314@hotmail.com, who is in your class and wants information about an assignment. Become depressed at the fact she already has a boyfriend. Then, change your mind after realizing she's a moron, as evidenced by the fact that the only punctuation she seems to know is "LOL."

12:48 p.m. – Receive message from brother. It consists of a link to "Pokey the Penguin" comic strips at www.yellow5.com/pokey. Read all 427 of them, laughing like an idiot most of the time.

2:27 p.m. – Fail to achieve Tetris high score due to constant interruptions by MSN buddies.

3:40 p.m. – Arrive at work late because of intense chat session.

8:07 p.m. – Get done with work. Go out and get coffee in preparation for paper writing.

10:34 p.m. – Glance at clock. Panic. Get mad at people on MSN. Uninstall program from computer.

4:05 a.m. – Finish paper, which is of questionable overall quality.

4:23 a.m. – Collapse into bed. Have nightmares about MSN.

Does that look productive to you? I didn't think so.

It doesn't have to be that way. Together, we can stand up against that scurvy IM virus.

All it takes is setting our statuses to "Offline." But if it's that simple, why can't I seem to muster the willpower to do it?

I'll have to answer that particular question in my next column, since I just received an instant message from FlutterbytheFlowers@msn.com.

Micah is a senior in English and history. You can e-mail him at mph7686@ksu.edu.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

If this is Milwaukee's best, I'd hate to see its worst.

Actually, the annoying thing about living in an apartment complex with wooden stairs is when people run up and down the hallway and ring your doorbell while you're trying to take a nap.

We want the people who stole our patio furniture the other night to know we want it back, and we know who you are. We'll come get it if you don't return it.

Cap'n Crunch is my hero.

Last Thursday was Seth Day in the Fourum. I got 16 comments in. Booyah! Sit down, Mike and Jeff.

No matter how hard you try, you cannot lick your own elbow.

Coed rooms not expected at K-State

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although various Northeastern colleges have passed policies allowing coed residence hall rooms, K-State students shouldn't expect these opposite-sex living arrangements on campus any time soon.

Colleges in Massachusetts, such as Haverford College and Hampshire College, have recently adopted policies that allow students of the opposite sex to share a residence hall room.

However, K-State officials say coed rooms are not an issue with the student population.

"I have not had any students come to me in my short time here at K-State," said Kevin Cook, Strong Complex residence life coordinator. "I think that the conservative nature of Kansas and KSU students would certainly influence whether that would happen."

Before working at K-State, Cook worked at Macalister College in St. Paul, Minn., where the issue of coed rooms were introduced for the first time.

"I think one of the reasons why (coed rooms are being discussed), just from my experience at previous institutions, is that it's been a concern of homosexual students who don't necessarily feel comfortable having a residence hall room with the same gender," he said.

As far as K-State is concerned, Cook said if the college were to consider opposite-sex living situations, they would have to think over many things.

"I think it would cause controversy with students and parents," he said. "It would really have to be a student-driven issue."

David Yoder, residence life coordinator for Marlatt Hall, agreed with Cook.

"Obviously, Massachusetts is much more liberal than Kansas," he said.

As for coed rooms, Yoder said a number of issues would develop if it was taken into consideration, especially if the living arrangements were romantically linked.

"Relationships come and go, and if this involves a romantic relationship, what happens when that relationship unexpectedly ends?" he said.

So far, Yoder has not heard of any student discussion over the issue, and he thinks the explanation is simple.

"I suppose the reason it's not being discussed is most individuals assume it's out of the question and go on back to their business," he said.

Courtney Cameron, vice president of K-State's Association of Residence Halls and sophomore in psychology, said she thinks that because of the conservative views of Kansans, even the student body wouldn't approve of coed rooms.

"I don't think it would work here," she said. "Chances are, it would have to be suite-style living, and it could be more expensive."

APPLICATIONS | Employees not asked about criminal history

She said screening applicants for criminal histories depends on the nature of the jobs.

"It's all going to be on an individual basis. If it's a safety-sensitive position, then of course that is a consideration," Grice said.

She said K-State does not screen out individuals simply because of how they might answer a question.

Assistant University Attorney Elizabeth Thurston said it is legal to ask criminal-history questions of all applicants.

"It's a legitimate question that can be asked," Thurston said. "I don't know why we choose not to, but it is a question that can be asked."

As for student admissions applications, Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said K-State does not require students to report criminal backgrounds because the admissions office also addresses each case based on its merits.

"It's not automatic on anything these days," Bosco said," nor should it be."

GUNS | Universities must develop own policies to ban guns on campus

Since the law does mention universities, it is up to each university to develop a policy. Ronnie Grice, director of public safety, said K-State does not have a gun policy, aside from the one in residence halls.

Officials from the Department of Housing and Dining Services said there is a ban on all firearms in residence halls.

In the Student Governing Association's conduct code, it is stated that the illegal or unauthorized possession or use of firearms, explosives, weapons, or dangerous chemicals on university premises or at a university sponsored activity will constitute misconduct in which disciplinary sanctions will be imposed.

Grice said this statement backs up the state's criminal law – that citizens are not allowed to use weapons for criminal intent – but still is not a university gun policy.

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president, said K-State doesn't have an official gun policy.

"We have a policy for this this and this, but nothing regarding guns that I have found," she said.

Grice said that although there is no policy prohibiting students from carrying guns on campus, the university police can take them from people or to make the person leave. However, police would not be able to arrest the person.

Grice said that about eight years ago, he and Jennifer Kassebaum tried to draw up a gun policy for K-State, but it did not go through. Grice said officials may have felt there was a lack of need for a policy.

Other Kansas universities have their own policies.

Lt. Schuyler Bailey, of the University of Kansas police, said KU does not allow individuals to carry guns on campus. This policy differs from the state constitution, so campus police are not able to arrest students in violation of it.

Some states do have constitutions that ban carrying weapons at universities.

Grice said Arkansas has a law that prohibits individuals from carrying weapons on university property. Thus, individuals could be arrested.

Utah, on the other hand, is similar to Kansas in regards to carrying firearms.

According to a July 3 article in The Daily Universe, Brigham Young University's school newspaper, Utah state law doesn't allow firearms to be carried in primary or secondary schools but fails to mention universities.

In order to prevent weapons being carried on campus, BYU has adopted a weapons ban. The ban is in direct violation of the state's constitution and has caused controversy between the college and state officials, according to The Daily Universe.

This debate in Utah has led to the question of whether a university has the right to enforce its own gun polices in order to protect its students.

While Kansas law has yet to be challenged by university gun policies, there may be a need for a challenge.

"Until someone pushes state legislation, we're going to be dealing with these type of questions," Grice said.

AIRPORTS | National airports have federal screeners in place but many airports say they will have trouble installing the minivan-sized bomb-detection machines by then.

Oetken was traveling home to Arizona with her daughter, Melody Bean, 38, a flight attendant, said she feels safer with federal screeners in place.

"I think it's a lot better now, although they have slip-ups now and then," said Bean, who lives in Evans, Colo.

Kevin Mitchell, chairman of the Business Travel Coalition, said much work remains to be done to improve security. While he praised the goal of reducing waits at checkpoints to 10 minutes or less, Mitchell said the system needs to focus less on people – and things – that are not a threat.

"We have to get away from this fixation on tweezers and tie bars," he said.

Mitchell also said his research shows business air travel declined 14 percent in 2001 compared with 2000 and will drop an additional 11 percent this year. He said airlines will need to improve a number of things other than security to lure back business travelers.

Many travelers praised the efficiency of the new screeners, citing shorter lines at checkpoints as a major plus.

"I'm waiting less now," said Mark Turner, who was flying from Newark, N.J., to Dallas.

Joe Aiello of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., said he has noticed a difference at security checkpoints recently.

"They're more professional, courteous," he said.

Wildcats asking for fan support in semifinal contest; finals site up for grabs

A victory and a packed Bramlage Coliseum would accomplish everything the Wildcat women's basketball team is hoping to do right now.

K-State (2-0) will try to advance to the finals of the Women's National Invitational Tournament at 7:30 tonight at Bramlage. A win and an estimated 8,000 fans will get that final game on the Cats' home court on Sunday.

"We need a lot a people at this game," junior center Nicole Ohlde said. "We need about 8,000 or somewhere in there."

The magic number of 8,000 was set because that's what Penn State is expecting when it plays Mississippi State on the other side of the WNIT bracket.

Should both K-State and Penn State win, the team with the better attendance will host the title game.

But the Cats must first win, and that's what they are focused on, forward Kendra Wecker said.

"We just have to come out, and if there's eight or nine thousand fans, great," she said. "But if not, we just have to come out and do our job and play hard and hopefully get a victory."

K-State's opponent, USC, is a big, physical team that has a lot of weapons, Coach Deb Patterson said.

Football | Newman selected as finalist for defensive player of the year

Five finalists for the 2002 Bronko Nagurski Trophy, which is awarded to the best defensive player in college football by the Football Writers Association of America and the Charlotte Touchdown Club, were announced on Tuesday.

The five finalists are Maryland linebacker E.J. Henderson, K-State cornerback Terence Newman, Georgia end David Pollack, Arizona State end Terrell Suggs and Notre Dame cornerback Shane Walton.

The winner will be named Dec. 9 at a banquet in Charlotte, N.C. All the players are first-time finalists for the FWAA Defensive Player of the Year Award, which is in its 10th year of existence. Henderson is a repeat FWAA All-American from last season.

K-State better of two good teams

BEN FEHR

In 1998, it was close.

K-State went to Columbia, Mo., with a perfect 10-0 record and left town with a 31-25 victory that had Wildcat fans shaking their heads in relief with raised pulses.

In 1999, it wasn't close. K-State trashed the Tigers 66-0 at KSU Stadium.

In 2000, Missouri was again up to the challenge, but K-State prevailed 28-24.

Last year, K-State, in the midst of a rebuilding process, was all business against the Tigers as it won 24-3 to push its winning streak over Missouri to nine games.

And in 2002, K-State prepares to travel east to face a Tiger team fresh off a double-overtime victory over the scrappy Texas A&M Aggies.

If history has anything to say about it, this one should be close. Missouri has given K-State fits at Memorial Stadium in recent years.

But the Wildcats are a team that has scored 215 points and given up just 30 during the last four ball games.

This one isn't going to be close.

Now, it's important to note my views certainly don't reflect the opinions or attitudes of anyone directly involved in the K-State program, least of all no-nonsense coach Bill Snyder.

K-State's volleyball team looks to tie a significant record tonight when the Cats play Oklahoma at Ahearn Field House.

But according to Coach Suzie Fritz, the team doesn't think about it a lot.

The record in jeopardy is the consecutive wins mark. K-State has won 12 matches in a row, a streak dating to Oct. 2. A win Wednesday against the Sooners would tie the school record of 13 set in 1979.

"It would be great," Fritz said. "We are just trying to win as many matches as we can, and if they happen to happen in a row, then that's great.

"But we didn't enter into it thinking, 'Hey, let's win the next 13 matches in a row.' We are just trying to win one at a time, and if it happens that we set a record, it's an accomplishment for the team."

During the streak, Fritz said she has been pleased with several aspects the team's game.

She said the Wildcats are playing good at the right time – the end of the season.

His Own World

Artist opens door into imagination through ceramic sculptures

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eric Abraham lives in his own world.

Abraham's ceramic sculptures are easily identifiable pieces of that world that serve as small gateways into his imagination. Sometimes they are melodramatic mirrors with bright colors, adorned with ornaments and animals. Sometimes they are intricately detailed fire-breathing dragons. Sometimes they are flying animals with funny hats.

Eric Abraham's Art
Where: Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery, 406 1/2 Poyntz
Online: www.ericabraham.net

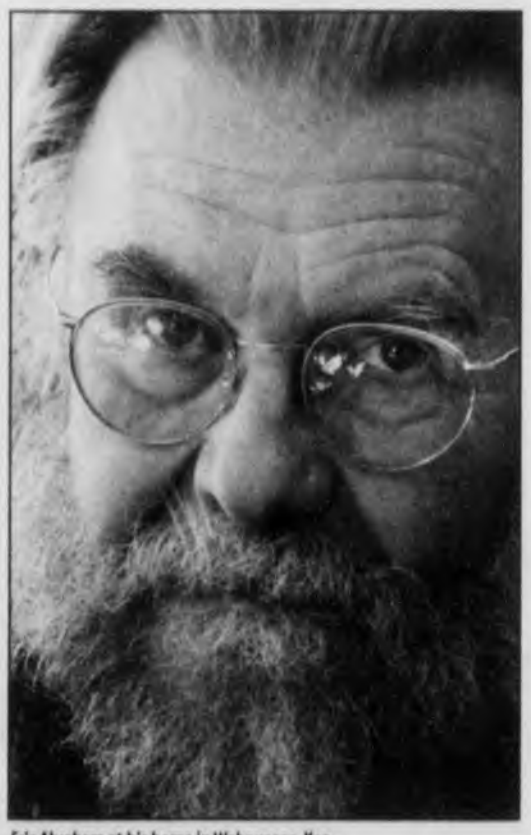
But hardly any of it is straight out of reality.

"They're not too serious. They're fun, and I try to keep it a little tongue-in-cheek," Abraham, of Waubansee, Kan., said. "It's not something you see every five minutes."



Abraham isn't the type of person you see every five minutes either.

At roughly 5 and a half feet tall, with bright eyes, strong forearms and a bushy gray beard holding bits of the ceramic dust that covers his jeans, Abraham resembles a dwarf of Tolkien's creation, toiling away at his kiln. Other than a 17-year stay in Denver, Colo., Abraham has never lived in one place for more than five years. He also claims to have seen a flying saucer, though he doesn't have an explanation for the phenomenon. He has also driven around the country in a 1950 Chevrolet school bus that has sometimes served as his home.

Abraham collects things, too. The loft of the schoolhouse he converted into his home holds numerous old radios dating from the 1930s to the '60s. In a back room of his studio are his National Geographic magazines – he has nearly every issue from 1908 to the present – and he also has an assortment of old cameras and soda bottles that lie around with the rest of the clutter with which Abraham surrounds himself.

Such characteristics make it easy to label Abraham as an outsider artist. Though Abraham is an outsider art enthusiast, he is too aware and educated to fall into that category, said Jay Nelson, co-owner of the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery.

"Nobody in the country is doing what he's doing with porcelain," he said. "It's a combination of what appears to be naive or outsider art with really good technical skills. So even though it looks somewhat naive, he has the skills and education to understand what he's doing."

Eric Abraham at his home in Wabaunsee, Kan.

Abraham received his bachelor of fine arts from the Kansas City Art Institute, and his master of fine arts from the University of Nebraska.

He taught for two years at K-State before leaving under circumstances he says some people "may still be sore about." He worked at Hallmark Cards in Kansas City, Mo., in the mid 1960s, and he has been working in porcelain since 1985.

Abraham's art is witty and eccentric, while appealing to a young sense of humor, Nelson said. He pointed out a cup titled "There Have Been Allegations Made, and This is the Alligator," that prominently features an alligator as one example of the humor with which Abraham endows his art.

"His pieces are full of little jokes like that," Nelson said.

Nelson said the Strecker-Nelson has been showing Abraham's work for about 20 years now. When the gallery moved a year ago, Nelson said, one room was designed, from color to structure to lighting, specifically to display Abraham's work.

Of course, some people are apprehensive to pay for pieces that prominently feature flying pigs with hats. Abraham said people sometimes need authorities to tell them it is OK to buy eccentric work.

As for the hats, Abraham said, it wasn't his idea.

"The pigs started wearing hats, and all the other animals decided they wanted hats, too," he said. "You know how children are – 'Well, the pigs have hats, so I've gotta have a hat, too. I want one with a feather.' 'I want one with a propeller.'

"That's why they have hats. It wasn't my doing. They tell me what kind of hats they want."

Abraham said he became interested in art when he was a child, drawing pictures for the stories he liked since many of the illustrations were inadequate. That child-like approach still influences Abraham's work. He talked about his adoration of Will Rogers, Mark Twain and British author Arthur Ransome's books about children going off on adventures while avoiding their parents.

Abraham even illustrated "Peaceful Poems: Poems for Bedtime," a limited-press book of poems on display at the Strecker-Nelson.

"I've done a lot of things with fairy-tale themes, but I think they're just as much for adults' rooms," he said. "They're not primarily for children, and if it's for a child, it has to be a child that's not going to take it out and smash it."

In actuality, the structures of those pieces are especially influenced by Baroque and Rococo sculpture, Abraham said. The two eras were known for the exploration of the artists in realism and elegant, decorative beauty.

Nelson said Abraham struggled to be accepted in the art world, and now, with other artists and professors buying his work, that has been achieved. But his struggle for acceptance hasn't watered-down Abraham's style.

"Eric is an intellectual, an eccentric, and very independent, which is probably why he doesn't teach," Nelson said.

So Abraham works in his own way in a gutted double-wide trailer converted into a studio next to his house. Abraham said he sometimes feels 5 years old when he's making art.

That's why it's no surprise Abraham values his active imagination.

"Art is but a permanent figment of the imagination," he said.

SEMIFINAL | Attendance to determine game site

It is led by Player of the Year candidate Ebony Hoffman.

However, Patterson said, Hoffman isn't the only person the Cats should be concerned with.

"(Rachel) Woodward is a little like Megan Mahoney in that she is scoring the ball and rebounding. She's a strong presence, and she makes plays when the team needs it," she said. "Hoffman is the presence inside, but you have very talented players in (Aisha) Hollans and (Jessica) Cheeks that are going to work very hard to break you down on the dribble.

"This is a kind of team that brings athleticism and quickness, the likes of which we haven't seen."

Another element the Cats haven't seen so far this season, one they will welcome back tonight, is guard Chelsea Domenico.

Patterson said Domenico, who has been out with an injury, will be a great addition to the lineup – one that will give her team an added weapon when she's on the court.

"I really look forward to working her back into a flow," she said. "I hope I get her four or five minutes at a spot, just to let her get a feel for the speed.

"It's a nice problem to think of where I am going to give her those minutes, and that's a compliment to the players who have been on the floor. I think I will be able to sub her at any one of our three perimeter spots, and I think that will make us a better basketball team."

Guard Laurie Koehn said having Domenico back in uniform will benefit the Cats exponentially.

But she said the most important thing the team needs to do in order to advance in this tournament is play its style of basketball.

"It's the same thing with every game," Koehn said. "If we execute and play defense, then we'll be all right."

COLUMN | K-State-Missouri game should be tight

I sit in on K-State's Tuesday press conferences, and if there is a team in the nation that takes all opponents seriously, it's the Cats. Being around the program, you get that.

The Tigers have just five wins, but two of them have come against tough opponents in Illinois and Texas A&M. Plus, Missouri played Oklahoma, Iowa State and Colorado down to the wire.

And Missouri quarterback Brad Smith is scary. With just one more rushing yard, the Tigers' freshman signal-caller will be just the second player in NCAA Division-I football history to rush for 1,000 yards and throw for 2,000.

Say what you will – that's flat getting it done.

And Missouri doesn't begin and end with Smith. Senior wideouts Justin Gage and Darius Outlaw have big-play ability to burn and junior tailback Zack Abron is a player who can hurt you as well.

Missouri is a good football team, but K-State is better.

The tale of the tape speaks volumes in this matchup.

Smith and the Tiger offense have been productive this season, to say the least. The Tigers average 32.73 points-per-contest, a mark good for fourth in the Big 12.

But K-State has been better. The Wildcats are atop the conference in scoring offense, averaging 46.36 points per game.

As good as MU has been at moving the ball, it has been just as bad in keeping opponents from moving the ball.

Mizzou is ranked second to last in the Big 12 in total defense and has given up 37 touchdowns overall and 441 yards of offense per game.

The Cats, on the other hand, lead the Big 12 in defense and have surrendered just 15 touchdowns and 248.73 yards per contest.

In fact, K-State tops MU in every Big 12 statistical category except passing offense.

The tale of this game – Mizzou is looking to become bowl-eligible with a win, and the Cats are looking for a 10-win season.

Missouri is tough, but K-State is tougher.

VOLLEYBALL | Cats go for 13

"I've been very happy with the distribution," Fritz said. "We don't make a lot of errors and we haven't for quite some time. So, I think that allows us to be good offensively, but we would like to find a way to get more kills."

One player that has helped the Cats get those kills is senior libero Laura Downey-Wallace.

Wallace has made a case for All-American recognition, Fritz said, as she leads the conference in digs per game.

"Laura Downey is as good of a libero as I have seen all year," Fritz said. "The statistics we think are important are her dig percentage and her perfect pass percentage – and those aren't stats that are kept through the collegiate statistic system.

"Her perfect pass percentage was 75 percent against Texas A&M and maybe even more importantly, she dug 80 percent of her opportunities. That's truly unbelievable."

Oklahoma, despite being one of the weaker teams in the conference, poses one significant threat, Fritz said.

Megan O'Connell, a 6-foot-4 middle blocker, had 14 kills against the Cats on Oct. 9 in Norman, Okla.

Fritz said that if her team can contain O'Connell, it would severely hinder the Sooners' chances of winning.

"We'll certainly want to shut her down," she said. "We want to be aware of what OU's strengths are and what OU's weaknesses are, and what we can do to exploit those weaknesses. If we play well, it should go our way."

For 12 matches, it has gone the Cats' way.

But now, just one win away from a 23-year-old record and playing one of the Big 12's worst teams, could K-State let up and get knocked off by the Sooners?

Fritz said she doesn't think so.

"If we were going to overlook a team, we would have done it long ago," she said. "We have some routines that are in place that don't allow our team to overlook anybody. I think they are intelligent enough and mature to be able to take everybody seriously, so I don't believe that is going to be a factor."

Fritz announced on Wednesday the signing of Sandy Werner, who will join the Wildcats next season.

Werner is a 5-foot-11 middle blocker from Topeka Kan. She led Washburn Rural High School to the 6A state title match, and has been named to the all-state team twice.

Fritz said she is excited Werner has decided to become a part of the K-State family.

"We think she is one of the best volleyball players in the state of Kansas, and in my opinion is one of the better players coming out of this region," she said. "She is a pretty good all-around volleyball player. She has just tremendous arm strength and can really get on the ball and hit it hard."

Unspoken Words

What we say when we say nothing at all

By Kecia Seyb
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Your body can speak louder than your mouth.

Some experts suggest 55 to 93 percent of all communication is nonverbal. So it might be important to know what your body is saying when you are not talking.

"Over half the information we get any time we communicate with someone else comes from nonverbal sources," said David Procter, associate professor of speech communications and department head of speech communication, theater and dance. "It's based on the way they dress, based on the way they walk, based on their body type – are they a little too heavy, a little too thin, are they like a football player, are they what?"

Procter said he notices about four different types of body language, including body movement, spatial distances between people, touch and physical appearance.

All come into play on any typical day. Spatial distances and touch differ dramatically depending on the people conversing, Richard Harris, professor of psychology, said. For example, married couples touch and are close to one another. But, in formal settings or even casual conversations, rules change.

"In kind of casual, informal conversations, there's the optimal kind of distance – somewhere between 14 and 20 inches in our society," he said. "Closer than that, we're feeling our space is invaded. Farther than that, we feel people are being aloof."

What people wear also speaks volumes, Procter said.

"You don't want to show up to an interview wearing ragged blue jeans," Procter said. "You want to look nice. You want to look appropriate.

"If you dress inappropriately, that's lots of times the kiss of death."

Based on appearance, people will make judgments, perhaps within the first 10 to 15 seconds, said LeAnn Brazeal, assistant professor of speech communications.

But facial expressions, including smiles and eye contact, can help make a good impression.

Eye contact is imperative in U.S. culture, Procter and Harris said.

Procter said it's the biggest indicator of attraction between men and women. Harris said in other cultures, however, people may need to refrain from making eye contact, especially when speaking to a social superior.

> "We communicate more through nonverbal means than we do verbal means. We check people against what they're saying with body language."
> LeAnn Brazeal
> ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF SPEECH COMMUNICATIONS

In regard to other cultures, Harris said people also should remember gestures are not universal.

"Some gestures that are very positive in one language might be very obscene in another language or dialect," he said. "One that's kind of notorious is rounding the fingers to say OK. In many countries, it's like giving someone the finger."

No matter the culture or environment, your body is talking, and it's wise to know what it's saying.

"It's really important," Brazeal said. "We communicate more through nonverbal means than we do verbal means. We check people against what they're saying with body language.

"If the two don't match, we'll tend to believe the nonverbal more than the verbal."

Hip chic
Hands on the hip typically signify defiance. If your head is down, it means rejection. Foot-tapping shows that you feel bored. Also, when listening, refrain from picking imaginary pieces of fluff from clothing. This can signal you don't like what the other person is saying.

Trigger Finger
A handshake can say a lot about your personality in a short amount of time. When shaking hands, an extended thumb and a stretched-directed palm can resemble a pistol and convey aggression. A handshake should be firm, showing confidence. Politicians often will shake your hand with their other hand covering the shake or holding your elbow. Domineering people often squeeze the hand during a greeting. If you're clever, you can move your index and little finger in toward your palm to prevent a crushing handshake.

The Thinker
A tilted head lets people know you're listening. Stroking your chin and looking up shows you're evaluating something. Try, however, to avoid hand-to-face gestures such as touching your nose or rubbing your eye — it's often a sign you're not being completely honest about something.

Selective Listening
When you stand with your arm behind your back, you're showing that you're attentive. Be careful when crossing your arms across your chest. Sometimes it may just be a comfortable place to put your arms, but to others, you may look closed. Try to develop good posture. It should be straight but not stiff.

Fancy Foot work
If your feet are open, you are communicating attentiveness and openness to others. Not being able to mirror and match what the environment is can work against you. If you're too hesitant in your movements, you'll look apologetic and act like you're taking up someone's time.

Rolling eyes
Staring into space shows you are bored. If you're looking around, you are telling the other person you want to leave and to get out of the situation. If you avoid eye contact, you clearly are not interested. As a listener, you tend to make more eye contact. It's more appropriate to extend eye contact for longer periods of time. As a speaker, it ends up being uncomfortable if you go much beyond five seconds of eye contact — you've already made that connection.

Initiation
Trying to obtain eye contact shows definite interest. Leaning forward with an open body, arms, legs and hands indicates engaged feelings and responsiveness. A smile shows interest, too. If you lean back in your chair with your hands clasped behind your head, however, you're showing pure arrogance. Also, if you bring a hand to the back of the neck, you may look like you are trying to pull out of the conversation.

Space Issues
Legs crossed with the thigh on the knee typically means rejection, while legs crossed with the ankle on the knee means you are evaluating. Also, women like to try to be little and take up less space, while men like to spread themselves out and declare their territory. Claiming too much space shows you're overly aggressive.

DIVERSE DANCE

Performers to combine styles at 2002 Winterdance

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The opening of Winterdance 2002 will be more than a dance recital.

It will be the culmination of time and work that has brought ends as well as beginnings.

Winterdance 2002 will be the last time Vera Orlock, associate professor of dance, will work on a K-State dance production as part of the faculty. Orlock, who choreographed a piece titled "Odyssey," will be moving to Tallahasse, Fla., to be with her husband.

"As I get older, my dancer's bones like the warm weather more and more," she said. "And I'll have a beautiful garden. I've actually found lots of creative inspiration from working in the garden."

But for Amy Hurrelbrink, junior in dance, and Amanda Slead, freshman in dance and elementary education, Winterdance has been the beginning of a friendship. The two got to know each other while choreographing "Kiss My Grits," a tap duet set to "Dueling Banjos." Now Hurrelbrink seems proud that she has "adopted Amanda as a little sister."

Hurrelbrink said dancing to "Dueling Banjos" came from a desire to poke fun at her own Kansas roots after spending a summer in New York City, studying dance and getting teased about being a hick.

"I decided to live up the image and go for a country-girl thing," she said. "It fit our personalities really well."

In a diverse show, featuring tap, modern and Spanish dancing among other forms, Joyce Yagerline, director of the dance program, gives Winterdance a classical grounding with her ballet piece.

It is set to Tchaikovsky's "Andante Cantabile." Yagerline compared ballet to Latin because both provide the roots for many languages.

Yagerline recalled asking guest modern dance choreographer Mark Morris, why he taught ballet.

"He said, 'It's like Latin – when it's done right, there's nothing better.' Ballet is an art form that has been around, and been

Smokeout calls for quitting

Program to help student smokers stop

By Amy Link
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Smokers beware.

Today is the American Cancer Society's 26th-annual Great American Smokeout. The goal of the event is to help smokers put down their cigarettes for good.

To help the cause, Lafene Health Center has developed a new program called K-Staters Inspired to Stop Smoking, or KISS, as a way to help students stop smoking.

KISS, in conjunction with the Terry C. Johnson Center for Basic Cancer Research, will have a table today in the K-State Student Union. They will provide information from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in honor of the smokeout.

"We are trying to stop lung cancer," said Carol Kennedy, director of health education and KISS adviser.

Kennedy said this is the first year for KISS to be marketed to students.

KISS is a free program designed to advise students on ways to quit smoking. Today it will be offering survival kits to students who want to quit smoking, she said.

The kit offers a variety of alternatives to smoking, such as a stress-reducing ball and a lollipop.

The kit also includes a list of reasons why students should quit.

Kennedy said if students decide to quit, they are encouraged to use the KISS program. She said as part of the program, she will be available to students seeking help with quitting smoking from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Wednesdays.

Marcia Locke, outreach coordinator for the cancer research center, said the smokeout provides students a chance to get help.

"We want to encourage smokers not to try to quit alone," Locke said.

Locke said smoking is the No. 1 preventable cause of untimely deaths.

According to the American Cancer Society, tobacco use accounted for an estimated 430,000 premature deaths each year from 1990 to 1994, and 87 percent of all lung cancer deaths can be attributed to tobacco.

Along with reducing the risk of cancer and other life-threatening diseases, quitting can benefit students in other ways, Kennedy said. Students who stop have more energy and more money.

While there are many ways that help students quit smoking, there isn't just one thing that works for everyone, Kennedy said. However, there are some methods that seem to be common among those who quit for good.

"Most successful quitting methods are good support system, use of the counseling sessions, and implementing assistance with the physicians," Kennedy said.

College of Business cuts honors program

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's been a major cut, and honors students are not happy about it.

As a result of the budget cuts occurring campuswide, the College of Business recently cut its honors program.

"I don't want to lose this – it's an excellent program," said Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business. "Some of our best and brightest students go through our program. I'm not very happy with what's going on."

Neither are the current honors students.

Several honors students became frustrated when they first found out about the cuts to the program, said Carson Monroe, sophomore in management information systems and a honors student.

"At first, everyone had the same reac-

SGA eliminates Wildcat Walk funding

Program handed over to Association of Residence Halls

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a dismal year of service, the Student Governing Association handed over the Wildcat Walk escort program to the Association of Residence Halls.

The program, which provided volunteer escorts for students around campus, also had its funds cut after a majority vote from SGA.

Laurie Quaife, SGA allocations chair, and a committee voted against the request to continue funding for the program.

"Basically the reason why our committee made this decision is just the size for the request," she said. "They were requesting $6,000, and we felt that the student fee money could be used to help benefit students more."

Research conducted by SGA showed that numbers from the service diminished over the decade.

"Historically, the Wildcat Walk has not been a very well-used program," Quaife said. "In the early 90s, it was very successful. They had 20 to 30 walks a night. But the last two years it's hardly been used at all."

James Stoutenborough, senior in political science and chairman for the ARH Wildcat Walk program, said when SGA asked the residence halls to take control, the service had fallen to near dormancy.

"When we were asked to put it together, it had fallen to the point where zero people used it to walk," he said. "SGA asked ARH to take over to help save the program."

And that is exactly what ARH wants to do, Stoutenborough said.

"Our feeling is that this is a program that benefits the campus as a whole," he said. "It's a program that students should support because it's something that brings safety to our campus. Students should be proud of that."

However, with the funding cut from SGA, the residence halls are finding the transition difficult.

"We have taken a stance to do our best to keep it running, but it won't be advertised campuswide because we can't afford to," Stoutenborough said. "It will be through word of mouth only, which is unfortunate."

K-State Police have been using their own escort service to respond to any Wildcat Walk calls.

"We have our own escort service anyway, and this service does tie in," said Ronnie Grice, director of public safety for the K-State Police. "We have been doing escorts all along, but the Wildcat Walk was a branch off of that with volunteers."

However, Stoutenborough said ARH plans on using the volunteer student escorts beginning the first week of the spring semester.

"Escorts have been administered by campus police because we don't have the program up and running yet," he said.

"We've been on hold waiting to find out what's going on, and now that it's somewhat solved, we're moving ahead."

JJ Jones, junior in animal science and industry, was recently named the central region vice president of the National FFA Organization.

Junior chosen as national FFA officer

By Ashley Huseman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six years ago, JJ Jones had a dream of becoming an officer for the National FFA Organization.

Earlier this month, that dream came true.

Jones, junior in animal science and industry with a minor in international agriculture, was chosen to represent nearly half a million youth as the central region vice president of the National FFA Organization during its annual convention in Louisville, Ky.

The National FFA Organization, a youth organization preparing members for agriculture careers, has more than 7,000 chapters in all 50 states, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

"All I could think was, 'Wow, it's actually happening'," Jones said. "It was October of 1996 when I decided I wanted to do this, and now it has actually happened."

During his reign as vice president, Jones will spend more than 300 days traveling more than 100,000 miles, representing 461,043 FFA members. He will conduct conventions and workshops and represent the FFA to businesses and industries. He also will travel to Japan for two weeks for an international agricultural experience tour.

"JJ's biggest job will be traveling to state FFA conventions," said Leslie Small, graduate student in agricultural economics and past central region vice president. "Between him and his other five team members, they will touch all 50 states and Puerto Rico."

Mary Kane, executive secretary of the Kansas FFA Association, said being elected to a national office is a great honor.

"There's only six in 460,000 who are selected to serve as a national officer," she said. "This is often something that first-year members aspire to achieve, but in the end, only about 40 do the yearly preparations, and then only six are actually selected. This is a huge honor but also a huge responsibility."

Kane coached and critiqued Jones in order to prepare him for the selection process.

"He has the ability to communicate with people whether young or old and can make a connection with them because of his huge variety of life experiences," she said.

Jones said the selection process involves a 12-page application, a written activity and six rounds of interviews. Candidates also are required to complete their American FFA degree and take an exam that includes agricultural, educational and FFA issues.

Small said the candidate selection process is a learning experience for all candidates, even if they aren't selected for an office.

"When I look back on my experience and think about how much work it takes, I realize that this is a really big honor. But regardless of whether you're selected or not, it is an enormous experience," she said.

Jones, originally a member of the Atwood FFA chapter, said he decided to join FFA simply because he wanted to show cattle. He said he had the opportunity to go to the national convention and that really excited him about the organization.

After visiting with a national officer during a conference for first-year FFA members, Jones decided he wanted to run for a national office.

As a high-school student, Jones participated in public speaking, livestock judging and poultry judging within the organization. He also was elected to serve as the state FFA president for 2000-2001.

Jones said his goal as a national officer is to help students find a passion for agriculture.

And Small said Jones has that passion.

"JJ is very genuine, and he really means what he says," Small said. "He has a great deal of integrity and has a genuine love for agriculture. His heart is in agriculture, and that will help him contribute to the officer team. I think he will use this position to reach out to students."

Jones, son of Larry and Diane Jones, grew up on a farm and concentrated on beef production. He won a state award for his beef production and supervised agricultural experience.

Jones also has a younger brother, Jeff, who is a sophomore in agricultural communications and journalism.

Kane said Jones will be a significant contributor to this year's national officer team.

"JJ is a learner, and if he sees something that he wants to achieve, he figures out how to do it," she said.

DANCE

Choreographers combine wide range of styles for production

developed, for hundreds of years," she said. "Modern dancers still take ballet classes because it encompasses a range of movements dancers need to know."

In more experimental territory, Orlock's "Odyssey" makes use of the spoken word, music and pieces of an aria by Handel, sung by dancer David Ollington, associate professor of dance. Ollington said he has a long history in music theater, so the aria did not intimidate him much.

Orlock said the words offered a new way to present movement on the stage.

"I almost don't care if they don't get the words," she said. "For me, it's about the struggle of the creative process. I like having the rhythm and imagery of poetry. Sometimes they can evoke a movement that you see differently with words than with music."

Though most are choreographed specifically to be performed at Winterdance, another modern piece, "Impact," choreographed by Mary Chase, dance instructor, will be shown 15 times before the dancers are done with it, Chase said. The piece combines dancers of varying experience in a dance that focuses on the impact moments can leave, Chase said.

After many hours of rehearsal, the dancers finally will present their work tonight. Hurrelbrink and Slead said they have practiced their tap routine more than enough to have it down, but it has all been worth it.

Slead reflected on the importance of dancing in her life.

"If it weren't for dancing, and the stage, I'd. . ."

"Go play in traffic," Hurrelbrink finished for her.

Student earns shot at state pageant crown

New Miss Manhattan USA to compete against 24 other women for chance to advance

By Lindsey Tipling
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many girls dream of being crowned Miss America.

One K-State student is ready to live out that dream.

Megan Smith, senior in apparel design, is one of the 24 girls who will be competing in the Miss Kansas USA pageant on Dec. 1 in Wichita, Kan., the first step in the road to the Miss America pageant.

Technically, Smith said, she already holds the title of Miss Manhattan USA.

"There wasn't a pageant here in Manhattan," she said. "I turned in an application answering a few questions along with a picture of myself and was chosen from that."

Jennifer Vannatta, co-director of the pageant, said there are not local pageants anywhere in Kansas for this event.

"We have a statewide open pageant," she said. "They apply, and we assign each girl a title."

Vannatta said titles are usually based on the contestants' hometowns or schools.

"The titles work on a first-come, first-serve basis," Vannatta said.

"So if a contestant really wants to compete as Miss Manhattan USA, she has to apply early."

Vannatta said there are a few basic requirements a woman must meet in order to be selected.

"She must be a state resident," she said. "She cannot have been married before, and she cannot have any children."

Vannatta said many women come to the Miss Kansas USA pageant having never done anything like it before.

However, this will not be the first pageant Smith has participated in.

"I did Miss Black and Gold," she said. "I just like doing pageants."

One of the reasons she likes competing in pageants is the possibility of prize money, she said, but there are less tangible benefits.

"I think they are positive for girls to get involved in," Smith said.

"It helps build self-esteem and helps you learn more about yourself."

Vannatta said there are many things a young woman can take away from these competitions.

"I want every girl across Kansas to experience the kind of growth that I have seen these pageants make in girls' lives," she said.

"They can meet new friends, boost their confidence and maybe even win the title."

Preparation has been a key part in Smith's experience, and her family and friends have been helping her get ready for the competition.

"We have been practicing my interview skills," she said. "They will ask us questions about ourselves from our bio sheets, so it is good to be prepared."

If she wins the title of Miss Kansas USA, Smith will go on to participate in the 2003 Miss USA pageant and then possibly the Miss Universe pageant.

But it's not all about beauty or poise – for Smith, it's about the platform.

"The platform I would have is breast cancer awareness, she said.

"I would definitely want to use my title to work with making people more aware of breast cancer."

As for her future, Smith said the pageant is definitely going to be a determining factor in what she does with the rest of her life.

"If I win, I would probably decide to keep on doing pageants," she said.

"Winning would give me the drive to go on and do more."

And winning, Vannatta said, will be based on the woman's personality, beauty and platform.

"They will be looking for a good representative of the state of Kansas, she said.

"A young lady who has a heart for making a difference, a young lady who is beautiful on the inside as well as the outside.

"We just want the girls to have a good experience. We are not looking for perfection by any means, just a girl who can do a lot for Kansas."

Megan Smith, senior in apparel design, is the current Miss Manhattan. She will go on to compete for the title of Miss Kansas. "I am very excited, and I'm looking forward to the overall experience of the pageant. I'm also a little nervous," she said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Student leaders wise to deny funding request

SGA decided not to continue funding for the Wildcat Walk escort program.

The escort service, which was widely used and highly successful in the early 1990s, was placed in the hands of the Association of Residence Halls after SGA voted to discontinue continued allocations for the program. ARH now will decide the future of the near-dormant program.

We believe it was a wise decision for SGA to discontinue this funding.

Although Wildcat Walk had a good purpose, students haven't shown interest in it for quite a while. Rather than allocate $6,000 for the program, SGA decided student fees could be put to better use.

Student leaders are doing their jobs well when they make decisions like this.

With budget shortfalls affecting K-State, it is an appropriate move for our student leaders to cut out inefficiencies. This program was an inefficiency.

We appreciate our student leaders working to allocate student funds in the best possible way.

Now that SGA has found and eliminated one inefficiency in the allocations budget, it needs to evaluate all requests as thoroughly and work even harder to use student funds in the most beneficial way.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

GREEDY POCKETS

Tobacco settlements not spent in way politicians promised

SUSAN POWELL

The litigious itch of lawyers looking to make a quick buck has spread to this nation's government. The days of chasing ambulances might be over, but it seems this practice has shifted from lawyer versus litigant to "the public" versus big corporations.

A prime example of this is the state Attorneys General and the fight against tobacco corporations.

I'm not commenting on whether the tobacco companies should be held responsible for medical expenses incurred by smokers. They are, and have paid a $246 billion settlement.

The state Attorneys General proclaimed the settlement would reimburse taxpayers for tobacco-related health care expenses for each state, as well as fund anti-smoking programs, according to the National Taxpayers Union Web site, www.ntu.org.

So where has this settlement gone?

North Dakota government officials decided to take 45 percent of their settlement money and use it for water reclamation projects for the year.

New York has issued county bonds to raise money for many projects, including the expansion of a cemetery, paying off county bonds and installing showers at a marina. These bonds will be paid off by tobacco tax revenues.

California has countless creative ideas, one being a diversion of tobacco money into the legal costs of a police scandal, reported the American Medical News Web site, www.ama-assn.org.

Here in Kansas, there has been much bickering over our "tobacco trust fund" in legislation, with a few million set aside last May for education, according to the Topeka Capital-Journal.

Though funding education is a commendable issue, it wasn't the purpose.

States that have used the money for anti-smoking programs are feeling the need for greed as well.

MPAAT, the Minnesota Partnership for Action Against Tobacco, was created to help smokers kick the habit. Granted with $202 million, MPAAT has pursued prohibition as its main cause.

Roughly $1 million has gone toward campaigns to pass no-smoking ordinances that just divide a community into a smoking and non-smoking section, according to the Minnesota Star Tribune's. The research advisory committee spent only $453,500 to study youth smoking.

Much of the tobacco settlement money has gone into the pockets of MPAAT's board members to fund their own projects and organizations.

Accountability seems a foreign concept to many in governmental offices. A promise made on election day is a distant memory days later. Billions are being spent to build parks, repair roads and fund public education.

But these programs were not the originally stated recipients.

This lawsuit expounds the idea of dirty politics. No matter the honorable use of such funds, we were lied to, concerning the use of this settlement.

We cannot award such settlements and look away. More class-action suits will result, with the greatest change being in a politician's bank account.

Fort Riley soldiers must learn to abstain from using force if they want to get along with civilians

LAYTON EHMKE

Some of the soldiers who drift into this town are violent, brainwashed degenerates who need to be trained to co-exist with civilians.

Violent people, especially those trained for combat, are deeply troubled and disturbed. They find themselves at odds with the world. They give others who wear the uniform a bad image.

A couple of weeks ago, a friend of mine was attacked by three such soldiers in an Aggieville bar.

He was hit and kicked in the face for protecting his friends. They probably don't have a good reason for doing it, but I couldn't find out their names to ask them because they ran before they could be arrested.

It isn't hard to find the source of violence in Manhattan. It's either going to be a student or a soldier because, statistically, mostly young people commit crime.

Whether there are shots fired or if somebody's getting stabbed in this town, it can have something to do with our esteemed and friendly soldiers down the road.

Last year, my doors were kicked in by soldiers. My roommates had asked them to leave because they were drawing on a poster in the living room. They resorted to violence. Apparently this is all they know.

These soldiers are no fun to be around, especially when they're off the base and boozin' it up. This is when they get together and feast on the city like packs of wolves. This is when the I'm-going-to-kick-your-ass-because-I-can attitude is most prevalent.

Where is the reward for kicking people in the faces until their ears bleed? Since when has real brutalization gotten to be fun for these guys?

They are government-created, human-robot killing machines. They are out of control, and the government should take them back under its wings and rock them to sleep every night.

Soldiers are in a different state of mind than civilians who are not under the influence of thought control.

Violent training by governmental authority, e.g., for police or the military, and subsequently returning these trainees back into society is not easy to do. But even the most brutalized and degraded souls can exercise some control over their conduct.

At 17, Lee Harvey Oswald joined the Marines, where personal violence is endemic. Oswald received considerable provocation including homophobic taunts, forced cold showers and verbal challenges, but he would have rather walked away than retaliate. He eventually joined the group, visiting prostitutes, drinking and defending himself.

"Many people resolve to act violently and then back down. But the individual who follows through on his decision and commits a violent act successfully might find himself positively reinforced by others' reactions – they're scared of him and might even treat him like a local celebrity." ("Why They Kill," Richard Rhodes)

In 1996, Fort Riley used to send a handful of military police to Manhattan to handle its rowdy boys. Where have they gone? Now there is no kind of preventative threat to those soldiers who take their anger out on college students.

Unfair? Yes. These men are trained to be sheep. They believe they belong to a brotherhood where violence is necessary, but have apparently forgotten that Manhattan is a small, relatively peaceful Bible-belt town.

They are rewarded like dogs for cruel, crass behavior.

Do yourself a favor and don't feed their egos. Instead, put some fun-lovin' 311 in the juke box and tell them to simmer down. Only then can civilians and soldiers co-exist.

To the person from Johnson County with the Beamer: I hope you wreck your car, your ship sinks and you get eaten alive by sharks.

There are always a few errors in the paper, but seriously, "See Guns, page 9" and "See Families, page 9?" Page 9 is the Classifieds. Also, Jon McGraw was taken in the NFL draft like a year ago, not Saturday.

You know what would be ingenious? A cell phone that not only told you who you called between 1 a.m. and 3 a.m., but what you said so you could remember who you drunk-dialed and why.

I was just wondering what was up with the foreskin on the nose of Wednesday's Collegian.

I would much rather have a sub with lots of lettuce than a Quizno's sub.

Is it just me or did anyone else think the nose on the front page of Wednesday's Collegian looked like an uncircumcised penis?

A free, overly dramatic girlfriend? Does she put out?

I agree that the Higher Education Drug Act Provision is pretty stupid and should be repealed, but honestly, is it really racist? The only way it's racist is if minorities are using the drugs and then getting convicted for it.

I agree about Osama and al-Qaeda. Bush has bitten off more than he can chew. My point is that if we do go to war, it's ultimately to protect Americans at home.

Man, Kansas is great. Where else can you see a tractor driving down the main road at a university?

I think the Fourum should stop bashing greeks. We'll probably be your bosses someday.

Come on, editorial board. The rights of students and faculty to possess guns on campuses have actually prevented several incidents of campus violence in recent years. Next time, report on the facts, not on myths.

There are a lot of people who shouldn't breed. I am at least intelligent enough to realize I am one of them.

I read that quote in the Fourum about not being able to lick your elbow, and then I went to the mirror and licked my elbow.

Nasrina Burnett, I hope you know that whites are the predominant users of all major, illegal drugs.

Hey, Nasrina, I just wanted to say that maybe minorities wouldn't be convicted of drug use more often than whites if they didn't use drugs more often than whites.

I think the Collegian should publish a list of all the slumlords, because that way, people would know not to rent from landlords like mine.

If Manhattan was the universe of stupid, the campus would be the sun.

For all you Nebraska fans who keep talking crap on K-State because you've won national championships and we haven't: What are you going to do after we win a national championship? That's right, nothing. So go home to your cousin wife and have her bake you some road kill.

I'm sick and tired of people complaining about the lack of respect from our fans, especially when most of the Nebraska team left the field the other night without shaking the hands of our players. The fans don't have to show respect, but the players should.

To the Johnson County fools bragging about their money, I reply with the words of Jesus: "Because thou sayest, 'I am rich and increased with goods and have need of nothing,' knowest now that thou art wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked."

The U.S. military recently discharged six American translators of Arabic, not because of job performance, but solely because they are gay. Apparently, the military is so homophobic that they would rather risk having Americans die in another terrorist attack or on the battlefield rather than have skilled, gay translators decoding enemy plans.

I just read that 10 students at the University of Arizona were actually paid $120 to have sex. Hey, K-State, let's get on that one.

You know what, Melissa? I'm going to call into the Fourum as much as I want, and I'm going to leave as many messages as I want, and you can't do anything about it. So maybe you need to take a few lessons in, you know... yeah.

The fact that I can get a 30 on my ACT, and a minority can get a 20 on his ACT and still get a scholarship over me because the state requires that there must be a certain number of minorities to receive financial aid, doesn't make me feel sorry for them.

TO THE EDITOR

University ban on firearms won't prevent school shootings; education only useful long-term solution to campus violence

Editor,

K-State does not need a policy that bans openly carrying firearms on campus, because such a prohibition will not prevent school shootings.

A person who is intent on committing a violent crime will not pay attention to any regulations, whether they are federal, state or campus policies.

For instance, federal law on elementary and high-school grounds prohibits firearms. Yet, this did not prevent the Columbine massacre, or the Jonesboro, Ark., shooting.

Prohibiting the open carry of firearms is only a short-term solution.

The Student Governing Association could better allocate its time to educational programs that teach people how to handle their problems without violence, and also teach people how to minimize their risk of violent assault.

Education might be the most challenging response to school violence, but in the end, it is the only long-term solution.

Lunchtime Lounge becoming new Union tradition

Students make candy turkeys during lunch

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thanksgiving may not be for another week, but Wednesday was turkey day in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

Students and other passers-by were invited to make candy turkeys as part of the Lunchtime Lounge, an event held every other Wednesday in the Union Courtyard and sponsored by Union Program Council and Burger King in the Union.

The turkeys were made with sandwich cookies, chocolate-covered cherries, candy corn and burnt peanuts, and were held together by chocolate frosting.

"We were going to lunch," said Nick Robinson, who was participating in the event. "We saw what they were doing and said, 'We want to play that game, too.'"

Robinson, freshman in theater, said he has been to previous Lunchtime Lounges to watch friends who participated in the previews of "Sweet Charity" and Winterdance, but this was the first time he attended without planning ahead.

"Our main crowd is usually people just passing through," said Ashley Friesen, UPC special events committee chair and junior in English. "We don't do a lot of advertising except in the Union."

Other events for the Lunchtime Lounges have been previews for theater and dance shows, a pianist, a game show, a Sept. 11 tribute and a performance by Andy Woody, guitar player and sophomore in animal science and industry.

Friesen said Woody's performance at the Lunchtime Lounge was a good opportunity to accomplish UPC's goal in having the event, which is to support K-State's most talented students.

"He was very excited about getting some good exposure," Friesen said. "He was able to sell some of his CDs that he had made."

Possibilities for future Lunchtime Lounge activities include having a chef come to show students how to prepare easy, healthy meals on limited funds, and having a disc jockey show his skills on a turntable.

"Lunchtime Lounge actually started last year, and it's becoming sort of a tradition," Friesen said.

CUTS | Budget crisis affects students in honors program

tion," he said. "When we first heard about it, it was all rumors and no confirmation. It was poor handling of the situation."

Ebadi sent out an e-mail to honors students Nov. 12, informing them of the changes.

The following week, he went around to all of the seminar classes, to discuss the decision.

In addition, the College of Business sent out informational letters to the incoming and potential students who were applying for the program.

Current honors students in the college will still be able to graduate with honors, but a large portion of them are still concerned.

"From my point of view, cutting the honors program is a negative reflection on the entire college," Monroe said. "That's one of the big reasons I decided to come here. All of the students now are going to be alumni someday, and I'm not going to be willing to give as much money to this program."

However, Matt Dill, senior in finance and a business ambassador, disagrees.

"I think the College of Business is still very strong," he said. "There's still enough strength in the college that we can interest the incoming students."

Although the cuts have been in the negative light, Ebadi said there are a variety of benefits.

"The students who are not in the honors program have had difficulty getting into classes and been on waiting lists since there are a limited number in each class and some sections are for honors only," he said.

"This will hopefully open opportunities and will increase the number of students in the section and accommodate those who were otherwise put on waiting lists."

As for the future, Ebadi said he hopes to reconstruct the honors program as soon as the budget improves.

"I hope the students will understand that in the long run we will bring this back," he said.

"The faculty and I are interested in having the program once the budget situation gets better.

"Incoming students still can be in the honors program through the university, and hopefully they can apply for it when we reinstate it."

Win against USC, fan attendance gives women home advantage for WNIT final

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State had to be concerned going into Wednesday night's game with Southern California that the Women of Troy would hang early and make a game of it.

Instead, it was the Cats streaking to an 18-8 early lead, and never looking back.

K-State (3-0) breezed into the finals of the Women's National Invitational Tournament with a 73-61 win over USC Wednesday night in Bramlage Coliseum.

With the win, K-State will be host for the final round of the WNIT at 4 p.m. Sunday.

Sophomore guard Laurie Koehn almost single-handedly got the Wildcats off to that quick start, scoring 10 of her 17 during that stretch.

Koehn said establishing an early tone was critical in order to have success against USC.

"We really wanted to come out intense, come out and play our game, get to spots on the floor offensively, execute our offense and play good containment defense," she said. "That's what we did in the first few minutes of the game, and I think that's why we were able to jump out like that."

But, up by as many as 13 early in the first half, K-State's offense wasn't clicking on all cylinders, Coach Deb Patterson said.

The Cats committed 13 turnovers in the first half and 29 for the game, one focal point for Patterson when assessing the team's play.

But that's where the home atmosphere of Bramlage Coliseum earned its keep, she said.

"It was a night where we were sporadic on the offensive end, and there were times when we just needed a good boost, and I thought we had an environment that provided that," Patterson said.

Wecker sizzles in 2nd half, leads team with 24 points

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Women of Troy had some size.

USC came into Bramlage Coliseum Wednesday night in semifinal action of the WNIT and brought 6-foot-5 Kimberly Gipson, 6-foot-4 Portia Mitchell, 6-foot-2 Ebony Hoffman and 6-foot-1 Rachel Woodard with them.

K-State was able to counter early with size of its own, however, and rode 6-foot-4 Nicole Ohlde's 14 first-half points to a 37-25 halftime lead.

But in the second half, K-State countered USC's size with 5-foot-11 sophomore Kendra Wecker.

Wecker scored 18 second-half points to keep USC from moving into striking distance and finished with 24 points to lead all scorers.

Wecker said she was able to refocus at halftime and get help from her teammates in the second half.

"I wasn't playing aggressive in the first half," Wecker said. "I was playing kind of lackadaisical and laid back. I refocused at halftime in the locker room. You have to be focused and mentally ready when you step on the court, and I don't think I was in the first half.

"I got some easy looks off some back doors and good passes from our posts and Megan (Mahoney). It was people seeing the back cuts."

Wecker picked up a double-double by pulling down 12 rebounds and was able to get 3 assists as well.

Coach Deb Patterson said Wecker was the Wildcats' key player.

"Kendra, to me, was the difference-maker in this basketball

Women's volleyball wins in 3; 25-year-old win streak tied

By Michael Watson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 25-year-old record has been tied.

The No. 19 Wildcats swept Oklahoma (30-20, 30-25, 30-23) Wednesday at Ahearn Field House to tie the 1977 squad's longest winning streak in school history at 13 matches.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she would have been disappointed not to sweep Oklahoma (5-21, 3-15 Big 12), but it still wasn't a clean win.

"I'm happy with the 'W,' but I'm not exceptionally pleased with our play," Fritz said. "There were times we were in it, and there were times we made mental mistakes. So there are some things we will need to work on."

But it still wasn't any average win.

The win:

- tied the 1977 squad for the longest winning streak in school history at 13 matches.
- was the Cats' 16th sweep in 19 wins.
- clinched at least a share of second place in the Big 12, which ties the 2000 squad for the highest finish in school history.
- tied the the school record for conference wins at 15, set in 2001.

And that wasn't it.

K-State's win in the third set extended the Cats' game-winning streak to 16.

There were also a couple of outstanding individual performances.

Junior libero Laura Downey-Wallace broke K-State's single-season mark for digs with her 456th in game two. The record previously was set by Kim Zschau in 1998.

In game three, she pushed the envelope and now has 466 on the season, which also ranks as the second-most in a single season since the inception of the Big 12.

Downey-Wallace said the new libero position this season helped her get more digs.

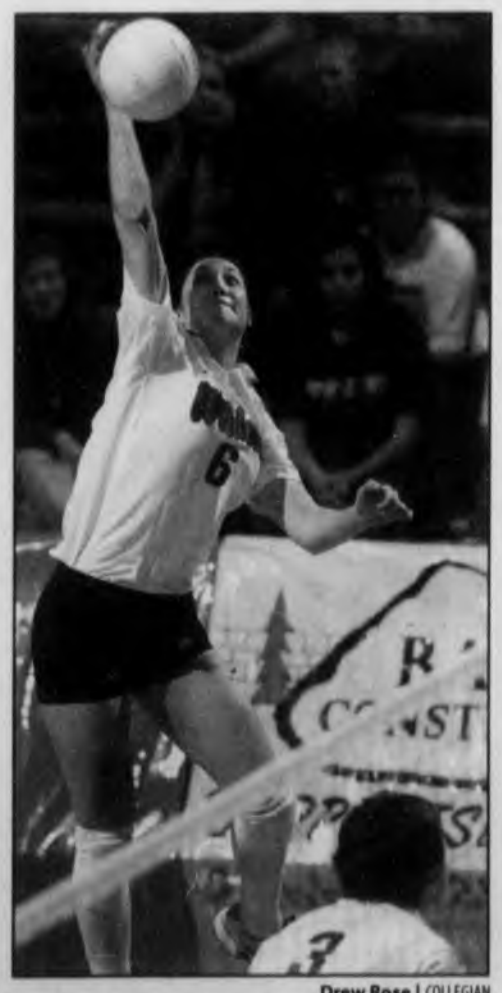
"Personally, I expected to break the record," she said. "As a libero, I should be expected to be that good. The libero position allows me to be on the back row more, and that gives me the opportunity to get more digs."

Sophomore setter Gabby Guerre also had an outstanding performance.

She registered the first triple-double (11 kills, 44 assists and 11 digs) by a Wildcat since Val Wieck did it against Colorado on Nov. 27, 1998. It was also the first triple-double by a setter since Devon Ryning against Colorado on Sept. 30, 1995.

Game 1: K-State 30, Oklahoma 20
Game 2: K-State 30, Oklahoma 25
Game 3: K-State 30, Oklahoma 23

"But it had to happen in the worst game of my life," she said. "How ironic is that? It really wasn't my best performance. I would have liked it to be more glorious. But a win is a win."



Regardless of how she thought she played, Guerre said it was still good to get her first triple-double, and she now can set her sights a little higher.

Fritz said that's what the game is about – working out the problems and getting better.

She said she hopes the Wildcats' improvement to date will be enough to beat a tough Texas team on Saturday in Austin.

In the teams' first meeting on Sept. 28 at Ahearn Field House, the Longhorns swept the Cats. Fritz said it would be nice to get a little revenge

CAT CALENDAR

Have a great Thanksgiving break, but don't forget about the Wildcat events next week. Here's a brief look.

Saturday
- Football — K-State concludes the regular season when it faces Missouri in Columbia. Kickoff is set for 2:30 p.m. The game will be on ABC.
- Men's Basketball — Wildcats will soak up the sun at the Paradise Jam Tournament in the Virgin Islands. K-State's first game is against BYU at 4:15 p.m.
- Volleyball — Texas handled the Cats last time the two teams met, so now K-State looks to get a little revenge. First serve is scheduled for 7 p.m. in Austin.

Sunday
- Women's basketball — Final round of the Women's National Invitational Tournament. K-State will be host to Penn State with tipoff set for 4 p.m.
- Men's basketball — Day 2 of the Paradise Jam Tournament, where the Cats will play Toledo. Tipoff set for 4:15 p.m.

Monday
- Men's basketball — Final day of the Paradise Jam Tournament. K-State will either play in the championship game or a consolation contest based on what it does in the first two days.

Wednesday
- Volleyball — The Wildcats renew their rivalry with Kansas, as the Jayhawks come to Ahearn Field House to do battle with K-State. First serve is set for 7 p.m.

NCAA | Brown to take some 'time off'

University of Colorado junior tailback Chris Brown is taking some time off from practice while he recovers from a bruised sternum.

"Man, I'm sore," Brown said Tuesday. "But all I need is a little more time off and I'll be fine."

Coach Gary Barnett said Brown probably would not return to practice until next week.

But since the Buffs don't play until Nov. 29 at Nebraska, Brown should have plenty of time to recuperate.

Brown suffered a bruised sternum in the third quarter of the Buffaloes' victory against Iowa State on Saturday and spent the night in a hospital for observation.

MLB | Walker, Williams deal almost a go

The Colorado Rockies put together their second big trade within a week, agreeing Tuesday to a tentative deal that would send Larry Walker to Arizona in a five-player trade in which the Diamondbacks would give up Matt Williams.

Arizona also would send first baseman Erubiel Durazo, outfielder David Dellucci and reliever Bret Prinz to Colorado for the 1997 National League MVP.

Walker and Williams, both five-time All-Stars, must waive no-trade clauses for the deal to be completed.

NFL | Spurrier doing some QB shuffling

Danny Wuerffel will start Sunday when the Washington Redskins are host to the St. Louis Rams.

Coach Steve Spurrier said Wednesday that Wuerffel will start and get a chance to play the entire game.

On Monday, the coach said he was considering playing Wuerffel and rookie Patrick Ramsey for a half each.

It is the fourth starting quarterback change made by Spurrier this season.

Artist uses reflection on childhood homes for artistic inspiration

Photos by Nicole Donnert | COLLEGIAN

Jared Hager, sophomore in business, looks at a piece of work by Chad Fonfara being displayed in the William T. Kemper Art Gallery in the K-State Student Union.

The piece is a wall and floor of a room with a floor vent that emits heat. Fonfara, graduate student in art, said the three pieces in the gallery are recreations from houses of his childhood memories.

Fonfara said he used the knowledge he gained from his father, who is a carpenter, to build the three pieces in the gallery.

"It was my intention to make them look like they were cut out of a house," he said. "But you need the internal structures, so you have to build them from the inside out."

A sculptural piece that simulates looking through a rainy window, by Chad Fonfara, is on display at the gallery in the Union as part of his Master of Fine Arts show.

The water sprays between two separate panels of glass and is cycled back through with a pump. Fonfara said he made several prototypes before creating this finished piece.

An untitled sketch by Chad Fonfara also is on display at art gallery in the Union.

The sketches in the gallery provide insight as to how the sculptural pieces were constructed. Fonfara said hiding the process that makes the pieces work is important, but he doesn't mind sharing the knowledge of how they were made.

Fonfara said he tries to get people to notice everyday objects in new ways.

"The idea is to remove the object from the context of a house, and once again you are made aware of it," he said.

Poetry reading to put spotlight on foreign works

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Studying poetry in English is nothing new for college students, but Friday people will have the chance to hear poetry in other languages.

"We're trying to bring people together through poetry," said Lafayette Childs II, senior in humanities and social sciences. "I'm curious to find out if people who speak other languages write poetry the same way I do."

Childs is the president of Underground Poets, an organization that originated with his other group, Whys Ideas, which puts on the radio show "Street Whys" at 8 p.m. every Saturday. Childs said Hindi, Chinese and Paraguayan are just some of the languages that the poets will speak. The experience also will be educational, Childs said.

"It shows how the form and language of poetry crosses all barriers, and people can enjoy it even if they don't know the words," he said.

This will be the third reading sponsored by Underground Poets.

The group had its first reading in April, and the last one attracted 50 to 75 people, though more are expected for Friday's reading, Childs said.

Tara Hull, graduate student in public administration, helped organize the event by finding poets. Hull said the event will be a cultural experience.

"Poetry is interesting because it expresses a common emotion through words, whether it's in English or not," she said. "A lot of people relate to the feelings that poetry is good for expressing."

Both Childs and Hull have read their poetry at previous events, and though Childs said he will read at least one poem, Hull isn't sure she will read Friday. The microphone will be open to anyone who wants to read at the end of each of the two hours, Hull said.

Union Station provides a positive atmosphere for the readings, where people can sit, eat and enjoy the atmosphere while watching the readings, Childs said.

For those who don't know much about poetry, Hull said the experience will open them up to the art.

"I think it's awesome to see the way people from different cultures express themselves through words," she said.

"A lot of people see cultures as actions and ways of living, and they don't think of the language and form of expression. These are individuals from parts of different cultures, and this is a way to learn something about them."

Poetic ideas: Different words of the same language

When and where: 8 p.m. Friday in Union Station of the K-State Student Union
Admission: Free
What it is: A poetry reading featuring poets working in several languages, international food and an open mic for poets.

Animation awards to be moved from traditional November date to February

The animation industry's annual awards will be moved from their traditional November date to Feb. 1, which will put the ceremony closer to the Academy Awards.

The Annie Awards, founded 30 years ago, honor outstanding animation in television and film. Organizers hope the move will make them a more closely watched prelude to the Oscars.

Animation Guild President Kevin Koch sees the change as positive.

"It does position the Annies to become an award that potentially leads into the Oscars," he said.

Previously, Annies recognized animated work released between Aug. 1 of the previous year and July 31 of the year of the ceremony. Under the new schedule, Annie consideration will be given to work released in the calendar year before the ceremony — which resembles the Jan. 1-Dec. 31 eligibility system for the Oscars.

Sale of John Lennon items disappoints

An auction of John Lennon memorabilia raised far less money than expected, with high-priced items such as his Phantom Vox organ guitar failing to sell.

Although 70 percent of the items were sold, Monday night's auction raised a total of $111,000 — much lower than the estimated $1.1 million — because the most expensive items didn't sell, Cooper Owen auctioneers said.

The prototype organ guitar, given to Lennon at a 1964 Beatles show, had been expected to fetch up to $222,000. The top bid of $143,000 failed to reach the reserve price.

Another no-go was Lennon's largest known visual arts creation, a mosaic called "All Seeing Eye" that had been installed in a swimming pool at a mansion he shared with his first wife, Cynthia.

Bids didn't even reach half the pre-auction estimate of $318,000.

LISTENING BOOTH

The Collegian wants to know what music you are listening to. If you are passionate about music and want to express you're opinion, e-mail A&E Editor JJ Duncan at jduncan_80@hotmail.com. This week we asked Marc Mondi, junior in secondary education, what he's playing.

What five albums are you listening to and why?

1. Martin Sexton: various songs

He's a phenomenal singer/songwriter. Sexton's baritone-to-soprano voice is expressed from the heart in songs like "Glory Bound," "Freedom of the Road," "Black Sheep" and "The Beast in Me." I was fortunate enough to see him in Lawrence a couple of months ago, and it was the best show I've ever seen.

2. Grateful Dead: "Arista Years, Disc 2"

This is arguably the best American band ever. Arista Years shows the quality of later Dead music in its 1980s and '90s releases. This album is full of classics like "Touch of Grey" and "Eyes of the World," as well as lesser known tracks like "Throwing Stones" and "Foolish Heart."

3. String Cheese Incident: "Round the Wheel"

A quintet out of Colorado, their style mixes bluegrass, improvisation, salsa, rock ... you name it. Tracks like "Good Times Around the Bend," "Restless Wind," and "Round the Wheel" make this album great listening.

4. John Gorka: "The Company You Keep"

John Gorka is another singer/songwriter, and he performed at the Manhattan Arts Center this past year. Songs like "What Was That?" and "Morningside" as well as the comical "People My Age" make this album his best release yet. Sometimes called the "New Bob Dylan" for the power of his lyrics, his music is soothing to the soul.

5. Crosby, Stills, Nash: "Box Set, Disc 1"

You gotta love these guys. Their box set is stacked. Disc 1 features "Suite: Judy Blue Eyes," "Teach Your Children," "Wooden Ships," and my personal favorite, "4 + 20."

on Texas' home court.

"That match was the worst performance I've seen of this team," she said.

"But Saturday's win against Texas A&M was one of the best performances I've seen. We've had a lot of ups and downs, and it will be great to put it on the line against (Texas)."

The Cats will face the Longhorns at 7 p.m. Saturday in Austin, Texas, battling for revenge and a spot at the top of the record books for the longest winning streak in school history.

"If we prepare mentally and emotionally, I think we are going to tear them up," she said.

WIN | Women counter USC size, overcome high turnover numbers to advance to Sunday's WNIT final

Going into the half, K-State was in command, leading by 12 points.

But USC didn't go away that easy.

After the Cats strengthened their lead to 18, the Women of Troy pulled to within 10.

Center Nicole Ohlde said that's when the team's experience came into play.

She said that last year, the team may have become passive at that point. But instead, they stayed in control, she said, and focused on getting good looks at the basket.

"Something that is different is when things aren't going our way, we're just doing the things to get the win," Ohlde said.

And that's what K-State did. After a timeout, the Cats pushed their lead to 20, led by sophomore Kendra Wecker, who had 18 second half points – on her way to a game-high 24.

Wecker, along with Ohlde and sophomore Brie Madden, also hit the double-digit mark in rebounds. Madden led the way with a career-high 14, Wecker grabbed 12 and Ohlde chipped in 10.

But possibly the biggest "stat" on the evening was achieved by Patterson herself.

With the win, Patterson reached the 100-victory plateau, something she said was only an afterthought after the game.

"Really what it means most to me is we have an opportunity to play on Sunday," Patterson said. "I am just so appreciative of the hard work our players and coaching staff have done to achieve this milestone.

"But it almost seems like a stat compared to the excitement and pride I feel in our basketball team for being in the position we find ourselves in."

And that position is the final round of the WNIT. The Cats will face No. 15 Penn State on Sunday at home, something given to K-State by way of its fans, Patterson said.

"We're just thrilled to be playing on Sunday," she said. "We are very appreciative of our fans that came to this game tonight and gave us the opportunity to have this environment."

game," Patterson said.

"I thought, while she did start a little slow and miss some baskets she might normally make early in the basketball game, she stayed in it mentally.

"In the second 20 minutes, I never felt comfortable without the thought of her being on the floor. I felt like she provided the energy. Every time we needed a big basket, Kendra was there to step up. She was willing to handle the ball and she brought great maturity."

Wecker got help from Ohlde, who put up 19 points against the Women of Troy, and Laurie Koehn, who pitched in 17.

USC coach Chris Gobrecht said Wecker, coupled with a significant distraction in the person of Nicole Ohlde, was too much to handle.

"I thought Wecker was the difference in the second half, and she hurt us," Gobrecht said. "And she gets those opportunities because Ohlde commands so much attention.

"You're so busy checking for backside help and checking for this and that, that she takes advantage of it. She tends to get the ball and have an opportunity because her defender was busy someplace else."

K-State's Kendra Wecker passes the ball around USC's Ebony Hoffman during the first half of a WNIT semifinal Wednesday night. Wecker had 24 points and 12 rebounds as the Cats beat the Trojans 73-61.

Nicole Donnert
COLLEGIAN

Patterson said leadership was the most beneficial aspect of Wecker's game on Wednesday night.

"I thought her game was tremendous," Patterson said. "Not just by virtue of numbers, but because she brought a leadership to the floor, and a big-time, step-up mentality that we needed to be successful.

"We were playing very sporadically and we needed somebody to be the rock. And Kendra Wecker was the rock across the board."

Can the 'Canes repeat? Can the Sooners make it two out of the last three? Who will win the Heisman? How many polygons does a Butkus Award winner get? Where is Berkeley? The answers to these (No. No. Look to Texas. Thousands. Take I-80 west and follow the signs.) and other pressing questions can be found in this year's College Football Top 25 poll:

1 CAL

So they went 1-10 last year. Big deal. Serious time spent in the Blue Chip Recruiting Mode has made this team into a rough bunch on the gridiron. That combined with a new Power I formation adds an unexpected threat for this turn-around team.

2 MIAMI (FL)

How good is this team? Eight or nine of their starters should be in NFL GameDay™ next year. The 'Canes may have the toughest schedule in football, with games against the Florida Gators, Tennessee Volunteers, Virginia Tech Hokies and Florida State Seminoles. About the only quality teams not on their schedule are in the NFL.

3 OKLAHOMA

New Hot Routes can put the 2000 NCAA champs right back at the top. Which means almost as much to this Oklahoma Sooner team as beating their heated rival, the Nebraska Cornhuskers. But, kicking game may be a chink in the armor.

4 COLORADO

Will the Buffs defend their Big 12 crown using the wishbone? The flexbone? The full house? Only the coach controlling the playbook knows for sure.

5 TENNESSEE

New high-low tackling may allow the Volunteers to field their toughest defense in years. And defense wins championships. The question is: will their offense underachieve? A 0-0 game doesn't go down in the win column.

6 TEXAS

Can their quarterback capture the Heisman against what may be the toughest conference in Division I football? Can the defense come up Texas big? Not even our highly evolved artificial intelligence can answer that one.

7 FLORIDA STATE

Same coach. Same expectations. Same potential: Nothing but a national championship will do.

8 FLORIDA

New coach. Same expectations. Same potential: Nothing but a national championship will do.

9 UCLA

Look for the Bruins to utilize a sensational receiving core and Hot Routes to vie for a national championship. Then expect the Bruins to vie for a championship all over again in the NCAA® Final Four® 2003 edition.

10 UNIV. OF TOLEDO

A great run in Career Mode gets these overachievers a major BCS Bowl bid and a Top 10 finish. And their coach the chance to take over a major college powerhouse. Enjoy that animated contract, coach.

11 WASHINGTON STATE

A strong passing offense makes them a team to beat. Explosive gameplay makes this perennial Pac 10 little brother into a legitimate head-turner. WAZZU is ready to play with the big boys.

12 ALABAMA

The Crimson Tide not only has the polygons but also the offensive line to outmuscle anyone in college football. Not to mention an impressive amount of depth in the backfield. If that's not enough, new high-low tackling gives their defense the bite it needed. Roll, Tide, roll.

13 OREGON

Blue Chip recruiting made the loss of their 2001 Heisman candidate easier to stomach. A new wishbone offense could help the 2002 Ducks rain on just about anyone's parade.

14 OHIO STATE

More control over the running game puts them at the top of their conference. But they must beat archrival Michigan for the Big 10 Conference title first, which won't be easy, but definitely a possibility for the Ohio State Buckeyes.

15 WASHINGTON

Unproven defense must come through for a Rose Bowl berth. Total Control Passing gives this Husky team a very potent attack.

16 LSU

Tigers are looking to claw their way to another SEC title. Louisiana State University's pass- and run-blocking is top-notch this year.

17 NEBRASKA

Just avenge the CU mauling and beat the Oklahoma Sooners for all to be right in Huskerland.

18 USC

Must turn off "Injuries" for the thin Trojans to succeed. Controlling the playbook is crucial with USC's quarterback.

19 BOISE STATE

Say hello to the first "Houston Bowl" winner. Increased frame rates show that this year these boys are on their way up.

20 AUBURN

Old coach sacked in Career Mode. Team should improve.

21 SOUTH CAROLINA

Lots of excitement building for 'Cocks this year. Volatile offense could be a threat with the addition of a full-house formation.

22 MARSHALL

A weak schedule equals strong wins. Will Keith Jackson, in GameBreaker's booth, call them "rumbling" or "bumbling"?

23 TEXAS A&M

Several players converted to defense. Too bad they're in the country's toughest conference.

24 LOUISVILLE

Gamebreakers on both sides of the ball. Look for the Louisville Cardinals to go to their Wing T offense for big points.

25 PENN STATE

Same classic CGI uniforms. Same classic spot in polls.

Transcript proposal tabled

Officials say more research necessary

Nancy Foster
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More must be done, officials say, before transcripts can go online.

Beth Montelone, chair of the Faculty Senate technology committee, said the committee met this week to discuss the prospect of online transcripts. The students who proposed the idea and a representative from the registrar's office were consulted in the meeting.

She said concern was expressed regarding privacy laws, security, the payment process and technological capabilities. And, she said unofficial online transcripts are not an option.

"The registrar's office is opposed to unofficial transcripts because of the security, because it would be easy to alter an unofficial transcript," she said.

Students John O'Hara, Student Senate chair, and Seth Bridge, chairman of the Academic Affairs and the University Relations Committee, originally focused on posting unofficial transcripts online. O'Hara previously said employers often only require unofficial transcripts.

The pair also hoped to eliminate the current $5 fee for a transcript copy.

Montelone said, if official transcripts do go online, a fee would still apply.

However, accessing transcripts would be more convenient, she said.

"You would probably be able to print it off at home and play with a credit card, as

Senate approves funds

New recycling equipment funding approved 59-0

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate passed a resolution Thursday night for the disbursement of the City and University Project Fund for 2004.

The resolution includes funds for the completion of ongoing campus projects until their completion.

The predicted total cost is $307,700 for all university and campus projects for 2004.

From the total funds, $135,000 was recommended toward the university recycling program. This money will be used to purchase a new recycling vehicle with remaining funds used to purchase new storage bins compatible with the truck.

All remaining money will be distributed toward a variety of campus and university projects, including the replacement of aging and diseased trees on campus and the improvement of sidewalks, lighting and campus safety.

Student Senate also passed the addition of the Fine Arts Council Student Organization funding regulations and the continuance of the fine arts privilege fee with a unanimous 59-0 vote.

Graves to slash again

Projected $310 million deficit forces more budget cuts

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Gov. Bill Graves will announce "substantial" cuts next week in the 2003 budget to deal with a projected $310 million deficit in the $4.4 billion state budget.

But Graves wouldn't say Wednesday if the cuts would include education, which makes up 52 percent of the current budget.

"I'm still weighing whether to spread the pain around completely or try to isolate it," Graves told reporters.

The governor cut the budget in August by $41 million as state revenues fell below expectations. Those cuts, along with $252 million in new revenues approved by the 2002 Legislature, were intended to keep the state from finishing in the red on June 30, 2003, the end of the fiscal year.

That shortfall was revised Nov. 5 by state officials and economists and now is at least $310 million.

Budget officials have said that the gap swells to more than $1 billion when including the fiscal 2004 budget estimates.

Now, faced with an even deeper hole, Graves has met with his staff and Gov.-elect Kathleen Sebelius to make additional cuts before leaving office on Jan. 13.

As part of her campaign, Sebelius promised to hold public schools harmless from cuts. But Graves said that could be hard to do.

HAPPY & HEALTHY

Optimism, goals key to individual happiness

By Katie Lane
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Make goals. Make friends. Be happy.

People's happiness is linked to the goals and meaningful relationships they have, Scott Hemenover, assistant professor of psychology, said.

"Challenging goals and positive relationships with others tend to make people happy," he said. "Things like money and health, that you would think would make people happy, don't. Establishing the goals for themselves and working toward them can make a person happy."

Although there are many factors that can cause a person to be happy, Hemenover said personality plays a part in predicting a person's happiness. He said that having an optimistic personality can help make a person satisfied.

"People who are optimistic try to see the bright side of the situation and tend to be happier. To some extent you can learn to see the sunny side of things," he said.

For Mark Bauer, freshman in agronomy, spending time with family and friends is a good way to lift his spirits.

"Just being around my friends makes me happy, as long as everyone's having a good time." Bauer said.

Having a purpose in life and knowing the direction you plan on going makes life less stressful, Diana Teeter, junior in finance, said.

NATO expands behind Soviet border to help disarm Iraq

By Ron Fournier
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRAGUE, Czech Republic – Heeding President Bush's call, NATO leaders pledged Thursday to help the United Nations "fully and immediately" disarm Iraq. They also redrew the political map of Europe, reaching behind the former Iron Curtain for seven new members.

Barely a decade after winning independence from Moscow, the Baltic nations of Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania joined former communist states Bulgaria, Romania, Slovakia and Slovenia as the next wave of NATO states.

"Events have moved faster than we could possibly have imagined," said Estonian Prime Minister Siim Kallas.

On the summit sidelines, Bush and his foreign policy team lobbied feverishly for an anti-Iraq NATO statement while urging individual allies to ante up troops and other military assistance for possible war against Saddam Hussein.

The results were mixed. Bush won partial victory on the Iraq statement while the war solicitations received lukewarm responses from allies inside and outside NATO.

In a four-paragraph statement, the 19-member alliance unanimously echoed the U.N. call for "severe consequences" should Iraq insist on retaining weapons of mass destruction.

The phrase is Bush's license to wage war as a last resort, the White House said.

But the statement did not threaten collective military action by the 19-nation alliance nor did it prevent some allies – particularly Germany and France – from distancing

Derby food earns high ratings

By Emily Meissen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cooking for one is hard enough, but imagine preparing a meal for more than 3,600.

That is what the employees at the Derby Dining Center do every day. And they do it well, according to the National Association of College and University Food Services.

K-State ranked second in the nation for its standard menu, according to the association's Web site. K-State also placed third for special events such as Thursday's Thanksgiving dinner.

"From a food quality standpoint, we are in the top-5 percent of college services," Mark Edwards, unit director of Derby said. "The food is made from scratch. It is made with wholesome, quality ingredients."

Natalie Dokos, sophomore in family and consumer sciences secondary education, said she can tell the food is made from scratch, not frozen. Dokos said eating healthy is very important to her, and the fact the food is prepared fresh, along with the selection available, makes it easier to be healthy.

"They really try to give you a variety of food groups," she said. "It is up to you if you choose the healthy things. If you want to eat nutritionally, they give you the option."

Meghan Mathews, freshman in apparel design, said she doesn't eat at Derby often, mainly because of health reasons.

"I am really picky," Mathews said. "I'll eat breakfast or I'll get a salad. I am very health-conscious, and sometimes it is not the healthiest."

On the other hand, Steve Gredell, sophomore in chemical engineering, said the variety is one of the best parts about eating at Derby.

"They always have a couple of main courses," Gredell said. "If you don't like that, there are always tacos, hamburgers, or sandwiches or whatever. It's not the best, but it's not the worst. I like it.

"People need to quit bashing it. It is good stuff."

A closer look

Many of the issues at K-State also affect some of America's other universities. Campus Connection offers a side-by-side view at how some of them are addressed here and at other schools.

UT cafeterias rank poorly

By Yvonne Lim
DAILY TEXAN

AUSTIN, Texas - Everyone knows Jester food has a reputation – cheap, convenient and, well, cheap.

Recently, the Wall Street Journal gave Jester's second-floor cafeteria the lowest rating in a survey of 20 college dining halls across the nation.

While the Journal's report slammed the cafeteria as "the worst by far," University of Texas-Austin students offered faint praise for Jester cuisine and many favor the low cost.

The most common complaint was the lack of variety.

Leonardo Pina, graduate student in economics, who was having a beef and vegetable dish atop glistening noodles, was not excited about his lunch.

"You get tired of it – the same stuff every day," Pina said. "You get used to it."

Though the menu operates on a four-week cycle, some students wished more healthy options would be included in the rotation.

Santi Yarlagadda, freshman in biology, hovered for several minutes in front of the pizza stand before resigning herself to order.

She said the lack of healthy options made it a tough decision.

'Price is Right' spin-off teaches local children about agriculture

By Shannon Hartenstein
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Grain was the name of the game Thursday at Manhattan Catholic Elementary.

Elementary students cheered as their peers raced against the clock to match crop names with bushel baskets full of grain. The race kicked off "Connecting Kansas Kids, Crops and Critters," a hands-on assembly for third, fourth and fifth graders.

The hour-long assembly combined agriculture with science, math, problem solving and careers in a game-show setting similar to "The Price is Right."

Fourth grader Kristen Everett was chosen to participate in the assembly.

"It was fun because I got to be up there in front of everybody," she said. "It was kind of like acting. It was fun."

Students used their science skills to guess the volume and mass of corn, packing peanuts and sunflower seeds, and to measure the weight of dry wheat and tempered wheat to show how moisture content affects the prices farmers receive for their crops. Students used math skills to guess current crop prices and to compare them to last spring's prices.

The interactive assembly helped students gain enthusiasm for learning about agriculture, principal Tom Schmitz said.

"Any time you involve children that much, they get a lot more excited," he said.

Excitement, combined with the hands-on, competitive setting, helps children understand agricultural concepts more easily, said Lynne Ross, presenter and retired K-State speech professor.

"What makes it work is that the kids get to do it," Ross said. "It's totally by chance whose names get drawn. And I think that keeps their attention.

"My personal reward in doing it this way is that oftentimes children get called that a teacher would never recommend, and it really does a lot for their self-image to get to be in front of their peers. I think they learn more because they're having fun while they do it."

Ross teamed up with the Kansas Foundation for Agriculture two years ago to create the program. Since then, the assembly has reached more than 5,000 children and 300 teachers across Kansas, she said.

The idea for the assembly came from her father, Ross said.

"He could make a game out of anything," she said. "I didn't know that when I was growing up, I was learning to do that, too. I love to have it be a competition or a game of some kind. It's much more motivating to learn the material than if you're trying to learn it, memorize it or if someone is just lecturing to you."

Schmitz said it is important for students to learn about agriculture, even though less than 5 percent of the parents farm for a living. But many of the students have parents and grandparents to provide an agricultural background, he said.

Brandon Challacombe, fifth grader at Manhattan Catholic School, labels Kansas grain products in order of their national rankings as his classmates cheer him on.

Matt Elliott
COLLEGIAN

"It's hard to live in Kansas and not be around agriculture," Schmitz said. "It's our No. 1 industry in the state. The children gained an overall concept about how much it takes in agriculture and that there are a lot of variables involved."

When each assembly is completed, teachers receive follow-up materials and other resources to help incorporate agricultural awareness in their classrooms. Schmitz said the materials will be useful in getting kids excited to learn more.

Fourth-grade teacher Sandy Nilges said the assembly was important in helping students learn about the science involved in agriculture. Ross explained agricultural science in terms the students could understand, Nilges said.

"They learned more about the responsibilities of a Kansas farmer," she said. "They also learned about Kansas' major crops and some of which surprised them."

It is important for children to understand how agriculture influences their daily lives, said Sarah Lind, office assistant for the Kansas Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom.

"We want students to know where their food comes from," she said. "You would be amazed at how many children, and adults, for that matter, don't know where their food comes from."

Ross agreed.

"Even their grandparents aren't on the farm anymore," she said. "They're more and more removed from what actually happens on a typical farm and ranch, and they have no understanding of where their food is coming from – they think it comes from the grocery store."

Although many children lack agricultural backgrounds, they are usually enthusiastic to learn more, Ross said.

"They love it," she said. "I've even had fan letters. I'll never forget this one fan letter, this little boy wrote me and said 'When I grow up I want to be a farmer.' One of the by-products I hope that happens is that they respect agriculture.

"They'll realize that it isn't something that just anybody can do. You have to be smart, you have to be good at school subjects like math and science in order to be successful."

U.S. detains al-Qaeda operative

By John J. Lumpkin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

U.S. counterterrorism officials are interrogating a newly captured top operative of Osama bin Laden in hopes of gaining information about terrorist attacks.

Abd al-Rahim al-Nashiri, al-Qaeda's chief of operations for the Persian Gulf and a suspected mastermind of the USS Cole bombing in October 2000, was taken in an undisclosed foreign country during the last several weeks. The Saudi is now in U.S. custody, government officials said. Officials declined to comment on the circumstances of his capture.

He is probably bin Laden's highest-ranking lieutenant seized since the March capture of Abu Zubaydah, al-Qaeda's chief coordinator of terrorist cells. However, the capture of al-Nashiri did little to quell fears of a resurgent al-Qaeda.

Since last week, U.S. officials had said a senior al-Qaeda leader had been caught, but they had declined to identify him. On Sunday, Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge said the prisoner was providing information to his interrogators.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Positive outlook can help lead to finals success

It's that time of year when students are stressing over term papers and exams. Stress leads to the never-ending sinus infection, which then leads to depression.

But area health officials are urging students to take action before it comes to that.

Goal-setting and being around those who can offer a quick fix of happiness are key for avoiding the end-of-semester blues that is always common among college students.

The holiday season is approaching and not a moment too soon. This is a time to take advantage of the opportunities to be around friends and family.

Campus volunteers even suggest participating in community service activities. Offering time or assistance to a philanthropic cause can be personally rewarding and can help increase a person's morale.

Surrounding yourself with friends and family, setting goals, and trying to think optimistically are crucial to maintaining a strong mind and are essential in staying healthy.

Pessimism is not the road to take for the last three weeks of school. It's time to set priorities and realize that staying healthy and achieving success are all on the line.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

GUILTY PLEASURES

Public intrigued by celebrity life, scandals

KATHRYN HOLLINGSWORTH

They are the beautiful, talented, rich and powerful. Their glamorous and exciting lives dominate headlines and stimulate heated conversations.

We love celebrities.

Their lives intrigue us, and their scandals keep us on the edge of our seats.

Attending concerts and movies or watching news containing celebrity stories can be good for all of us.

Observing lives of the famous can be therapeutic. Watching a high-profile celebrity walk down the red carpet in an outfit that costs more than your car allows a person to escape into a fairy-tale world.

We imagine what we would wear if attending the Emmys. We wonder what it would be like to be on the arm of Brad Pitt or Jennifer Lopez while waving to adoring fans.

When your daily schedule consists of balancing the checkbook and facing work or school, it can be tedious. So it's fun and harmless for a person to daydream.

However, it's not all fairy tales.

Scandal also tricks our trigger, and we revel in the downfalls of the rich and famous more than their successes.

And the news media know it.

Did you turn on CNN or Fox News when Winona Ryder was being tried for shoplifting? She dominated the headlines and newscasts – for shoplifting! This wasn't groundbreaking news, but the American public ate it up.

There is nothing more satisfying than watching the mighty fall. Human nature feels a little guilty pleasure when someone who has it all turns to crack and ruins a third marriage.

It makes us feel a little bit better about ourselves.

Whether you enjoy envisioning yourself as Catherine Zeta-Jones for a day or snicker in evil glee when Michael Jackson shows up to court with a nose under construction, it's nice to escape for awhile.

Then there are those who need to get a life.

Case in point: I attended a concert in Wichita featuring Tech 9 and B2K. I knew who Tech 9 was, but I had no clue what type of band B2K was.

My best friend and I cheerfully waited by the doors so we could be near the stage. We thought it would be fun. As the crowd thickened, my friend and I were literally being crushed by screaming girls trying to get closer to the stage.

"I can handle this," I told myself.

I was hanging in there. There were girls kicking me in the back of the leg in an attempt to move me, but I was holding firm. Some of them even tried climbing over me via my back, but I was persevering. As I was shoved, elbowed, pulled and crushed, I planted my feet firmly on the ground and became more determined to stay rooted in my spot.

Then I heard a loud, deep voice. Craning my neck as far as I could in the direction of the voice, I froze in terror.

A crying, 200-pound woman was barreling straight toward me yelling, "I'm going to see B2K, and ain't nothing gonna stop me!"

And nothing did. She mowed right over me.

Anything can be taken to an extreme. While we enjoy witnessing the lavish and charmed world of an image, we have to remember these are human beings. When people begin replacing reality with fantasy, and idolizing celebrities beyond reason, they begin to lose the reality of their own lives.

Everything in moderation, people.

Movie sequels monopolize on commercialism, lack character consistency

ANDREW LAWSON

For a long time, especially in the last decade, high-budget, epic action films have not been, shall I say, intellectually stimulating.

Sometimes, though, Hollywood produces a relatively decent movie, like "Batman," only to promptly ruin the franchise by churning out a string of bland sequels to capitalize on merchandising rights.

After one OK sequel and two hollow fillers, the Batman franchise is floundering.

One problem is that there is no consistent characterization. Villains appear and disappear in the span of one film, and are usually no more developed than their cartoon or comic predecessors. Jack Nicholson was excellent as the Joker, but Arnold Schwarzenegger doesn't have a single acting bone in his body, and Jim Carrey is just laughable as a bad guy.

The same applies to heroes. Who is the real Batman: Michael Keaton's darkly brooding, tortured and interesting vigilante; a muscled, suave Val Kilmer portraying a much happier character; or George Clooney donning a plastic body suit for arguably his worst acting performance ever?

A director change midway through the film cycle is also inconsistent, leaving the audience with two impressions of Gotham City – Tim Burton's gray metropolis, a relic of the 1930s with its corrupt mob rule, and Joel Schumacher's colorful, almost fruity environment punctuated by bad special effects.

And the great-granddaddy of all action-film franchises, James Bond, suffers from the same problems. The 007 fiascoes are what happen when you stretch this process out over 40 years.

Bond films have to be taken with a grain of salt because consistency is a joke. The original films were at least based on Sir Ian Fleming's novels. Later installments of the series no longer draw from that cohesive vision, becoming increasingly "out there" in terms of plot and character.

Jack Ryan, Indiana Jones, the Terminator, Rambo: all victims of the same disease.

"Spider-Man" and "X-Men" are recent examples of franchises that will follow in the path of "Batman" and "Bond" if their producers don't learn from the mistakes of the past. Right now, all the actors are returning, but if these films go on for a decade or more, inconsistency will develop and the sequels will get progressively worse.

Other genres, like romantic comedies, do not suffer from nearly as much sequelizing, because in the absence of spectacular special effects and martial arts, these films must rely on artistic wholesomeness.

No one wants to buy action figures from "My Big Fat Greek Wedding."

So how can Hollywood filmmakers avoid the intrinsic problems of sequelization and produce good sets of movies?

Successful sequels provide a cash cow that Hollywood can milk until it is fat and happy. Since money makes the world go 'round, sequels are as inevitable as natural disasters.

Several movies being released now or in the near future provide good models for an alternative approach to sequel making that maintains artistic integrity.

By limiting the "Harry Potter" movies to seven and ensuring they adhere closely to the books, J.K. Rowling knows her creation will not be bastardized like so many other literary heroes who jump to the silver screen. Unfortunately, the recent death of Richard Harris is one circumstance that will keep "Harry Potter" from being 100 percent consistent.

"The Lord of the Rings" trilogy is the ideal way to solve that problem because all three movies were made simultaneously before their release. Director Peter Jackson is almost reverent in respecting J.R.R. Tolkien's vision.

These movies still spur tons of merchandise, but at least they stand on their own as quality pieces of entertainment.

If you want to see more well-made, large-budget adventure films, go see "The Two Towers," "Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets" and "The Matrix Reloaded," even if they don't particularly appeal to you.

After all, money talks, and in Hollywood, your dollars will tell production companies you want them to limit their greed and make good movies their top priority.

Convicted drug users know consequences, shouldn't get financial aid

Editor,

I am writing in response to the Nov. 19 column about financial aid for people with prior drug convictions. It is possible to receive financial aid if you have been convicted of a drug-related crime.

There is a fairly tedious process to complete, and it is taken on a case-by-case basis.

However, it is understandable for the government to refuse financial aid to many people who have been convicted on drug-related charges.

Financial aid is not just free money for every student who wants it. Financial aid is money the government decides to invest in the education of American people.

You cannot expect it to invest money in a drug user who could be a potential liability.

The example of Joe Pot-head was used, but what about every Crack-head Carl, Meth-lab Mary and Heroin Bob?

You can't honestly expect the government to give those people money in good faith so they could possibly squander it on large amounts of drugs. Not only that, the amount received for financial aid is enough money for drug addicts to go into "business" for themselves.

And that is the last thing a college campus needs – federally funded drug dealers.

True, other criminals are awarded financial aid without any questions.

These people do not pose the same threat of mismanagement of financial aid. As for the sex offenders, you know who they are – their names are printed in the paper – so simply stay away from them.

Don't get me wrong, I am not condemning drug use. If you want to sit around smoking cheeba, doing lines or hitting the glass pipe all day, that's your business.

Everyone knows the risk they take.

If they get caught, they might very well find themselves with no money for school.

Is it really worth fighting if they already know the consequences?

Distance education to help graduate students

By Pete Eisasser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two K-State faculty members have been instrumental in developing a program to help graduate students complete degrees with courses from multiple universities.

Virginia Moxley, associate dean of the College of Human Ecology, and Sue Maes, senior development officer in the Regents Educational Communications Center, have helped to develop the Great Plains Interactive Distance Education Alliance, or GPIDEA.

GPIDEA is an inter-institutional distance education program for graduate programs and degrees.

Moxley said the program is in its third year and offers a master's degree in financial planning. Master's degrees in gerontology and youth development will be offered soon.

"There are a lot of reasons why this type of education at the master's level makes sense," she said. "These students are often employed and settled with families."

Moxley said a group of human sciences administrators met in 1994 to discuss how they might share distance education courses as the Internet's capabilities became more extensive. Along with K-State, the alliance includes Texas Tech, Montana State University, Colorado State University and Oklahoma State University.

Moxley said 90 students are enrolled in the financial planning program, which involves seven universities.

Maes worked with Moxley to develop the program. She said each student enrolls at one "home" institution, and all the courses the student takes online from other universities appear on the transcript as if they have been taken at the home university.

"All of the schools in the alliance treat the credit as their own," she said. "None of it is considered transfer credit. We also respect other faculty as though they're our own."

Maes said the collaboration of the universities is important because none of them alone could support the program.

The U.S. Department of Education sponsors a competition called the Fund for Improving Post Secondary Education, or FISPE.

Maes said that in this competition, K-State received a Learning Anytime Anywhere Proposal about 2 1/2 years ago, which allowed the university to improve and refine policy areas in GPIDEA.

Maes and Moxley will present the keynote address Friday at the annual FIPSE conference in Washington, D.C.

"We have good faculty in the program, including graduate deans, graduate faculty members and registrars," Maes said.

James Guikema, associate vice provost of K-State's graduate school, said GPIDEA is a program that the graduate school is delighted to offer.

He said communication among the graduate schools of the universities has been a positive factor in the success and implementation of the program.

"They've worked together to facilitate the entire process," he said

As budget resources become tighter, Maes said GPIDEA is an excellent model of how to add programs to universities.

"It makes for far more offerings available in your state where otherwise there's no access," she said.

al-Qaeda member declared as mastermind of Bali bombing

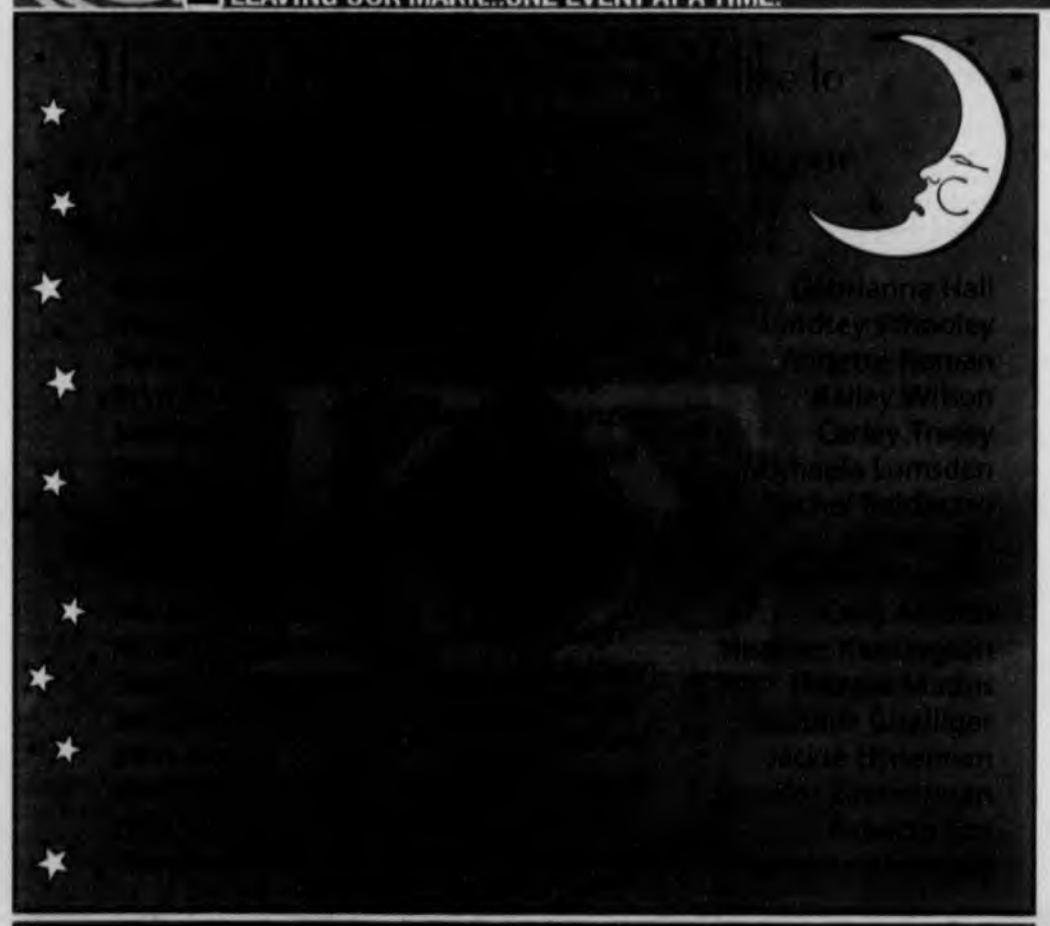
By Michael Casey
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JAKARTA, Indonesia – A man who learned bomb-making in Afghanistan was arrested Thursday in the search for the mastermind of the Bali nightclub bombings, the biggest breakthrough yet in a case that is fast exposing an al-Qaeda-linked web of terror in Southeast Asia.

Imam Samudra was captured in the port town of Merak on Indonesia's main island of Java, A.M. Hendropriyono, the chief of national intelligence agency told The Associated Press.

As well as having trained in Afghanistan, he is believed to be a leading member of Jemaah Islamiyah, a group linked to al-Qaeda that is suspected of ordering the Oct. 12 attack.

Police say the 35-year-old Samudra planned the attack and helped assemble the bombs that blew up outside the Sari Club and in Paddy's bar. At least 190 people were killed, most foreign tourists.



Samudra also is believed to be responsible for a series of church bombings in Indonesia in 2000.

National Police Chief Gen. Da'i Bachtiar said the first break came Tuesday, when police arrested two of Samudra's guards near his hometown of Serang. The men led them to Samudra, who was caught Thursday afternoon on a bus as it pulled up to a ferry bound for the western Indonesian island of Sumatra.

A man with at least five aliases, police have described Samudra as a mobile field commander with a university education and passion for computers.

In the early 1990s, Samudra taught at a religious school in southern Malaysia run by the suspected leaders of Jemaah Islamiyah.

Tigers' bowl eligibility on the line as Wildcats strive for 10 wins

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

What does K-State's football team still have left to play for?

Apparently a lot.

Players said the Cats had the goal of going 10-2 after losing to Texas more than a month ago.

On Saturday, they will have that chance.

K-State (9-2, 5-2) travels to Columbia, Mo., on Saturday to play Missouri (5-6, 2-5) – a team that shares some similarity to the Cats of a year ago.

The Tigers would gain bowl eligibility with a win against the Cats, flip-flopping the scenerio shared by the teams last season.

K-State was 5-5 going into the Nov. 24, 2001, game with the Tigers. They came away 6-5 after the 24-3 win over Missouri.

Now the roles are reversed. That makes the Tigers just as dangerous of an opponent as the Cats were at this time last season, defensive end Andrew Shull said.

"They're in a similar situation, if not the same one," he said. "They're coming out trying to be bowl eligible and trying to get something going. They've played well the last few weeks, and I see this being a big game for them."

Missouri is possibly a few nail-biters away from vying for second place in the Big 12.

On Nov. 2, the Tigers dropped a close game to Iowa State, losing 42-35.

Deja vu hit Mizzou the next week, as Colorado snuck away with a 42-35 victory in overtime.

Shull said Missouri and K-State seem to have a lot in common.

"They're as close as – what is it, seven points that separates us from being national champions – they are that many from having one or two losses," he said. "College football is like that. Little things can separate a team from wins and losses."

In the last few weeks, it's been the Wildcats that have done the little things right – particularly on defense.

Since the woeful "big plays" that plagued the Cats during the Colorado and Texas games, the Wildcat defense hasn't let the deep-throw hurt them. In fact, the last four opponents (Baylor, Kansas, Iowa State and Nebraska) have thrown a collective one TD.

But the Cats still have Tiger quarterback Brad Smith to face.

Smith averages 200 yards through the air per outing, while

Based on numbers, Missouri's defense is bad.

In the Big 12, only Kansas is worse in total defense, and Mizzou is alone at the bottom of the conference in pass defense.

But Coach Bill Snyder said these rankings are misleading when looking at the way Missouri is playing.

"I can't tell you what they're missing," Snyder said. "They've gotten themselves better and better and better as the season has gone along. They've given up more yards, certainly, against the pass.

"You go back and look at last week's ballgame, and A&M had 31 yards rushing and 35 attempts or vice versa. And that's an awfully good day's work as far as defending against the run."

Missouri statistically is better against the run than it is against the pass, ranking eighth in the conference in rush defense.

In topping Texas A&M in double overtime Saturday, the Tigers proved they were a capable team against the run.

The Aggies rushed for just 36 yards on 31 carries.

Offensive coordinator Ron Hudson said Missouri has become better defensively by making some changes.

"They play hard," he said. "They've made some personnel changes from the beginning of the year to this year. They play very hard, and they're coached hard. You can recognize that."

Hudson said that beating the Tigers, a team that has given good teams difficulties all season long, comes down to basic execution.

"They had Colorado flat beat and

Wildcat women happy to have 'another opportunity' Sunday in WNIT finals

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Because of some loyal Wildcat women's basketball fans and tough defense, K-State did in fact get what it hoped for Wednesday night: a win against Southern California and a home game against Penn State on Sunday.

The third-ranked Wildcats will take on No. 14 Penn State at 4 p.m Sunday in Bramlage Coliseum in what will be the final round of the Women's National Invitational Tournament.

Sophomore guard Laurie Koehn said the team is excited to get to lace it up one more time in this tournament.

"It's going to be another opportunity to play a game, and I think that's what we look at the most," she said after Wednesday's game with USC. "Tonight gave us that opportunity we wanted to be in, so we're just really excited to have a chance to play that game and to have it in Manhattan. We couldn't thank our fans enough."

But the Wildcats could have hoped for Mississippi State to knock off the Nittany Lions in the semifinal contest in Happy Valley, Pa.

Lead singer for Three Rivers Kennedy, Brandon Ick (front), and bass, Ben Gray, perform at Silverado Saloon. The band lives together and sometimes gives concerts at their house.

Matt Elliott | COLLEGIAN
The crowd at Silverado Saloon jams out to Three Rivers Kennedy on Nov. 10. The band plays at local shows, but began performing at house parties. Playing at house parties is a common way for local bands to get their name out.

ALTERNATIVE TUNES

Live performances offer another option to make house parties unforgettable

Adam Lee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

So your copy of "Nellyville" has started skipping right in the middle of "It's Getting Hot in Herre," and after hours of searching, you still can't seem to locate that O.A.R. album. You start to hyperventilate, and a single tear runs down your cheek as you begin to realize that you'll never be able to throw another party.

But hang on a second and take a deep breath. All is not lost. You have a wide range of options to choose from when it comes to creating the perfect soundtrack for getting things "crunked up."

For instance, how about shelving the boombox in favor of a more personal experience?

What about an actual band in your living room, kicking out a few little ditties that will push your fiesta all the way to 11 on the rock-o-meter?

So let's go over the basics of being host to a live performance in order for you to showcase some bona fide block-rocking beats on your very own block.

Step 1: Securing the talent

Perhaps a friend of yours does a little bit of guitar strumming or you've heard a bass drum pounding out of a nearby garage. Chances are there are some up-and-coming musicians who would be eager to serve as the main attraction of your soiree.

The casual nature of a house party often appeals to young groups trying to grow accustomed to live shows. It might not take more than an invitation and the promise of a little brew to get a band to play. As an added bonus, most of them will do it for free.

"They're a real confidence boost," Dead Lemon drummer Chris Fleeker said, "It's a much easier jump. At a bar, since you're usually getting paid for it, you got this feeling that there's a certain level that you're supposed to be playing at. At a house party, it's sort of like a practice run."

Dead Lemon has been making a name for itself playing the local party circuit. They've recently begun gigging at more established venues, but Fleeker said it was logical for them to take the route they did.

To find the right band, Fleeker said it never hurts to ask people who have experience throwing parties.

Three Rivers Kennedy also got its start playing local parties. Although the band has proceeded to tour and play bars, guitarist and vocalist Brandon Eck said it will never give up domestic performances.

"I think playing a house party can be even more fun than playing someplace like the Bottleneck," Eck said. "It just feels like it's yours."

The band has become notorious for its "Harry Basement" sessions, named after the members' residence on Harry Road. Eck said they will be keeping this tradition alive, and they plan on playing there with Ultimate Fake Book in the near future.

The Bearded Assholes have many fond memories of backyard boisterousness. The band began its career in the do-it-yourself fashion of performing shows at members' houses. Clint McAllister, guitarist and vocalist for the group, said those early performance served as a mutual introduction between the band and audience.

"For a band that's starting out, it's a great avenue to get things going," McAllister said. "You draw a lot of people that are just looking for a good time."

Step 2: Creating the sound

Given the area the band and the audience will be occupying, an extravagant sound system isn't necessary. The guitar and bass amplifiers and the drums themselves should be adequate, but there might be some problems getting the vocals heard.

If the band doesn't have a P.A., you can rent one from a local retailer, like Glenn's Music, or just come up with another simple amplification system to increase the volume of the singing. A lot of this will depend on the particulars of your home's architecture.

"As far as acoustics, we've played some houses that were awesome and some that have just sucked," Fleeker said.

It's also important to consider how much noise your house will be able to trap.

There is a Manhattan city ordinance that prohibits amplification systems that can be heard more than 50 feet from the source. To avoid being fined, you must get a noise permit from the City Clerk.

To receive a noise permit, you must fill out an application at least 48 hours in advance that details the volume, intensity and nature of the sound. The permit expires at 11:45 p.m. and is $20.

Even with the noise permit, you're not allowed to break the law. Lt. Kurt Moldrup said that if the department receives a complaint, or an officer notices that the party is clearly violating the noise ordinance, then the permit can be revoked. Problems from excessive noise usually result in a warning, but if the officer feels an immediate citation is warranted they can issue one to the permit holder.

"That's only when it's really excessive," he said.

Three Rivers Kennedy has run into a few problems with Johnny Law, but Eck said they are always understanding.

"Last December, a cop showed up to shut us down after a complaint, and someone asked, 'Just let them play for 15 minutes,' and he said, 'All right, I'll be back in 15 minutes.' So that was pretty cool," Eck said.

Step 3: Awaiting the masses

Whether you put up posters, hand out flyers or simply rely on word of mouth, many people will probably show up, maybe more than you intended.

Fleeker said what amazes him is how fantastically the crowd grows.

He said most nights, Dead Lemon starts playing in front of 30 people, and within an hour and a half, it could grow to 150. Playing in front of a drunken mob doesn't make Fleeker concerned.

"If you're playing, and a small group of people start moshing, there's less of a chance of something getting broken than when you're setting up and someone wants to bang on your drums," Fleeker said.

The only problem Three Rivers Kennedy has had with alcohol-fueled audiences is flattery.

"One drunk guy told us we were better than AC/DC, which we know is a lie. But it was a nice compliment," Eck said.

The Bearded Assholes said they like how exciting and volatile playing a house can be.

"What you can expect from a house party is the unexpected," McAllister said.

Mary Richards has one, and so does Ralph Kramden. Soon, there could be a statue honoring Sheriff Andy Taylor and his young son, Opie.

TV Land cable network's offer of a statue of "The Andy Griffith Show" characters, played by Andy Griffith and Ron Howard, received unanimous endorsement Tuesday from Raleigh's city council.

Andy and Opie will be depicted on their way to the fishing hole, just as they were in the opening sequence of the '60s sitcom.

also rushing for 91 yards a contest.

Justin Gage, Smith's primary target, is the second leading receiver in the conference and the seventh best receiver in the nation.

Coach Bill Snyder said Smith and Gage are just two of many weapons the Missouri offense possesses.

"They are a very good offensive team," he said. "They've kept themselves in ballgames because they have been able to move the ball consistently and because they have such diversity."

But K-State has a few weapons on offense as well.

The primary one being Darren Sproles, who has a little to play for himself. Sproles is 32 yards away from Josh Scobey, who holds the single-season record for rushing yards.

Scobey rushed for 1,263 yards in 2001 – Sproles is looking to better that mark just one year later.

Snyder said it would be nice to see his sophomore sensation get the mark because that way all the hard work would pay off.

"What I like about Darren is he is all the things that sometimes people question him not to be," he said. "He's tough, durable, he's a team player – now no one questioned his approach to being a team player – but he's not a guy that let's the individual successes go to his head."

Shull said that because of storylines like that, there is a lot of motivation to close out the regular season on a positive note.

Going 10-2 is the most important thing to this team right now, he said.

"I don't think there's going to be a let down," Shull said. "Every game has meant something to this team and we're ready to play."

OFFENSE | Tiger offensive rank misleading; possession time is key they just let it go right at the end," Hudson said.

"They shut down Chris Brown except for a couple of runs.

"It comes down to certain individuals, in those kinds of close games, making plays. That's what Chris Brown did in that particular game, and that's what we're going to have to do."

Missouri has lost just twice at home this season, dropping a 32-24 loss to Oklahoma and a 42-35 overtime heartbreaker to Colorado.

In both games, Missouri scored a lot of points, but gave up just enough to lose.

Hudson said K-State will have to be effective with the football to get a win against the Tigers on Saturday.

"I envision this as being a close game because they have the ability to spread people out and make some plays," Hudson said, "and their quarterback can throw so much more effectively than Jammal Lord could.

"I think they'll make some plays, and that's going to keep us off the field. What we have to do, when we get that opportunity, is maintain ball control."

In the Wildcats' previous four games, they have done just that.

K-State has won the battle of possession time in each of its last four wins, a telling statistic that tight end Thomas Hill said is critical this weekend.

Hill, who has 15 receptions for 228 yards and two touchdowns this season, said Missouri's defense is going to be in for a battle.

"I think if anybody comes in contact with us right now, the way we're playing, they're going to be in some trouble," Hill said.

"We'd like to bring some games back. But we can't bring games back. We're just looking forward to an opportunity to measure it against one of, I think, the best shooters in the country," she said.

"It's not like anyone is shutting Mazzante down, I think it's more about being aware of her and defending with quality and not forgetting that there are four other players on the court that can kill you as well."

WNIT | Women to rely on perimeter defense to shut down Lion scorer

Penn State brings to the table the nation's leading scorer from last year, Kelly Mazzante.

Mazzante is averaging 31.3 points per game in the WNIT.

Coach Deb Patterson said K-State's perimeter defense, which has shut down teams so far, will be relied upon on Sunday.

"Our perimeter defense will be tested on a whole other level come Sunday," she said.

"The Penn State basketball team and against Kelly Mazzante, are tremendous shooting,and they can hit the three-ball with proficiency – so it's going to be a whole other challenge."

Against USC, K-State held the Women of Troy to just 14.3 percent shooting from behind the arc.

It was just a continuation of solid efforts against Georgia Tech, who stoked a measely 15.4 percent, and Ball State, who shot just 26.7 percent from 3-point land.

But it will all culminate if the Cats can limit Mazzante's production, Patterson said.

"I've been very pleased with our perimeter defense at this point, and now I am looking forward to an opportunity to measure it against one of, I think, the best shooters in the country," she said.

toward, I feel lost. It's a lot better to know what you are doing and where you're going in life."

Some people avoid unhappiness by helping others. Bauer said he enjoys life more when he tries to to help.

"You are more happy to know that you've done something good for someone besides yourself," Bauer said. "You realize you might have just made their day."

Jared May, junior in secondary education, said he also felt more happy when he was helping others.

"I definitely enjoy helping people," he said. "It makes me feel like a good person. I always enjoy seeing other people happy."

Being secluded and failing to pursue goals can make a person discontent, Hemenover said.

"Being a pessimist, being socially isolated and not having any meaningful or challenging goals can make a person unhappy."

On the outside, helping others seems to be a good cure for a bad mood. However, Hemenover said there are situations where helping can make a person feel worse.

"It depends on how much effort it takes to help that person. It depends on who they are helping and for what reason," he said. "If that assistance takes a lot of effort, they will actually help less."

The day of the week can also be a determinant of when people are happy.

"Most people report being moderately happy most of the time," Hemenover said. "People tend to be happiest on the weekend. Then the mood tends to dip on Sunday and continue early in the week especially for people who have a typical work week of Monday through Friday."

Hemenover said that while most adults start to perk up on Friday, it isn't uncommon for college students' moods to peak around Thursday.

Teeter said that her happiness is determined by a balance of what she is doing and the day of the week.

"There are things that I like to do during the week, and I am satisfied just the same," she said. "I like Thursdays. I think it's because the weekend is coming up."

Hemenover said that the path toward reaching a goal is often more rewarding than the goal itself.

"It's not achieving success that makes people happy. It's the journey."

However, K-State's computer system cannot handle a program to support such a transaction.

"We have this legacy computer system that is sort of hanging on by its teeth," Montelone said.

Computing and Network Services is addressing the issue, she said.

If transcripts go online, Montelone said it probably will not be this year.

Bridge said he and O'Hara must conduct more research before meeting with the technology committee again. He said several other Big 12 universities post unofficial transcripts online, so he is going to find out how they do it.

"Most of them do not have official ones online – they just have unofficial ones online, which is what we've been shooting for," Bridge said.

He also said the committee's attitude toward online transcripts could change when K-State's current registrar retires.

"Will all of their attitudes change? Probably not, but I'm still hopeful we can get something online," Bridge said.

He said he and O'Hara will address the technology committee again in early December.

CUTS | Graves to announce further cuts to help cover $310 million deficit in state budget

"Making the amount of reductions significant is much easier to do if you've got K-12 and higher ed on the table," Graves said.

In August, Graves cut aid to the 303 school districts by $17.5 million, or about $27 per pupil. He declined to say how much further schools could be cut.

Senate President Dave Kerr said he didn't expect Graves' next round of cuts to close the entire shortfall, but wouldn't speculate how much more cuts might be needed.

"I'll leave that to the governor," said Kerr, R-Hutchinson.

Kerr said there was an advantage to making the cuts as soon as possible and not waiting until Sebelius takes office in January.

"It gives agencies an opportunity to react," Kerr said.

Graves and Sebelius met during the weekend to discuss the budget cuts as they traveled to a National Governors Association conference. However, Graves said Wednesday that he would be alone at the microphone when the next round of cuts are announced.

Sebelius spokeswoman Nicole Corcoran-Basso said the governor-elect has had discussions with Graves, but he has not talked specifics.

She said that Sebelius was sticking to her position that the 2003 budget was still Graves' responsibility. Even so, her proposed budget to lawmakers next year will be affected by what Graves does.

"Whatever he presents next week, that is his decision to make and she certainly would not second guess him," Corcoran-Basso said.

Corcoran-Basso said Sebelius "would wait and see what happens" next week before making any comment about further cuts, or restoring any of the reductions in the upcoming 2004 budget.

As part of her transition, Sebelius created teams to conduct a top-to-bottom review to find ways to cut state spending and make government more efficient.

Kerr said it was "unrealistic" that Sebelius' review could produce huge amounts of savings.

Sebelius has until Feb. 3 to submit her budget proposals. That package must include a proposed budget for fiscal 2004 and a revised budget for fiscal 2003.

In the past, incoming governors have dealt with current fiscal problems.

For example, in 1987, Gov. Mike Hayden had $60 million in budget cuts ready for legislators during their first week of session.

NATO | Following pressure by Bush, leaders pledge to help the United Nations disarm Iraq themselves from Bush's zero tolerance position and even the document itself.

It did commit the alliance to taking "effective action to assist and support the efforts of the U.N." That pledge was designed to make NATO's logistical, political and diplomatic assets available to the United Nations, though it could be read as offering the alliance's military support, said a senior Bush administration official.

That official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said neither the United States nor its allies envisions using NATO's military capacity to help enforce the resolution.

On the summit's opening day, Bush sought out his most supportive allies – and froze out the reluctant ones – to urge a united stance against Saddam.

"If he chooses not to disarm, we will work with our close friends, the closest of which is Great Britain, and we will disarm him," the president said after meeting with British Prime Minister Tony Blair.

Blair said his country "will do what's necessary" to enforce the U.N. resolution.

The United Nations has given Saddam until Dec. 8 to list his weapons of mass destruction. The White House says his holdings are vast, and failure to report any of them could trigger war.

While Bush told leaders Saddam may avert war by complying, Condoleezza Rice said there's little chance of that.

Secretary of State Colin Powell told CBS that if Saddam violates the U.N. resolution, Bush "is fully ready to take the necessary step, which is military force."

Meeting beneath the tall spires of this Bohemian city, few NATO leaders joined Bush and Blair in speaking forcefully against Iraq – a sign that while allies support the U.N. effort in theory, they remain highly skeptical about fighting Saddam.

"Our position is completely clear: We will not take part in a military strike against Iraq," German Foreign Minister Joschka Fischer said.

In private talks, French President Jacques Chirac told Bush that a war against Iraq requires a second U.N. Security Council resolution, putting him at odds with the U.S. position.

A day before traveling to Russia, Bush courted President Vladimir Putin's support by vowing to honor Moscow's economic interests in Iraq if a U.S. military operation ousts Saddam.

"We understand that Russia has got interests there, as do other countries. And, of course, those interests will be honored," Bush told NTV.

Baghdad owes Moscow $7 billion in Soviet-era debt.

The Sept. 11 attacks improved U.S.-Russian relations and softened Putin's opposition to NATO expansion. The strikes refocused NATO, too.

Hours later, NATO leaders approved a U.S.-backed plan to create a pool of crack troops in a 20,000-strong rapid-response force to tackle terrorists worldwide, burying NATO's old reluctance to act outside its established European and North Atlantic spheres of influence.

The strike force won't be ready for a war in Iraq, so individual countries are being asked to help out.

Elections will be held on Monday, November 25th at Kappa Delta at 9:00.

Greek of the Month

On behalf of the entire Kansas State University Greek community, we would like to congratulate Sheldon Bud for being November's Greek of the Month recipient! Sheldon is a junior member of Delta Chi fraternity and is majoring in Management Information Systems/Finance with a 3.65 GPA. He has recently held many positions inside his fraternity house, including helping the house's homecoming chair in organizing some homecoming events and eventually helping to lead his pairing to take 2nd place overall in the Greek division. Sheldon also helped with the alumni reservations for their annual Founder's Day. He is the executive director of the Delta Chi Educational Foundation. During the fall of 2002, he has been serving as the treasurer for his chapter and has recently been elected to be the Associate Member Counselor for spring of 2003.

Outside of his chapter, Sheldon currently serves as a member of the Student Senate. In addition to being a member of Student Senate, he is currently serving on the Privilege Fee Committee and has sat in and debated at other committee meetings. As a member of Student Senate he has recently helped with and sat in at the Pack the Library Night. In addition to all of the positions and jobs that he has held as being a member of the Student Senate, he is also involved with GAMMA, which stands for Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol. Through GAMMA, he has helped with many positive events, the most recent of which being the Alcohol Awareness Week that was held earlier this semester. As if that wasn't enough, Sheldon has been serving as a student member of the University Calendar Committee.

In addition to being this month's Greek of the Month, Sheldon was elected as the Delta Chi Brother of the Semester in the spring of 2002. During the remainder of his college career, he is hoping to become a member of the Executive Committee in his fraternity house. He is hoping to eventually graduate from Kansas State University with dual degrees. Outside of all of his activities and his schoolwork, Sheldon enjoys hanging out with his fraternity brothers, working on cars, playing golf, and watching Kansas State University sporting events.

As you can see, Sheldon Bud work's hard not only for his fraternity house, but for all of the students on this campus. Once again, we congratulate him for all of his hard work and wish him the best of luck in the future!

Governor's budget cuts to force colleges to cancel classes

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Bill Graves is expected to announce another round of budget cuts Tuesday, and departments at K-State are preparing for the worst.

Twenty-three classes are planned to be cut for the spring semester by K-State's colleges, pending the severity of Graves' latest cuts to higher education.

"We don't anticipate having to make these types of cuts," Joe Aistrup, political science department head, said. "But you never know what the governor is going to do."

Aistrup said the department was told to expect cuts and to plan on canceling enough classes to compensate for the losses.

The College of Engineering is planning on the most cuts – 17, according to e-mails sent from deans and department heads to Student Body President Zac Cook.

"The dean told department heads in August to plan on budget cuts, even though they hadn't been announced, so students could plan accordingly," Stevin Gehrke, chemical engineering department head, said.

Most of the classes departments decided to drop were meant to affect the fewest students, Gehrke said.

"I know it has been an inconvenience for students," Gehrke said. "But I don't think it affected anybody's graduation."

Chemical engineering students should have received an e-mail in August, Gehrke said, that explained what classes might be cut, so the students could take the classes they needed for graduation.

Aistrup said the political science department also tried to have the smallest effect on students when deciding what classes might be dropped. Many of the possible cuts in political science are taught by

Dean to plead not guilty

Former liquor store owner contests charges

By Nancy Foster
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The man who owned former Dean Retail Liquor in Aggieville will make a plea regarding one felony charge and two misdemeanor charges at his arraignment hearing today.

Kent Dean, 38, who owned the liquor store for 11 years, will make his plea at 9 a.m. at the Riley County Courthouse. Dean is being charged with one felony count of aggravated criminal sodomy and two misdemeanor counts of criminal restraint.

Pedro Irigonegaray, Dean's attorney, said Dean will plead not guilty to all charges.

Prosecutors allege that on Jan. 6, 2002, Dean engaged in sexual acts with a 22-year-old female who was incapable of giving consent due to drugs and alcohol. They also allege Dean slipped cocaine into the woman's drink.

Allegedly, Dean invited two women, both 22, to his liquor store to drink. He made them alcoholic drinks, and then they went to a small back room after hearing a noise outside. Then the victim's friend left the room, and she was alone with Dean.

Then, she said, she blacked out. When she woke up, she said her pants were at her ankles, and later at her home realized her underwear were

Dean to face more charges

Dean arrested on Nov. 18 warrant

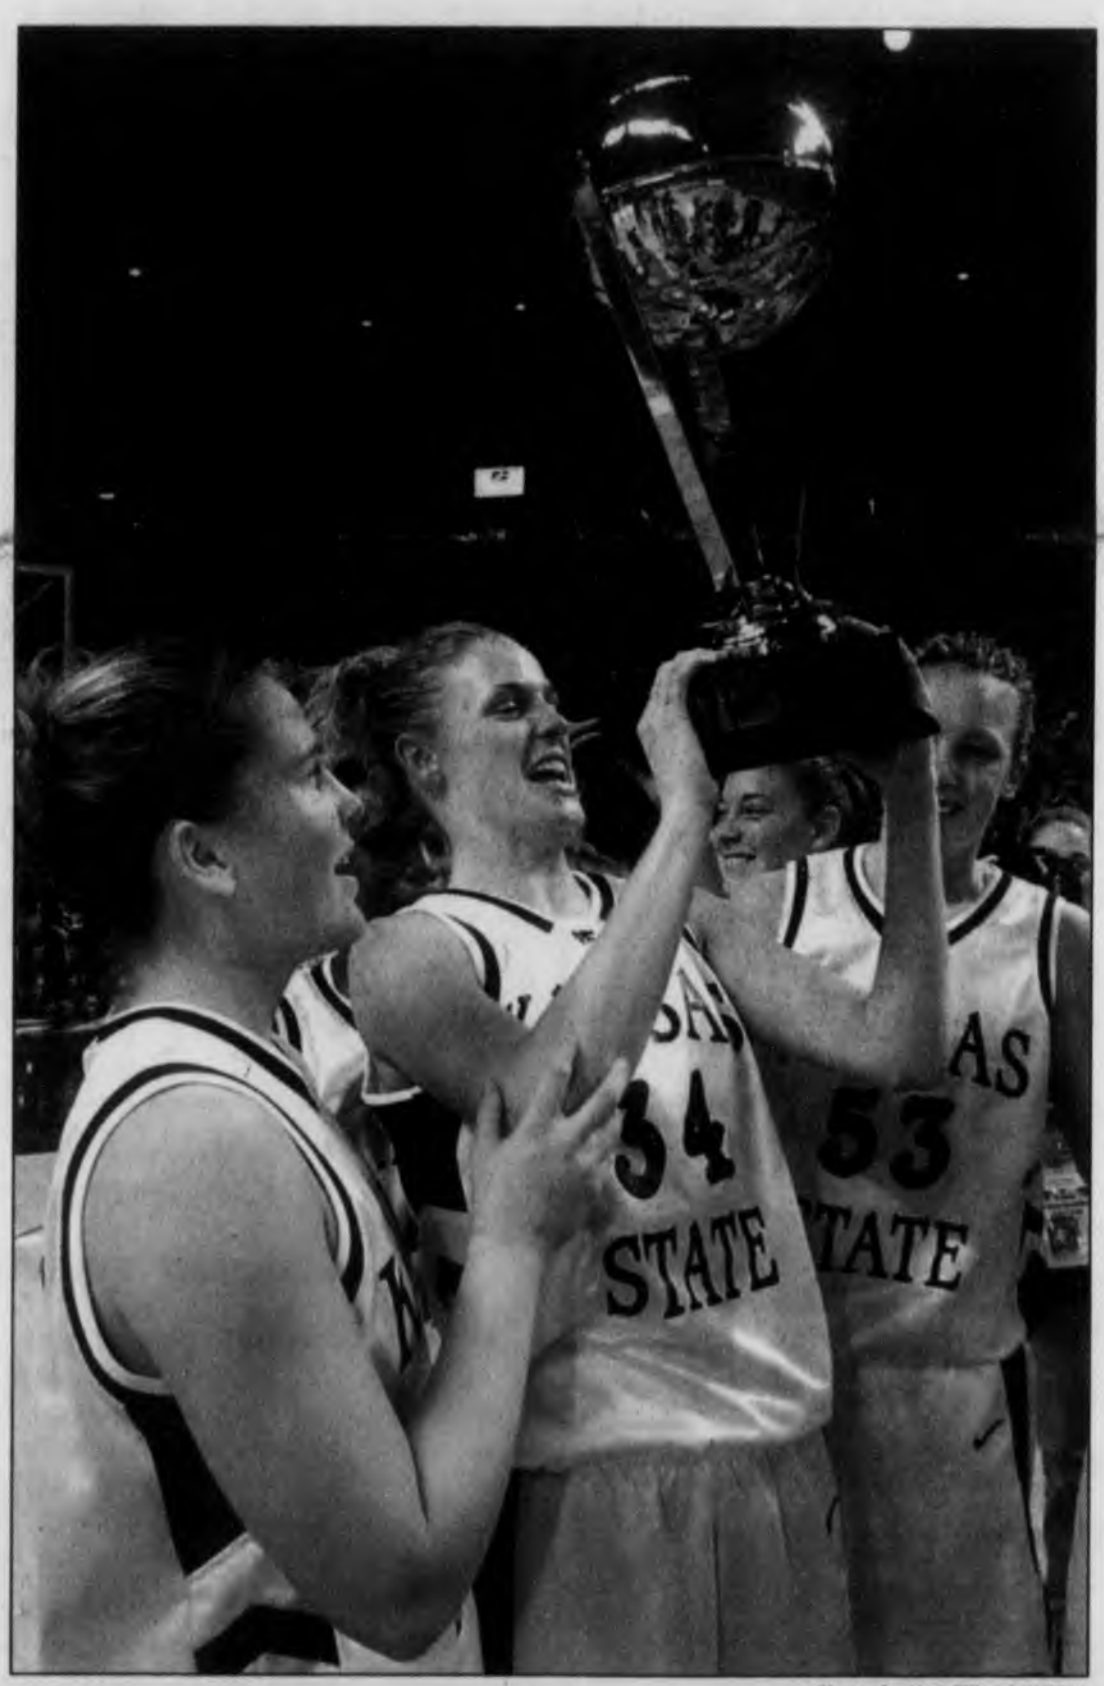
Kent Dean, who is scheduled for an arraignment today in Riley County, is also scheduled for a Dec. 3 hearing in Pottawatomie County on separate charges.

Dean, 38, who owned former Dean Retail Liquor in Aggieville, was arrested Nov. 18 on a warrant for aggravated battery and sale or distribution of opiates, opium, narcotic drugs or designated stimulants. Dean's arrest was allegedly related to cocaine, said Dave Lamberson, communications supervisor at the Pottawatomie County Sheriff's Office.

Dean was released from jail the same day on a $10,000 bond, Lamberson said.



The warrant was issued Oct. 30, and Lamberson said Dean turned himself in to police. The warrant probably resulted from an investigation and not one particular incident, Lamberson said. Lamberson said he did not know the particulars of the charges, including how much cocaine was allegedly involved or how the two charges were related.

No one from the Pottawatomie County Attorney's Office was available for comment Friday.

Dean's hearing is scheduled for 1 p.m. on Dec. 3 at the Pottawatomie County Courthouse in Westmoreland.

Even with all the success of last season, K-State didn't have the privilege of uttering the C-word.

It likely wasn't talked about at the dinner table, friends probably didn't mention it a whole lot and perhaps even teammates shied at using such a term.

Well, throw all that out the window.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD

1st-time inline skater, psych patient claim neglect, seek damages in court

By Chuck Shepherd
UNIVERSAL NEWS SYNDICATE

In September, Robert Rozenhart, now 56, won his 7-year-old lawsuit against Skier's Sportshop (Edmonton, Alberta) for injuries suffered on his maiden attempt to inline skate, which came after a Skier's employee tried unsuccessfully to tell Rozenhart not to venture out until the store's instructor arrived to help him. Rozenhart skated away anyway and was on a downward incline when he first realized he did not know how to stop.

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

In October, Kevin William Presland, 44, commenced his lawsuit against the James Fletcher Hospital in Newcastle, Australia, in which he is asking to be financially compensated because, he said, hospital personnel released him prematurely after a brief psychiatric admission in 1995 and thus made it easy for him to kill his prospective sister-in-law a few hours later. Presland's lawyer acknowledges that nothing can be done to help the woman's family but says Presland, at least, deserves a payoff. The hospital says Presland was calm and rational and that it had no legal basis for detaining him.

Right to bear arms

Alberta (Canada) judge Shelagh Creagh ruled in October that prison inmate Shane Arthur Wilson could not be punished for carrying around a homemade plastic knife since Wilson said the knife was only for defending himself against prison gangs. This, and a similar decision being appealed by another Alberta judge have predictably outraged prison guards across Canada.

And a November Washington Post dispatch from Mexico reports that escaping from prison is not a crime in that country (nor is running away from police or lying about guilt) because, as one Supreme Court justice put it, Mexico respects the individual's "basic desire for freedom."

Latest mature government officials

Sumpter Township, Mich., Supervisor Elmer Parraghi, 74, and Finance Director Dwayne Seals, 35, habitually, viciously feuding about business issues, recently obtained judicial restraining orders against each other, even though both work in a four-office building. And in September during the annual, vituperative Miami-Dade County (Fla.) budget hearing, Commissioner Natacha Seijas snapped at Chairwoman Gwen Margolis for interrupting her: "You're going to leave here in a body bag if you keep this up."

Weird workplaces

Conscientious workers at the ARO Campulung auto plant in Romania offered in October to help pay off the company's debts by selling their sperm to a fertility clinic in the city of Timisoara, at the equivalent of (U.S.) $50 a session. Said the plant's union leader, "We have found (a solution) that even the best economists have never thought of." (However, to pay the equivalent (U.S.) $20 million debt in full would require 400,000 sessions, or 400 sessions for each of the 1,000 males at the plant.)

Least competent criminals

Adventures with gasoline: Octavio Soto, 44, and Jose Cezares, 23, were hospitalized with third-degree burns in Fitchburg, Mass., in September when they attempted to saw into the vehicle gas tank in which they had hidden $100,000 worth of cocaine. An errant spark from their sawing created a flash fire.

And two men escaped after an unsuccessful attempt to rob a guy filling up at the Swifty Service Station in Indianapolis in October. The victim merely flicked the gasoline hose at the men, dousing them and sending them scampering.

Also, in the last month ...

After five months of nightly practice, Jonathan Smith of Delaware, Ohio, beat 16 finalists (out of 50,000 entrants) for the $1 million DeWalt power-screwing championship by drilling five screws in less than seven seconds (Phoenix).

Only a $1,200 first prize was offered, however, in November's international championship of the World Rock Paper Scissors Society (Toronto).

At an annual judicial conference, Taiwanese judges voted 49-11 that oral sex, without intercourse, should not be a legal ground for adultery (Taipei).

Our civilization in decline

Officials at Somerville (N.J.) High School warned students in October to stop trying to get high by choking each other. With the so-called "California Knockout," a student holds his breath for 10 seconds to get light-headed, after which a pal squeezes his neck to put him out. And University of Pennsylvania researchers found that the average price of a black-market human kidney in India has dropped (despite insufficient supply) from the equivalent of (U.S.) $1,603 to $975, suggesting that wealthier, kidney-needing people have learned how to put the squeeze on impoverished donors.

Latest politically correct thinking

In October, the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child told Great Britain it should repeal its parental-right-to-spank law because spanking violates an international corporal-punishment treaty (which the United States has declined to honor, as well).

In September, the North Tyneside (England) Council advised a local business group not to hold the annual children's Christmas caroling contest this year because it would be a bad experience for the kids who did not win.

In October, Mayor Shelton Richardson of North Randall, Ohio, charging racism, proposed to make it illegal for any gas station to make customers pay before pumping (despite a marked recent increase in customer "drive-offs").

Special Olympics visits city

71 teams from across Kansas gather for athletic competition, fun

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jerry Niehaus has a simple game plan when it comes to winning volleyball games.

"You have to get more points," he said.

Niehaus, a member of the Topeka Shawnee Special Olympics volleyball team, was one of 1,400 athletes at the Fall Classic in Manhattan on Friday and Saturday.

The event marks the third year for the community to have the state competition, which featured the volleyball and bowling competitions and brought 71 teams from across the state to Manhattan for the weekend.

"These two events used to be in Salina and Lawrence, but we grew too big," said Adrienne Folkerts, public relations director for Special Olympics Kansas. "We combined the two sites for more competition, and we felt Manhattan had a lot to offer with the bowling alleys and the Rec Center."

All volleyball games were played at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, with the bowling competition spread through area alleys, including Zuckey's, the K-State Student Union and Fort Riley.

"Manhattan has great facilities, and it was the logical choice," said Tim Rehder, vice president of sports and competition for Special Olympics. "We get help from the Manhattan community, and we have a great relationship."

In addition to community members, K-State organizations helped with the efforts as well, serving as bowling lane assistants and volleyball scorekeepers and officials.

"We've had a lot of greek houses and academic organizations come," said Susan Krumm, assistant vice president of sports and competition. "They jumped right in very enthusiastically and were willing to help out."

Special Olympics first began in 1968, when Eunice Kennedy Shriver wanted people to realize that individuals with mental disabilities were able to participate in physical activities and athletic competitions contrary to the beliefs of many experts.

As a result, Shriver organized the first Special Olympics games in 1968 in Chicago, and the program has been growing ever since.

"We're a sports organization for children and adults with mental retardation," Folkerts said. "We offer year-round training."

In Kansas, the Special Olympics program offers six different state competitions throughout the year, along with a number of regional competitions in a variety of sporting events.

"Obviously we're sports, but that's just a part of it," Folkerts said. "Through Special Olympics, the athletes gain self-confidence, meet friends and learn skills to enter into the work force."

Rita Kennedy, coach for the Topeka Shawnee volleyball team, agreed and said a large part of the competition comes with the trip involved.

"They learn responsibility," she said.

"During the trip, they are responsible for their medicine, their travel money and getting their uniform ready for the game."

Kennedy's team, which competed in the Level III bracket, practiced once a week to prepare for the state games.

Although Kennedy's team was well-prepared for the games, it was perhaps the love of the game that gave it its earned success.

"I love to play volleyball," Judy Friesendahl, team member, said. "We have to keep that up."

Kansas Highway Patrol offers tips for safe travel during winter holidays

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thanksgiving break is this week, and students will be hitting the roads to visit family and friends.

This time of year, with the drastic weather changes, Capt. Robert Mellgren of K-State Police, said students need to be careful while driving.

According to the Kansas Highway Patrol Web site, after a long spring and summer, it's easy to forget how to drive on the winter's slick roads and in low-visibility conditions.

Mellgren said students need to be aware of the weather conditions they are driving into during this time of year.

Students can check Kansas' road conditions by dialing (800) 585-ROAD, or by visiting www.kanroad.org.

Mellgren said blankets and non-perishable food items are good to keep in the car in case the driver gets stranded.

"I always suggest you run on the top half of the gas tank during the winter in case you do get stranded – at least you'll have some gas to burn," Mellgren said.

If stranded in a winter storm, stay in the vehicle, keep fresh air circulating through a window, run the motor sparingly, turn on the dome light, stay awake, and move arms and legs to stimulate circulation.

If carrying a cellular phone, dial *HP or *KTA while on the Kansas Turnpike, according to the Kansas Highway Patrol Web site, www.kansashighwapatrol.org,

The site also recommended travelers keep a survival kit in their cars containing the following items: an ice scraper and shovel, jumper cables, flashlights, sand or kitty litter for traction, extra clothing or blankets, non-perishable food, a first-aid kit, matches and candles or flares, and a tow rope or chain.

Mellgren said people should prepare cars for winter travel.

"Students should also get their car checked over from one end to the other, from the tires to the radiator," he said.

He said to make sure the antifreeze is up to the elements and to continue watching the oil and gas.

Kate Rulifson, sophomore in graphic design, is preparing to travel 20 hours by car for winter break.

She has a "massive" car kit and is going to get her oil changed and tires balanced and rotated before leaving.

"I'm a little bit nervous, but I have driven it before," Rulifson said. "I prefer to drive in daylight, and I always have my cell phone with me, so if anything were to happen, I'd be able to get a hold of someone."

Additional reminders on the Web site tell travelers to allow extra time for traffic delays and slower traffic speeds.

It is also recommended to accelerate and brake gently because a light foot on the gas is less likely to make the wheels spin on ice and snow. Also, braking is best accomplished by pumping the brakes, unless the driver has a vehicle with Anti-lock Braking System, in which case brakes are not to be pumped.

Preparing for Winter

Recommendations from the Kansas Highway Patrol to prepare your vehicle for winter travel include the following:

- Check the fluids.
- Ensure the radiator is winterized, the gas tank is more than half full and there is plenty of windshield-washing fluid.
- Check belts, hoses and brake systems for excessive wear.
- Have the exhaust system checked — small leaks can allow carbon monoxide to enter the passenger compartment.
- Check tire treads for adequate traction and replace windshield-wiper blades if they are ineffective.

Iraq worried fine print might lead to war

By Charles J. Hanley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In a point-by-point protest, the Iraqi government complained to the United Nations on Sunday that the small print behind the weapons inspections beginning this week will give Washington a pretext to attack.

The new U.N. resolution on the inspections could turn "inaccurate statements (among) thousands of pages" of required Iraqi reports into a supposed justification for military action, Foreign Minister Naji Sabri said in a letter to U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan.

"There is premeditation to target Iraq, whatever the pretext," Sabri said.

His lengthy letter, a detailed commentary on the Security Council resolution, was not expected to affect the inspections, which resume Wednesday after a four-year suspension. Iraq had accepted the resolution in a Nov. 13 letter from Sabri to Annan.

Preparations moved steadily ahead on Baghdad's outskirts Sunday, where technicians at the U.N. inspection center worked to establish a "hot line" with liaisons in the Iraqi government.

The first working group of 18 inspectors arrives Monday on a flight from a U.N. rear base in Cyprus.

Their numbers are expected to swell by year's end to between 80 and 100 at a time in Iraq.

In seven years' work after the 1991 Gulf War, U.N. experts destroyed large amounts of chemical and biological weapons and longer-range missiles forbidden to Iraq by U.N. resolutions, and dismantled Iraq's nuclear weapons program before it could build a bomb.

The inspections were suspended amid disputes over U.N. access to Iraqi sites and Iraqi complaints the United States inserted spies in the inspection teams.

TO THE POINT

Governor must make education top priority

Gov. Bill Graves will announce "substantial" budget cuts on Tuesday to combat an estimated $310 million deficit.

We urge Graves to make education his top priority. Universities all over the state already are feeling the effects of money constraints. Several programs have been cut, bills cannot be paid and people are losing their jobs.

The latest consequences are plans to eliminate multiple courses midway through spring enrollment. Students enrolled in those courses now have to find ways to receive credits to graduate.

Students might have to take more years to finish what would have been four-year degrees.

Universities are trying to adapt, but more cuts will make it extremely difficult.

Gov. Graves: We don't envy you this challenging decision, but we do ask that education receive as few cuts as possible. The more money you cut from education now, the more harm you do to the future of Kansas.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

PERSONAL POLITENESS

Courtesy, values are fundamentals

Editor's note: Lorena is pursuing a doctoral degree in curriculum and instruction. Every Monday, she tackles an issue in her native language, Spanish, as well as in English. Gloria Freeland, assistant professor of journalism, edits the columns. Both columns convey the same message and allow the Collegian to reach a more diverse audience. You can e-mail her at lorena@ksu.edu.

Every morning, when I step into the bus along with other Jardine residents, smiling driver Lee says, "Hello. Good morning! How are you today?" He is kind no matter how nasty the weather or heavy the traffic. It is not a fake effort to be nice, but the authentic personal expression of real kindness.

LORENA BARBOZA

Social interaction is a covered battlefield. It is not easy working, learning, studying, traveling and living together. We are all different. Sometimes we are antagonistic, competitive and resentful. Sometimes we feel tired, sick or moody. Kindness helps us go through the daily routine without fighting each other all the time. A simple smile, gentle tone of voice, compassionate interest in helping, cordial glance or sympathetic gesture – all are signs of benevolence and consideration, and they renew our faith in human beings.

Gracious courtesy is a form of interpersonal communication that conveys the finest feelings of a human being. Rude behavior, a gross attitude or a brusque refusal of a request is a humiliation that creates violent and aggressive reactions.

It is nice to step out of my home and get Lee's affable greeting and feel the satisfaction of being able to respond in a similar fashion. Unfortunately, modern society makes us in too much of a hurry, too busy worrying and too busy to pay attention to the deepest needs of the human heart. We are waiting for the elevator with our eyes fixed on the numbers above the door, and we care nothing for the people around us. We notice that somebody new on campus is lost, looking desperately for a parking spot or an administrative office, auditorium or classroom, but we don't stop for a second out of our endless running to offer some help.

Why, I wonder, is it so difficult to meet kind people along the way? Our time and culture are pervaded by violence and aggressiveness. We have become a planet of warriors, fully armored behind indifference and loneliness. We see in everyone a potential enemy, not a potential friend. Defense, not cooperation, force, not alliance – this seems to be the formula to survive. And it is present not only on an international scale but also in our daily interpersonal relationships. It is not enough to imply our tender, affectionate, tolerant feelings to those close to us. Expressing our outward affection and consideration is equally important.

Courtesy and politeness unfortunately are not part of the curriculum in schools. Every culture has its own particular ways to express the kind feelings of the heart, and families have been in charge of its transmission from generation to generation. Kindness is not public relations or diplomatic tactics. Rather, it is the altruistic and humanitarian conception of human life.

In the middle of a time of warfare, conflicts, crudity and aggression, let's rescue the affable and cordial expressions of the human heart. And, by the way, thanks a lot for reading this column, and have a very nice day!

Cortesía, valores fundamentales

Cada mañana cuando abordo el busito junto a los demás residentes de Jardine, el sonriente chofer llamado Lee dice, "Hola. Buenos días. ¿Cómo está usted hoy?" El siempre es amable, no importa cuáles sean las condiciones del tiempo o del tráfico. No creo que su gentileza sea una pose, sino más bien una expresión genuina de su personalidad.

La interacción social es un campo de batalla encubierto. No es fácil trabajar, aprender, estudiar, viajar y vivir juntos. Todos somos diferentes; algunas veces somos antagonistas, competitivos y rencorosos; en otras ocasiones no sentimos cansados, enfermos, malhumorados y la bondad ayuda a sobrellevar la rutina diaria sin entrar en pelea con los demás todo el tiempo. Una simple sonrisa, un tono de voz amable, un interés genuino por ayudar, una mirada cordial o un gesto de simpatía, son todos signos de benevolencia y consideración que renuevan la fe en los seres humanos.

La cortesía es una forma de comunicación interpersonal que transmite nuestros más finos sentimientos. El comportamiento rudo, la actitud grosera y la brusca negación de un favor, son actos humillantes que provocan una reacción violenta y agresiva.

Es muy agradable salir de casa y recibir el saludo afable de Lee, y sentir la satisfacción de corresponder de igual manera. Lamentablemente la sociedad moderna vive de prisa, preocupada y muy ocupada para poner atención a las necesidades más profundas del corazón. Esperamos el elevador con los ojos clavados en los números de la puerta ignorando a los que nos rodean. Notamos que alguien nuevo en el campus está perdido, buscando desesperadamente por un aparcamiento o una oficina administrativa, un auditorio o una clase, pero no nos detenemos por un segundo en nuestra constante carrera para ofrecer alguna ayuda.

Me pregunto, ¿por qué cuesta tanto encontrar personas corteses en nuestro camino? Nuestra época y cultura están penetradas por la violencia y la agresividad. Nuestro planeta se ha convertido en uno de guerreros, acorazado enteramente por la indiferencia y la soledad. Escudado con ásperos, escabrosos y despiadados sentimientos. Vemos en cada persona un enemigo, no a un amigo potencial. Defensa, no cooperación, fuerza, no alianza, esa es la fórmula para sobrevivir. Y está presente no solo en las relaciones internacionales, también lo está en la rutina interpersonal diaria. Frecuentemente olvidamos que no es suficiente insinuar nuestros sentimientos de cariño, piedad y tolerancia a aquellos cercanos a nosotros. La bondad de expresar afecto y consideración es igualmente importante.

Lamentablemente la cortesía, como urbanidad, no es una materia que se enseñe como tal en las escuelas y colegios. Cada cultura tiene sus formas particulares para expresar los bondadosos sentimientos del corazón, y la familia ha sido siempre la encargada de transmitirlos de generación en generación. La bondad no significa relaciones públicas o tácticas diplomáticas. Es más bien una concepción altruísta y humanitaria de la vida.

En medio de tiempos de guerra, conflictos, rudeza y agresión, rescatemos las expresiones afables y cardiales del corazón. Y por cierto, ¡gracias por leer esta columna y que tenga un maravilloso día!

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

If you keep calling in, talking dirt on Johnson County people with your stereotypes, my stereotype of you is that you're white trash and jealous.

To the astronomy major who called in about Manhattan being stupid: The sun is the center of the solar system, not the center of the universe. Go back to kindergarten, trace your hand a few times and try the joke again.

How can Johnson County people brag about their expensive cars when they're the only people in the state who can't drive them?

People who justify plastic surgery by saying it makes them feel better about themselves are kind of like drug addicts — at least they're happy, if only for a little bit.

To Layton: Give me a break. Look at you. You look like ... I don't even know what you look like. You look like Michael Bolton with a bad haircut.

Paul White fell out of the stupid tree and hit every branch on the way down.

Well, this budget thing must be pretty terrible on campus. First, they quit stocking Denison Hall's bathroom with paper towels. Now, they're not stocking them with toilet paper.

If Manhattan was the universe of stupid and the campus was the sun, the greek houses must be the cold void of the universe.

Only dumb people smoke, and smoking makes you ugly. So, maybe if we got rid of it, the student body would be better — looking and smarter.

Greeks? Bosses? I don't think their daddies' pockets are that deep.

What do you call a liberal, misguided moron who has no cognitive thinking ability? Paul White.

To the greeks who think they're going to be my bosses someday: Only if I'm flipping burgers at Burger King.

So, you really paid all that money to become a greek so you can become the boss of the Fourum? You really set high goals for yourself, don't you?

Actually, I heard the reason those military translators were dismissed was because they kept showing up in pink and fuschia camouflage.

Orifice is a great word.

To the greeks who think they're going to be my bosses someday: No, you're going to end up in one of the dirty magazines my children read.

Ehmke, you're an idiot. You should think about what you say before you write it down on paper.

Welcome to K-State — where the tuition is high and the class selection is low.

OK, I'm done with my Fourum fun for the day. Thank you.

Attack on soldiers racist diatribe unsupported by facts

I was attacked Thursday. It wasn't by an Iraqi missile or by a terrorist. It was by one of my fellow countrymen in the heartland of America.

BRIAN BOLES

I checked my e-mail and had several links to a column in the Collegian. The column described soldiers as "government-created, human robot-killing machines."

I am in Kuwait now. I see these "government-created, human robot-killing machines" on the phone every day, talking to their wives and children as they prepare to sleep in twin beds in a warehouse full of soldiers.

They are allowed three 10-minute calls per week to keep in touch with their families. These "out of control" soldiers are lining up outside the post office at Camp Doha, Kuwait to send their families and children gifts for the holiday season.

These soldiers, like many others around the world, are supporting America and its people. They are "serving our country."

When you are attacked, it is a natural response to take the offensive. This soldier, supposedly under "the influence of thought control," will not make any sort of attack on college students. It would be pointless, irrelevant and insulting to pick out the most offensive students at K-State and imply that college made them that way.

What is the point of the column? It certainly isn't "news." There were no dates, details, specific locations, names or even facts, for that matter. Real journalists often are allowed a certain degree of slant to their reporting. That is the main concept of an editorial. Real editorial writers present facts and statistics to back up their columns and to reinforce the points they are trying to make.

There were no facts or statistics at all in the column. It was basically a rant unworthy of publication.

Let me show this student the concept of using statistics to back up an argument. According to The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, Fourth Edition, a race is "a group of people united or classified together on the basis of common history, nationality or geographic distribution."

It would be fair to call Fort Riley soldiers a "race," by definition. It also would be fair to state that a column calling Fort Riley soldiers "mongoloids" and "brainwashed degenerates" is a racist column.

It certainly is not fact, since "mongoloids" are ineligible for military enlistment.

I am certain that Layton Ehmke must have had classes on "responsible journalism" at K-State. Maybe a little less time in Aggieville and a little more time studying would do him a lot of good.

Kohman vows to see SafeRide program through; officials begin contacting taxi companies

By Nancy Foster
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Body Vice President Todd Kohman said he is not leaving until it is done.

Kohman said implementing a designated-driver program must happen. And, he said, it must happen by next fall.

"That's the bottom line," Kohman, member of the SafeRide Task Force Committee, said. "It's been talked about for years and years, and it just needs to get done, and I'll do whatever it takes."

The program, SafeRide, has been discussed for about six years.

Kohman said the task force is contacting area cab companies about providing transportation. The service likely would run on weekends and would provide rides home to students who need them.

Previously, the task force talked to the Riley County Area Transportation Agency about providing a busing service.

However, he said there were too many liability issues. He said ATA, a local non-profit agency, was concerned about damage to its vehicles, and it would have charged SafeRide for any damages.

That, Kohman said, would have added costs to the SafeRide program.

"We decided that was not the route we needed to go," he said.

With a cab service, he said, passengers are liable for any damages.

He said the cab service would be responsible for calling the police and filing reports.

Plus, he said, a cab service might be more efficient in transporting students to their homes.

Kohman said implementing a SafeRide program is a four-step process.

Step one is constructing a bid to send to cab companies. The bid will include the program's expectations, days of operation and rules and regulations.

Step two is estimating program and promotional costs.

Step three is incorporating the program into the Office of Student Activities and Services. Kohman said this will prevent creating a new privilege fee. And it might create a new student position.

"Based on preliminary discussion, there would be a student that administers it, and they would report to this office – if that's what they decide to do," said Gayle Spencer, OSAS coordinator and adviser to the task force.

Step four is writing a formal proposal that will go to Student Senate's privilege fee committee.

The proposal must outline the program's cost. If Senate approves the money, the task force will put out bids to cab companies.

Spencer said the program would cost roughly $30,000 to $40,000 per semester.

The task force originally planned to have the program instated by spring 2003.

"I've been really disappointed that we are not going to be able to get a pilot program running by this spring because we have no access to privilege fees," Kohman said.

He said the task force plans to have the first three steps completed by Dec. 5. Then, during winter break, it will write the formal bid.

"So when we get back in the spring, it can be one of the first things privilege fee looks at," Kohman said.

Spencer said the proposal must go before the privilege fee committee by March 1.

Kohman, who graduates in May, said the program will be great once it is implemented and the kinks are worked out. SafeRide would be valuable to the community and K-State, he said.

"I don't want it to be another campaign issue, another broken promise," Kohman said.

"It just needs to get taken care of so that when a student comes back in the fall, they can call the number the first night of classes and get in a cab and ride home safely."

shifted sideways.

Blood tests the next morning showed her blood alcohol content was .06, and she had cocaine in her system.

Defense alleges Dean did not slip the victim drugs and that all sexual activity was consensual.

Dean was arrested near his home May 9 for two felony counts of aggravated criminal sodomy and two counts of criminal restraint. He was released from the Riley County jail on a $15,000 bond.

Prosecutors dropped the second felony count charge prior to his preliminary hearing Nov. 15.

Dean Liquor was at the corner of 12th and Laramie streets. Dean sold the liquor store in June, he previously said, so he and his wife could move to a larger city where she could utilize her interior design degree.

Courses cut due to budget temporary faculty or graduate students, which would help conserve funds, Aistrup said.

Even if the department is forced to make cuts, though, Aistrup said it will not hinder students' ability to graduate on time.

"Sometimes a professor goes on sabbatical and leaves a class vacant," he said. "If a student was planning on that class to graduate, oftentimes we'll allow them to substitute something else in there. I imagine this would create a similar situation."

Cook, who already had one of his elective classes dropped because of budget cuts, said the cuts the university is being forced to endure are unfortunate for students and faculty alike.

"It's disheartening," Cook said.

"It's frustrating. There's not really anything we can do. It's the middle of the fiscal year, so we can't raise taxes to compensate. We'll just have to accept the cuts and do the best we can."

WNIT | Women avoid upset bug, cruise past No. 14 Lady Lions to claim WNIT championship

88-66 Sunday night in Bramlage Coliseum, claiming the Women's National Invitational Tournament and capturing the trophy – proving they were, in fact, champions.

"I think I speak for us all – we are just so happy," junior center Nicole Ohlde said. "It's just such a high."

Sophomore Kendra Wecker nabbed the Most Valuable Player award for the tournament, scoring a career-high 26.

"Kendra Wecker was absolutely tremendous, phenomenal, extraordinary, exciting, pleasing to watch, dominating. She was an absolute champion on the floor tonight," Coach Deb Patterson said.

"Her early assertion on the offensive boards gave us great spark. Defensively, she boarded the ball at a very high level. Her second-half aggressiveness, jump shooting, penetration to the rim absolutely put Penn State's defense on its heels. She was virtually unstoppable tonight.

"Kendra Wecker was unbelievably tremendous is the total sense tonight. She is so deserving of MVP of a national-caliber tournament championship."

Wecker had a worthy supporting cast as well.

Laurie Koehn had 23 points, Ohlde – who was also named to the all-tournament team – had 17 points and 10 rebounds, and Megan Mahoney chipped in 16 points and seven boards.

The four-punch knockout

K-State had four players score in double figures in Sunday's 88-66 win over Penn State.

- Kendra Wecker
  26 points, 14 rebounds
- Laurie Koehn
  23 points, 8-of-17 shooting
- Nicole Ohlde
  17 points, 10 rebounds
- Megan Mahoney
  16 points, 7 rebounds

But Penn State coach Rene Portland said she was blown away by Wecker's ability.

"I'd take her in a foxhole with me," she said. "There's Koehn out there shooting finessely, your inside player shoots finessely, and I guess I wouldn't want finesse with her because she just does it all.

"She goes to the boards, she bangs hard, she's an emotional leader. The never-say-die attitude is written all over that child."

While Wecker was stealing the show offensively, K-State's perimeter players were keeping the Lady Lions in check defensively.

The nation's leading scorer from last season, Kelly Mazzante, was held to only 18 points on the night – shooting just six of 19 from the field.

Coming into the game, Mazzante was averaging nearly 30 points a contest.

Mahoney said the Cats picked it up in the second half.

"Coach P. talked about putting the nail in the coffin," she said. "We just strung together some defensive stops and got some makes, and I think we just fed off that and kept going."

For the Lady Lions, sophomore Tanisha Wright picked up the slack Mazzante left, scoring 26 points, including 19 in the first half.

Wecker and Wright dueled all night, trying to better one another on the offensive end.

Even after a hard foul down low, it was Wecker and Wright who stood nose to nose, representing the well-being of their respective teams.

"She's a good player," Wecker said. "She's flashy and she's got a lot of fakes, so we just tried to contain her – she was definitely aggressive."

Patterson said the Wecker of old would have been flustered with Wright in her face and on her hip.

But the Wecker of 2002 is a different player.

"Kendra is an intense competitor," Patterson said. "She knows what it means to be focused. She's matured as a competitor.

"A year ago, she may have been rattled by the presence of a Tanisha Wright going by her or scoring."

After the altercation with Wright, Patterson chose to leave her sophomore in, while Portland sat Wright for an extensive period of time.

"It makes me very comfortable knowing I can keep Kendra Wecker on the court," Patterson said. "That's a huge step of confidence in her knowing that, competitively, she will not allow herself to be mentally rattled."

Wecker said it's all about playing off the positives.

The Wildcats are champions for the first time, and in a tournament atmosphere with things going their way, the Cats couldn't help but get excited, she said.

"We were pretty fired up from the very beginning," Wecker said. "Laurie was knocking down threes, Megan was knocking down threes and when the crowd does their little 'For 3' thing, it just roars.

"It just gets the blood pumping – it was just awesome all game."

Mahoney clamps down on Penn State scoring machine, posts big numbers

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As K-State was preparing to tackle the Penn State Lady Lions Sunday night, it's a good bet the coaches and players had one specific goal in mind – contain Kelly Mazzante.

That wasn't going to be easy, as Mazzante, the NCAA's leading scorer in 2001-02, came to Manhattan averaging 29.8 points per game.

But the Wildcats did contain her, holding the junior to 18 points on the way to a 88-66 Women's National Invitational Tournament championship.

Sophomore Megan Mahoney, aided at times by her teammates, was the player who got the Mazzante assignment.

Mahoney, while containing Mazzante, was also able to contribute 16 points, seven rebounds, four assists, a block and a steal.

Mahoney said the Wildcats were well aware of the importance of limiting Mazzante's production.

"We knew coming in that she is just a tremendous player," she said. "So when we were playing man, I was just trying to stay on her and not let her get easy looks.

"You can't stop her, because she's such a great player. But I think she was a little frustrated because she wasn't getting as many looks as she usually does."

Mazzante credited Mahoney with a good defensive effort.

"She was pretty much taking herself away from the rest of the defense and looking me right in the eye," Mazzante said. "Everywhere I went, she went."

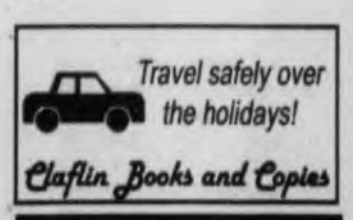
While Mazzante was hardly shut down, picking up four rebounds, an assist and a steal on her way to 18 points, Mahoney and the Wildcat defense were able to hold the junior standout to a dismal six of 19 from the field.

Coach Deb Patterson said that limiting the effectiveness of Mazzante was part of an excellent perimeter defense displayed by the Wildcats on Sunday night.

"I thought we were effective against a very potent scoring basketball team in Penn State," Patterson said. "We just felt like they had so many people on the floor who could hurt you. First and foremost, Mazzante.

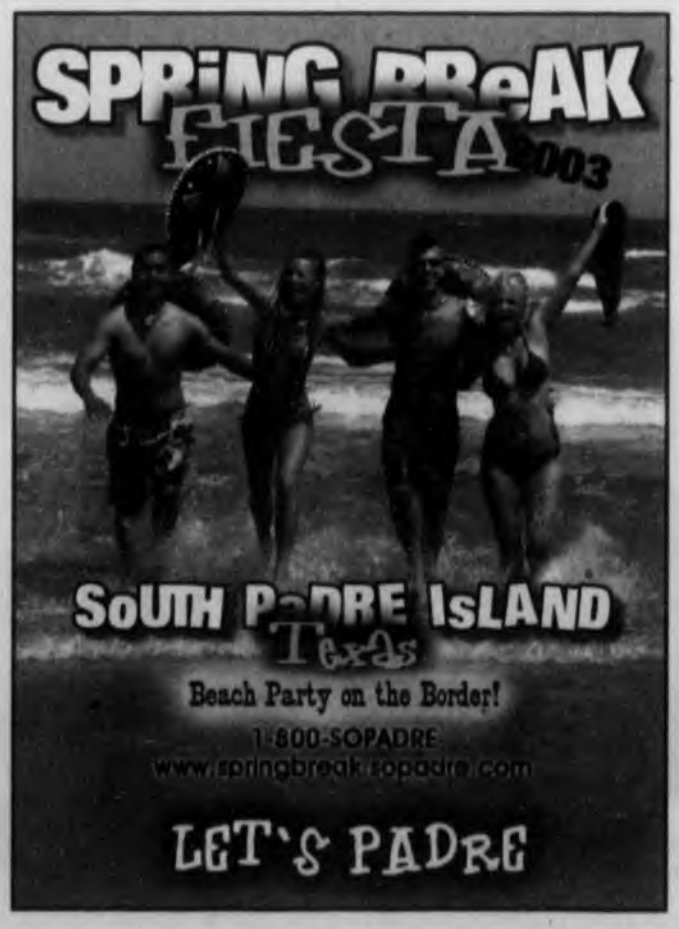
"And you know going in you're not going to be able to stop a quality player like her, so containment is critical. And I thought our perimeter defenders did a nice job of containing."

Penn State coach Rene Portland said pressure defense on Mazzante frustrated the Lady Lion attack.

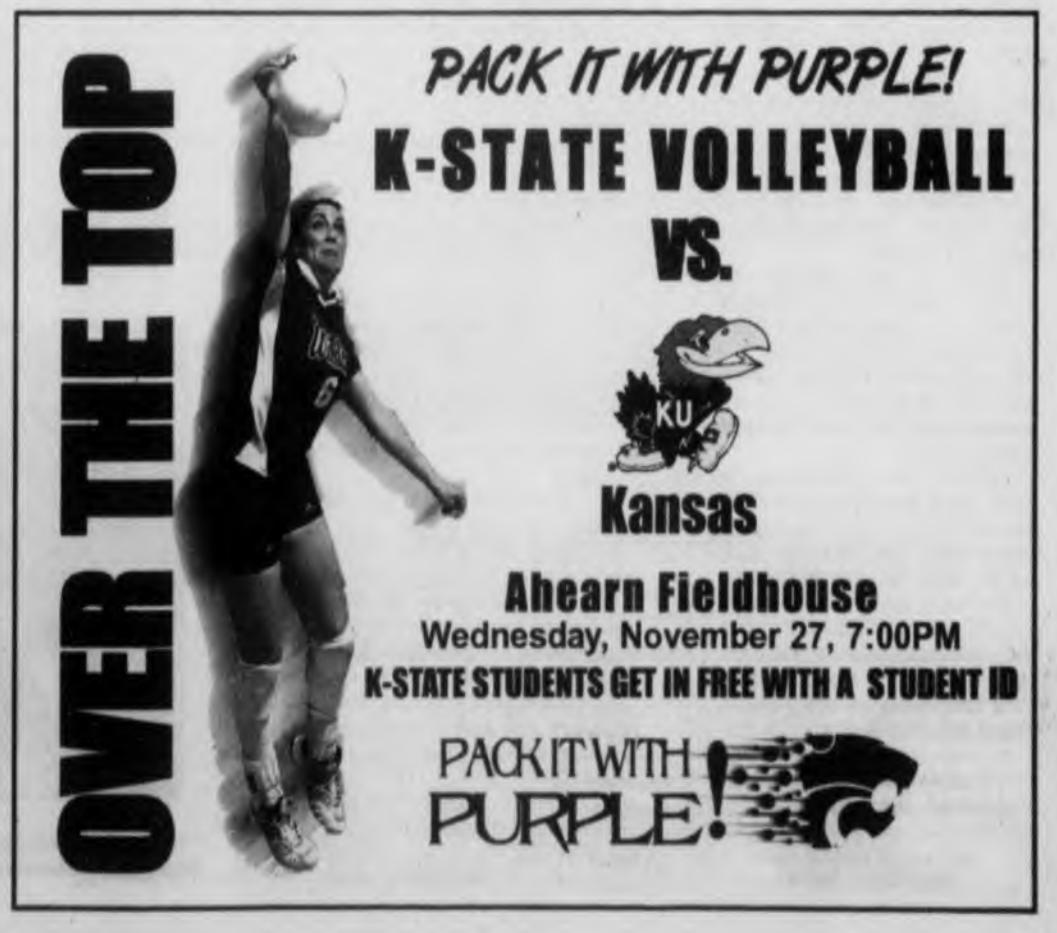


"It happened all last year," she said. "As the nation's leading scorer, Kelly saw not only double teams but boxes and ones.

"You saw, obviously, a very physical game against her. Point of emphasis on off-the-ball contact is very difficult for us to watch sometimes."



Mahoney, one of four Wildcats to score in double digits, said that stopping Mazzante was something she and K-State wanted to do for the fans.



"We understood coming in that she is their leading scorer," Mahoney said. "But really, it wasn't all about her because they have other good players. It got us motivated to be here at home, that our fans supported us.

"We had the opportunity to come and play here in a championship game. Our team has never been able to do that before. We were really excited about that."

The last time No. 19 K-State lost a match, it was against Texas on Sept. 28.

That was 13 wins ago, a streak that tied a 25-year-old school record for consecutive wins.

So it was only fitting that the chance to break that record would be against the last team to beat the Wildcats.

However, this time around wasn't much better.

The Longhorns beat the Cats in three of four games (24-30, 30-20, 30-22, 30-25) Saturday night in Austin, Texas – snapping the Cats' 13-match winning streak.

Coach Suzie Fritz said the Wildcats just couldn't get their offense going.

"Texas is a very physical team, and we just didn't play well enough to win," she said. "We didn't have the power we needed to win because we weren't passing very well.

"We weren't able to force them out of their system, and they beat us."

The loss not only ended the longest winning streak in 25 years but also snapped the program's 12-match road conference winning streak.

Coupled with Saturday night's loss to BYU, K-State (0-2) opened the season with back-to-back setbacks for the first time since 1983-84 campaign, when the Wildcats dropped consecutive games to Loyola-Chicago and Utah at the Tribune Charties Tournament in Chicago.

Nick Moore scored 19 points and Keith Triplett added 11 points to lead Toledo. Sammy Villegas added 10 points for the Rockets (1-1), who scored the game's first 12 points and led the contest wire-to-wire.

Pervis Pasco chipped in with eight points before fouling out with 2:47 remaining. Jarrett Hart and Tim Ellis each tallied seven for the Wildcats.

Shutout gives Cats 5th 10-win season in 6 years

COLUMBIA, Mo. – It was the same story Saturday for the Cats – just a different week and opponent.

Just another day at the office for the 10th-ranked team in the nation, nothing to get too excited about.

K-State shut out bowl-eligibility-seeking Missouri 38-0 Saturday at Faurot Field, culminating a five-week stretch of dominating football for the Wildcats.

Coach Bill Snyder said after the game that he was proud of the way his players performed under the pressure of finishing the regular season on a positive note.

Milestone for the "Tough Nut"

Darren Sproles became the single-season rushing leader for K-State with his 116-yard outing against Missouri on Saturday. Here is a comparison to the great backs of past seasons.

1. Darren Sproles 1,347
2. Josh Scobey (2001) 1,263
3. Isaac Jackson (1973) 1,137
4. Eric Gallon (1991) 1,102
5. J.J. Smith (1994) 1,073
8. Ell Roberson 969

"We got off to a good start, but we traded in the good start for slowing down a little bit," he said. "There was a big lull in there after 10 points, and it took a while to get back on the board again. But great play out of our special teams is really what it boiled down to."

The Wildcats' special teams unit reared its powerful head the first chance it got – the opening Wildcat possession – as Terence Newman took Missouri's opening punt 71 yards for the score.

It was Newman's second punt return for a touchdown this season. The last time he accomplished the feat was against Louisiana-Monroe on Sept. 7.

From then on, it was control football for the Cats.

K-State had scoring drives of 7:09, 3:00, 4:26, 5:52 and 6:29 – eating up

COLUMBIA, Mo. – In the third quarter of Saturday's game, K-State senior Terence Newman put on a show.

The Missouri Tigers were on the way to a 38-0 rout, and the Tigers' All-Big-12 wide receiver, Justin Gage, had been completely shut out of the game. Trailing by 24, they looked to him to spark a comeback.

Mizzou quarterback Brad Smith threw the ball deep to Gage with 10 minutes left in the third quarter. Gage ran a deep post, and Newman stayed with him every step of the way.

In the tight coverage, the pass bounced incomplete.

Character sacrificed for product placement, flashy stunts

"DIE ANOTHER DAY"

Movie review By Adam Lee

As far as charisma and talent are concerned, Pierce Brosnan is right up there with Roger Moore and Sean Connery.

But Brosnan's Bond movies are pale compared to his predecessors' because writing a clever spy screenplay has become a lost art.

"Die Another Day" is another forgettable installment in the series of heinous follow-ups to the foundation of the contemporary Bond and his greatest portrayal, "Goldeneye."

007 is arguably cinema's most timeless character, but "Tomorrow Never Dies," "The World is Not Enough" and now "Die Another Day" have proven that the modern movie industry has no use for the classic Bond.

By transforming the world's most suave secret agent into the world's flashiest advertising spokesman, the current film makers have raped the icon and offered nothing to the legacy.

In his never-ending war on communism, Bond's latest assignment takes him to North Korea to stop a shipment of contraband diamonds.

In an unusual display of ineptness, Bond blows the mission and is captured by the North Koreans. Aside from Madonna's fantastic theme song, the opening credits are also a disappointment, focusing more on Bond being tortured than the typical nude silhouettes.

Another load is forced down the throat when time jumps forward 14 months, and the greatest escape artist since Houdini is still being held in a primitive jail cell.

Bond finally is released in an exchange for one of the film's villains, a diamond-faced North Korean agent. Mi6 terminates Bond's double-0 status because they believe he cracked during interrogation.

So Bond goes solo, spanning the globe to clear his name and deliver capitalism from evil.

The Bond team has apparently forgotten that dynamic villains are more valuable than big names. The movie's nemesis and his plot for world domination are completely disposable.

And Halle Barry, the biggest star ever to become a Bond girl, is even more unconvincing than she was in "Swordfish." And in this movie, she doesn't get topless.

After 40 years, 20 movies and five actors, James Bond has now reached the zenith of bastardization. The stealth, cunningness and refinement of the Bond archetype have been shamelessly abandoned for extreme sports, explosions and product placement.

It's said that a culture can be graded by those it chooses to glorify. So, if the free world has to be saved by such a superficial hero, is it really worth saving?

DOGG TIRED

Snoop Dogg gets plenty of help giving new album hooks

Snoop Dogg might be played out, but he knows how to recruit talent.

Chalk up another hip-hop smash single to the production team of the Neptunes. After all, they're the real stars of Snoop Dogg's party single "From the Chuuuch to da Palace." Snoop recruited not only the Neptunes but also Jelly Roll and Hi-Tek among others to produce "Paid tha Cost to be da Bo$$."

The cuts with the most appeal, however, are noticeably elevated by the talent in the production and sampling.

In all seriousness, you might as well go buy the single of "Chuuuch to da Palace," instead of wading through the whole album. Backed with a catchy hook that has Neptunes written all over it, it's easily the best track on this mediocre album.

The record is otherwise filled with not-so-memorable rhymes about pimping, sex and bragging about how long Snoop has been around. At least he never sinks to the level of bling-bling.

A few things save the album from being totally forgettable. First,

"PAID THA COST TO BE DA BO$$"

★★½☆☆

Album review By JJ Duncan

Snoop's love of funk keeps the mix more interesting with highlights like the Parliament-sampling "Stoplight."

Second, he's got the kind of natural making-this-look-easy flow that more recent hip-hop artists have discarded. Third, he plays the part of the pimp so well on the album that it comes off as almost a comical musical version of blaxploitation.

Still, Snoop will never have another "Doggy Style" unless Dr. Dre lays down a few keyboard samples before Snoop starts to rhyme again.

The material that made the final cut does not justify the 20 tracks on the album.

Most of the tracks feature Snoop's usual sex-rhymes in songs like "Wasn't Your Fault" and "Lollipop."

The obligatory trash talking is more poignant here than usual. Where some rappers aim their aggression at nameless faces of personal oppression and frustration, Snoop has a target everyone knows. The trash talked on Suge Knight in the last couple of tracks is made more poignant by well-known personal associations, as well as Snoop's powerfully smooth funk of "Pimp Slapp'd."

It's not the best hip-hop album out right now, sitting next to Missy's latest release and the "8 Mile" soundtrack. It doesn't live up to Snoop's earlier work. But for fans of Snoop's early-'90s style, "Paid tha Cost to be da Bo$$" is worth checking out, but mostly because of production from some of the hottest behind-the-scenes names in the industry.

a total time of 39:53 for the game.

Each drive had a different feel to it, too.

Some were pass oriented. Some focused more on the run.

But in nearly all, K-State's offense was able to have some sort of success.

Quarterback Ell Roberson said the offense has become more balanced with each opportunity.

"Option isn't all that we have," he said. "I think if they try to stop one thing, we are going to hit them with something else. That's kind of what we have been going through lately.

"If you want to stop the option, that's fine – we'll just hit you with something else. If you want to stop the pass, we'll run the ball. It's basically whatever you are going to present to us, we're going to have something for it."

Roberson threw for 244 yards on the day, a season-high for him. He also rushed for 71 yards, leaving him just 31 from breaking the 1,000-yard rush barrier.

His counterpart, Darren Sproles, did his job once again, as well.

Sproles rushed for 116 yards, eclipsing Josh Scobey as K-State's single-season rushing leader.

Roberson said the dynamic duo of Roberson and Sproles is becoming more lethal by the week.

"It's great having a guy that can run the ball the way he is," Roberson said. "And with me being able to chuck the ball and he getting some good runs for us, it makes our offense really good."

Defensively, K-State was in top form, recording its third shutout of the season. The Cats shut out Louisiana-Monroe (68-0) and Kansas (64-0) prior to Saturday's blanking.

In fact, the zero on the scoreboard may have just been an exclamation point.

Missouri's offense crossed into K-State territory only twice on the afternoon.

Could this defense be the best in the nation right now? Wildcat players seem to think so.

"Statistics and all – I don't know," linebacker Josh Buhl said.

"But us playing as a defense together, I think we're one of the best, if not the best."

Averaging nearly 405 yards of total offense per game, K-State held Missouri to just 191 total yards on Saturday.

Tigers quarterback Brad Smith was accounting for 291.5 of those yards coming in.

The Cats contained him to just 156.

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said the defensive success against Missouri was due to keeping Smith in check.

"We really used the same game plan as we did against (Seneca) Wallace at Iowa State," he said. "Just keep him in tight and not let him get outside.

"Our front four is pretty good, and they do a good job of containing. We didn't have to call a lot of fancy stuff. It was just a situation where they played well and played the techniques they have been taught."

With a few bumps in the road, the Cats have played well this regular season.

The win over Missouri allowed the 2002 team to become just the seventh Wildcat squad to amass 10 wins in a year.

After a difficult loss to Texas five weeks ago, and following a 6-6 season in 2001, double-digit wins may not have looked so likely to some people, Snyder said.

He said that's what he talked to his team about after the game.

"The theme was that all of these young guys, for the most part, the ones that are here today, 99 percent of them were in this program a year ago when it was a 6-6 football team," Snyder said. "It's my feeling that they have learned some valuable lessons. What I share with them quite frequently is that the only real losers in life are the ones that don't learn from the mistakes that we make.

"I think they took to heart some of the things that took place last year, and it wasn't bad things. It was just a lot of people in our program took some things for granted and just felt that all you had to do was put on purple and things were going to play out – it was just going to happen. We were somehow going to pull the magic string, and it was going to all work out. It didn't. Then our players realized that if things are going to happen, you have to make them happen."

Now that K-State has done what it can do, the team can sit back and just see how everything plays out, offensive coordinator Ron Hudson said.

Bowl selections will be announced Dec. 8. On that day, eight teams will be selected to go to BCS bowl games.

Hudson said K-State is playing like it deserves one of those eight spots.

"Quite frankly, you look at the people we've beaten over the past few weeks and their records, and we're playing very well," he said.

"It's unfortunate those seven points we don't have are keeping us from getting in the BCS, but stranger things have happened, so you never know."

its fourth-lowest hitting percentage of the season with 56 kills on .152 hitting. It was the lowest since hitting .104 against the Longhorns back in late September.

Fritz said it was K-State's poor passing that led to poor hitting numbers.

She said junior middle blocker Lauren Goehring did the best job on offense, though. Goehring led the Wildcats with a team-high 17 kills on .429 hitting.

While Goehring said she had no trouble connecting with sophomore setter Gabby Guerre, the other Cats weren't getting such good sets.

"I felt I connected pretty well with Gabby, but there were others who were not hitting as effective as usual," she said. "The sets were difficult – Gabby was pushing the ball outside, and that is not going to help us get kills. We just weren't executing well."

The Wildcats also tallied double-digit service errors for the first time in 20 matches with 13 on the night. It was the most since registering a season-worst 17 against South Florida on Sept. 13.

Texas was able to hit a little better (.202) in the match – with 59 kills and 66 digs – but the biggest difference came by way of blocks. Texas out-stuffed 13-7.5.

Despite the loss, K-State still controls its own destiny for sole possession for second place in the conference. The Cats can lock up second with a win against either Kansas or Nebraska – their last matches of the season.

K-State returns to Big 12 Conference play Wednesday, as the Wildcats play host to archrival Kansas (18-7, 9-7 Big 12) at 7 p.m. at Ahearn Field House.

After trailing 32-23 at the break and by as many as 11 with 14 minutes to play, four different Wildcats combined to spark an 18-9 run that pulled K-State within a bucket at 47-45 with 6:46 remaining.

DeJesus connected on a pair of treys during the spurt.

But a 3-pointer by Triplet on Toledo's next possession put the Rockets back up by five and K-State was unable to get any closer than three the rest of the way.

Toledo, which finished the game with a sparkling 20-for-23 from the foul line, put to rest any late comeback notions the Cats had, canning eight of eight from the stripe during the final four minutes.

K-State meets the loser of tonight's Michigan-Virginia Tech battle at 2 p.m. Monday during the first game of the tournament's championship round.

BYU 73, K-State 64

Marques Hayden scored a game-high 20 points and grabbed eight rebounds in his college debut and Tim Ellis added 14 points off the bench, but it wasn't enough to stop a huge Brigham Young comeback in the second half as the Cougars outlasted K-State, 73-64, before 2,372 Saturday night at the Paradise Jam.

The loss marked the first time K-State (0-1) has dropped a season opener under Coach Jim Wooldridge.

Travis Hanson led BYU (2-0) with 19 points on 6-for-11 shooting before being ejected after a double technical foul with 8:48 to go.

Mark Bigelow finished with 18 points and Jared Jensen added 10 points for the Cougars, who trailed K-State 36-31 at the break before connecting on their first seven shots of the second half during a 16-4 run that put BYU on top 47-40 with just under 15 minutes remaining.

The Cougars' lead would swell to as many as eight before Hayden, who scored 14 of his points in the second half, almost single-handedly rallied the Wildcats with 12 straight K-State points for a 54-53 lead with 8:50 showing on the clock.

NEWMAN | Senior DB shines on defense, special teams against Tigers

On the Tigers' next possession, Smith again looked deep for the Big 12 record holding Gage.

Twice he tried to sneak the ball in. Both times, Newman was glued to Gage, and both times, the ball tumbled to the turf.

Coming into the game, Gage already was an accomplished receiver. He holds the Big 12 record for career receptions (198) and receiving yards (2,648). He has caught a pass in every game that he has ever played in at the receiver spot.

But by the time the game was over, Newman and the rest of the K-State secondary limited Gage to only two catches for 56 yards. Smith tried to throw the ball to him 11 times.

What started as a logical matchup – Newman, the Cats' best, on Gage, the Tigers' best – developed into a full-scale war by the third quarter, Missouri coach Gary Pinkel said.

"It was a battle," he said. "Newman is obviously a great player. There's no doubt about that."

Newman's day

Cornerback Terence Newman was everywhere Saturday afternoon, returning a punt for a TD, getting an interception and shutting down one of the best receivers in the nation. Here is a look at his day.

- 71-yard punt return for a touchdown (first score of the day)
- 3-yard interception return (5th of the season, 10th of his career)
- Two receptions for Justin Gage (averages nearly 7.5 per game)

The battle between Newman and Gage raged into the fourth quarter. Gage did, however, get his first reception of the day on the last play of the third quarter. It was a screen that went for 0 yards.

In the fourth quarter, Gage made his biggest contribution of the day. Smith handed the ball to a running back, and then had it pitched back to him. Newman had bitten on the running-back fake, and Gage sailed by. Smith hit Gage, and the play went for 56 yards before Newman caught up at the K-State 14-yard line.

It was Newman's only blemish, Coach Bill Snyder said.

"Obviously, he did quite well. But Gage is a tremendous player," Snyder said. "We all understand that, so in order to shut him down – I assume it was Gage who caught the long one – he put Terence to sleep on that one. We were up playing the run when we should have been playing the pass. Aside from that, we really did a great job."

While Gage was able to find yards on that play, he was pretty much shut out the rest of the day. While he came into the game hoping to help his team secure a bowl game and close out the book on his record-breaking Tiger career, Gage found that it was he who was nearly closed out.

For that, Gage agreed with Snyder and praised Newman's performance.

"I credit him. He played hard out there," Gage said.

"I give him the credit. He ended up on the winning side of it out there. It was a good battle."

Newman complemented his near-shutout performance on Gage with a second-quarter interception and a first-quarter punt return for a touchdown. For the interception, he dove in front of a Mizzou receiver, snatched the ball and returned it three yards. It was Newman's fifth interception on the season.

On the punt return, Newman fielded the ball, looked up and saw an open running lane. He sprinted down the middle of the field and went into the end zone untouched and unchallenged.

The score put the Cats up 6-0 and set up a lead K-State would never lose.

Newman played his last regular season game for the Wildcats on Saturday, and he did so in a nearly perfect manner, defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said. He said he was excellent in coverage and special teams.

"(Gage) got him on a crack-and-go one time. Other than that, I thought Terence was really good," he said. "You know they threw it and threw it to him – tried to force the ball to him.

"Terence is the best in the country, in my opinion – best I've ever seen. He was up to the challenge today."

K-State to cut more

Officials search for places to slash budget

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the week begins, the K-State administration is once again charged with the responsibility of slashing K-State's budget, this time by more than $6.4 million. Previous cuts for this fiscal year already have left the university with $9.3 million less spending power.

State agencies and higher education took the deepest cuts as Gov. Bill Graves made known $78 million in spending cuts in an announcement Tuesday. Graves also cut revenue sharing money for city and county governments by $48 million. Public schools, grades K-12, were left untouched.

The state of Kansas currently has a $310 million shortfall, and the cuts will alleviate most of the deficit.

In a statement released Wednesday, President Jon Wefald expressed concerns about the amount of funding Kansas' higher education has lost this year.

"All of us at K-State are disappointed with the governor's budget cuts for public higher education. With the governor's latest budget rescissions, the state universities of Kansas have now lost $51.6 million," Wefald said in the press release.

'Voice of Kansas State University' signs off after 78 years

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KKSU signed off for the last time Wednesday evening, ending its 78-year history as the "voice of Kansas State University."

In August, K-State officials sold KKSU to WIBW, owned by Morris Communications, for $1.2 million over a dispute about K-State football broadcasting rights. KKSU has served as public radio station since 1924, funded by the College of Agriculture, and it was utilized as an outreach tool for agricultural and family-life issues.

Larry Jackson, station manager, said that although the last day was sad, he and his staff are looking forward to creating a future for the station's mission.

"We haven't had a chance to concentrate on our future," Jackson said. "Trying to get to this point has required a lot of effort. Back in August, when the announcement was made, it was surprise and a certain amount of anger. There was a feeling that those making the decisions did not understand the value of what was being given up."

But the KKSU staff soon realized the sale was a reality and that their jobs would never be the same.

"At that point, the die was cast," Jackson said. "It was inevitable. It is sadness today and a realization that the routine is gone. All of a sudden we don't have a deadline to meet. The job of being the press, we won't have for awhile."

With no deadlines, KKSU has kept its mission but changed the means of getting that message delivered.

Richard Baker, news director, said the station's managers have been contacting commercial radio stations across Kansas to establish contracts to broadcast programs that would be produced

World AIDS Day supporters reach out to end discrimination

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jamie Morales wants to work with animals because, growing up, her pets were always her best friends.

"Throughout my whole life I've always had a pet," said Morales, freshman in biology and psychology. "Unlike my family, my pets never left me."

Morales had three family members die of AIDS. Her mother died when Morales was 7. She also has lost a godfather and an uncle to the disease, and her father is living with the virus.

Morales, along with K-State students and faculty, recognized World AIDS Day on Sunday.

Morales could relate to the theme of World AIDS Day, "Stigma and Discrimination," due to her own experiences.

"The rest of my family rejected me because of my parents," she said.

Attendants of the World AIDS Day service at the First Congregational Church share the Candle of Hope.

A year after her mother died, Morales was adopted and moved from California to Kansas.

Morales' adoptive mother, Sandy Hysom, worked with AIDS programs through the American Red Cross. At age 8, Morales started working with the same programs and has since spoken to more than 18,000 people around the world, educating them about AIDS.

"A lot of people think it can't happen to them," Morales said. "I think it's important to know how it infects those who have it and how it affects those who don't. It's the disease of choice – it's not something anybody has to have."

Morales said AIDS is a disease "of choice" because people choose to put themselves at risk.

Carol Kennedy, director of health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center, said there are two primary ways to reduce risky behavior – avoid unprotected sexual contact and avoid injectable drug use.

"AIDS affects everybody – not every-

International students help local economy, despite myths

ESU study provides suggestions on how to increase city's revenue

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About $17.6 million is brought to the Manhattan area by international students, according to a recent study from the Jones Institute for Educational Excellence at Emporia State University.

"When you take a look at the budget," Keith Geiger, author of the study, said, "that's a big chunk."

Geiger, former university distinguished professor at Emporia State, said more than 80 percent of this money comes from the students' home countries, with the final 20 percent coming from university tuition waivers or scholarships.

The study took into account money spent on tuition, housing, food and supplies, Geiger said, to show how much international students contribute to American universities and businesses.

"It's a common misconception that international students are a drain on our economy," he said. "But this study shows they actually give it a big boost."

One trend the study showed, Geiger said, is that more international students are attending American community colleges, while fewer are attending four-year colleges and universities.

"It's often cheaper," Geiger said. "And English as a second language is easier to learn in smaller classes. Many countries are just now finding out about the community college system, so some of these students are here to learn about it, and they'll go back and set up community colleges in their own country."

Despite this trend toward community colleges, K-State increased enrollment of international students from 1,121 in 2001 to 1,168 in 2002, according to the Association of International Educators' annual report at

Dean pleads innocent

Owner of former Dean Liquor to face charges in April

By Nancy Foster
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kent Dean, who owned former Dean Liquor in Aggieville, pleaded innocent to charges of aggravated criminal sodomy and criminal restraint at his arraignment hearing Nov. 25.

A pretrial was set for March 17, and a jury trial was set for April 1-3.

Dean, 38, who owned the liquor store for 11 years, is being charged with one felony count of aggravated criminal sodomy and two misdemeanor counts of criminal restraint.

Assistant Riley County Attorney Valerie Peterson said the pretrial allows the judge to make sure defense and prosecution are ready for trial. The judge also will address any motions filed.

Prosecutors allege that on Jan. 6, 2002, Dean engaged in sexual acts with a 22-year-old woman who was incapable of giving consent due to drugs and alcohol. They also allege Dean slipped cocaine into the woman's drink.

Allegedly, Dean invited two women, both 22, to his liquor

Pressing enthusiasts compete in 1st World Extreme Ironing Championship

By Chuck Shepherd
UNIVERSAL NEWS SYNDICATE

Jeanel Drake | COLLEGIAN

Inga Kosak won the first World Extreme Ironing Championship in September in Munich, beating 80 contestants from 10 countries, who are judged on the degree of difficulty they can create for themselves in order to iron. One ironed while bouncing on a trampoline, another while surfing on a river, and another hanging upside down from a tree. Enthusiasts have photos of themselves ironing in remote mountain locations, where power for the steam iron must come from a generator. The activity's founder, Phil Shaw, says he does it because ironing itself is particularly boring.

Democracy in action

Mike Rucker, running for county commissioner in Tallahassee, Fla., apologized for urinating in a voter's yard in October, attributing it to a prostate problem and not anger that the voter had moments earlier refused to post Rucker's campaign sign. And Republican Lamar Alexander, running for the U.S. Senate in Tennessee, reportedly turned a hand-shaking opportunity into a hand-squeezing contest with an opposition voter who had mischievously slipped Alexander a Democratic brochure in Dickson, Tenn., in October. And Makinka Moye, running for city supervisor in San Francisco, was revealed by the Bay Area Reporter in September to have been arrested earlier this year for bludgeoning and butchering a goat on a vacant lot near a recreation center.

Leading economic indicators

Clothing Trends from an October Wall Street Journal dispatch from Seoul: an aloe vera bra and underwear set to continually lubricate the skin for up to 40 washings from Triumph International in the United Kingdom; menstrual-pain-reducing pants from the B.L. Korea Co.; Ki business suits, with charcoal and jade powder sewn into the armpits and crotch, to block computer-screen radiation and boost energy from Cheil Industries Inc.; and "yellow earth" boxer shorts, with a sewn-in special soil that supposedly emits infrared rays that cut odor and improve circulation from Kolon Corp.

Michael Carroll, 19, of Norfolk County, England, won that country's national lottery equivalent to $41 million in November and said he hopes the money will be an incentive to overcome the life of petty crime he has led for the last several years, including drunk and disorderly conduct, vandalization of a school bus, car theft, other theft and driving without a license. He cannot celebrate his win at a pub, nor drive his new car, because judicial restrictions are still in force from his last sentence.

Latest rights

In October, Australian serial killer Ivan Milat complained to a state commission, asking the equivalent of $22,000, for a violation of his human rights. Milat, serving seven life sentences for seven murders, had swallowed some razor blades in a 2001 incident and now complains that prison officials' releasing his X-rays to the media was an invasion of his privacy.

In November, coroner Nigel Meadows of Plymouth, England, ruled that the 18-years-dead corpse of Edwin MacKenzie was actually the personal property of the recently deceased artist Robert Lenkiewicz and thus should go to Lenkiewicz's estate. MacKenzie was Lenkiewicz's helper for many years, and when he died without heirs, Lenkiewicz took possession of the body, had it embalmed, and used it in various art projects, and Lenkiewicz's executor is said to be considering using it in a memorial display of the artist's work.

Least competent criminals

Masters of technology: Burglars hit the K Bros. Service Station in Everson, Pa., in November and lugged away the lottery-ticket machine, perhaps hoping to print themselves some winning tickets; a lottery spokesman said the machine only works when it's hooked up to lottery headquarters. And Baptist minister James Andrew Smith, 42, was arrested in Fort Worth, Texas, in November for a September graphics presentation; he had clicked the wrong line and inadvertently called up a photograph of a nude boy, which led to a search that police said yielded much child pornography.

Recurring themes

News of the Weird reported in March that jail officials in Arapahoe County, Colo., had inadvertently placed a 16-year-old girl in a holding cell with a man suspected of several sexual assaults. In August, officials at the same Arapahoe jail inadvertently placed accused killer Edward Brown, 21, in the same cell with a witness against him, Martin Brewer, 21, whereupon Brown allegedly beat up Brewer, breaking his nose.

That still happens?

In September, Peru congressman Eittel Ramos challenged Vice President David Waisman to a duel using pistols. And British motorcyclist Leon Humphreys, angered at a vehicle registration problem, challenged an unidentified bureaucrat to a duel with unspecified weapons. And Omaha, Neb., contractor Art Dore Sr., challenged business rival Virgil Anderson to a boxing match to finally settle their ongoing disputes about municipal demolition contracts.

Thinning the herd

At dawn on Sept. 29 in Hood River County, Ore., a 58-year-old hunter was accidentally shot to death by another hunter who mistook him for a black bear, perhaps made easier by the victim's all-black clothing. And a 28-year-old man stopped his truck on a road in the Mojave Desert near Needles, Calif., in September, grabbed some beer, and went hiking in the midday sun and died of dehydration. And a 32-year-old man was killed in October in Santa Cruz, Calif., when he fell from a hotel balcony, from which he had been hanging while shouting to his friends, "Look at this."

Students Having Smarter Sex, Says New Survey, But More Education Needed smartersex.org

New research about the sexual habits of students is offering a positive look at what might really be happening behind closed doors.

New survey results suggest students ages 18-24 take sex and monogamy seriously and that more men than women in this age group say they are virgins. The survey also showed that most students know the basics of "safe and smart" sex (using both barrier and hormonal contraceptives), but there is still a need for more communication and reliable resources.

For the Smarter Sex Survey, sponsored by Bacchus and Gamma Peer Education Network and Pharmacia Corporation, makers of DEPO-PROVERA® Contraceptive Injection (medroxy-progesterone acetate injectable suspension), 1,051 men and women ages 18-24, currently enrolled in school, participated in an online survey that asked about various sexual topics ranging from contraception to sexually transmitted infections (STIs).

The survey revealed that about 34 percent of males surveyed have not had sex, compared to 18 percent of females surveyed -in part because more women than men reported being in monogamous relationships. In general, both men and women scored well when asked about STIs, HIV, and contraception - with 89 percent agreeing that monogamous couples should get first tested for HIV before they stop using condoms.

Likewise, men and women share similar views on relationships, emphasizing the importance of monogamy and healthy relationships. On average, those surveyed had 1.2 sexual partners during the last year.

"The good news is that most students have the knowledge they need to make smart sexual health decisions. But more information is always beneficial," says Drew Hunter, executive director, Bacchus and Gamma. "If students truly know the facts, we should see a further reduction in unintended pregnancy and STI transmission rates."

To provide more information about smart and safe sex, a new website, www.Smartersex.org has been established to help college students manage their sexual health safely and smartly.

Survey results suggest that three out of four women (73 percent) do not use a condom as a back-up method when they have missed a birth control pill - the form of birth control used by most women surveyed. And, more than half of the survey participants (62 percent) believe they can tell if someone has an STI "just by looking," even though the two most common STIs, chlamydia and HPV, may not exhibit any noticeable symptoms.

"A problem is that women and their partners don't always use contraception correctly or consistently, which puts them at risk," says Margaret Bridwell, MD, OB/GYN, and Director of the University Health Center, University of Maryland. "With so many birth control methods available that do not require daily dosing, such as DEPO-PROVERA®, we hope that information on www.Smartersex.org will encourage women to discuss with their healthcare providers what birth control options may be better suited to their lifestyles."

Depo-Provera does not protect against HIV/AIDS and other sexually transmitted infections (STIs). Depo-Provera should not be used by women with known or suspected pregnancy, unexplained vaginal bleeding, breast cancer, blood clots, liver disease or a history of stroke. Book combines art, cooking

Proceeds to help Flint Hills Breadbasket efforts

Ann Warren and Julie Strecker, Manhattan residents, have put together a collection of art and recipes from a variety of artists and well-known individuals in the community.

At first, it was just a project between two friends.

"Then it just sort of happened," Ann Warren said.

Warren, instructor in the Department of English, and Julie Strecker, owner of Geometrics, 407 Poyntz Ave., wanted about a year ago to make a cookbook/art book featuring recipes from local cooks and artists – and they did just that.

"Artful Dining" is a compilation of about 100 recipes from 16 local artists and 35 local cooks. The recipes in the book are arranged as menus, unlike most cookbooks, which are arranged by courses, such as main courses, appetizers and desserts.

"Manhattan doesn't attract a lot of first-rate restaurants," Warren said. "Good eating occurs in the household, and we wanted to recognize that. So many of our friends are good cooks, so (the book) came together naturally."

Warren and Strecker compiled and published the book with their own money and are donating all the proceeds to the Flint Hills Breadbasket, a network that distributes food to hungry persons in the community.

"We just thought it was a wonderful cause," Warren said. "Neither one of us has any contact whatsoever with the organization. We thought if we're going to make a book on cooking, it ought to benefit people who could use more food."

Warren and Strecker not only donated the book's proceeds to the community, but they also used local businesses to produce the book.

"The cookbook/art book was printed locally at Ag Press," Warren said. "One of the things we wanted to do was have everything local."

Warren and Strecker only have one recipe each in the book because they didn't want the book's focus to be on them.

Since the compilers have lived in Manhattan for several years, most of the cooks and artists featured in the book were their acquaintances. However, to reach out to others, Warren and Strecker distributed a notice at downtown stores late last spring.

"We're both decent cooks, but we wanted to highlight others," Warren said.

Ruth Ann Wefald, a featured cook in the book and past president of the Flint Hills Breadbasket, said she was very excited to be asked to contribute a recipe and that the funds would benefit the community.

"Breadbasket is a worthwhile project. They are consistently doing a good job providing food in the community for hungry people," Wefald, K-State first lady, said.

"The community has determined people will not go hungry here. I was very happy it was selected to be a beneficiary of any funds that might come in."

A featured cook with three recipes in the book is Brice Hobrock, dean of the K-State libraries, who said his laboratory skills from his doctorate in chemistry have allowed him to be creative in the kitchen.

Hobrock's creativity in the kitchen has developed his reputation by word-of-mouth, which is why he wasn't surprised when he was asked to be featured in the book.

"A part of the process of being a dean is to cultivate meaning with alumni, outside donors, et cetera," Hobrock said. "One of the best ways to do that is to invite them to your house for a fine meal.

"I've been doing it a long time – for 20 years. Food is the basis for social interaction."

Wefald said she particularly liked the idea of combining good cooking and great art.

"A book bringing together beautiful pieces of artwork and great recipes was a nifty idea," she said.

"Artful Dining" costs $20 and is available at Geometrics, the K-State Student Union Bookstore, Claflin Books and Copies, Mercado Gourmet Grocery and the Manhattan Arts Center.

"I just say hats off to Ann Warren and Julie Strecker," Wefald said. "It was a great idea, and I hope the book sells really well and benefits hungry people in the area. To me, that would be the best Christmas gift of all."

City prepares for Christmas parade

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Mayor Ed Klimek envisioned the first Lighted Christmas Parade for the city of Manhattan, he said 20 entries would have made him a happy man.

Ten months and about 62 entries later, Klimek and the Flint Hills Breadbasket are busy preparing for the inaugural event, which kicks off at 5:30 p.m. today at Manhattan Town Center.

"This hits upon the true spirit of the season and the holidays," he said. "People want to be a part of it, and you can see this by the entries we've received."

After 15 years of having the Mayor's Holiday, which included a food drive and tree lighting in Aggieville, Klimek wanted to get the public more involved.

As a result, he and members of the Flint Hills Breadbasket decided to take the old tradition and spice things up.

"The mayor decided to shake a few things up and try something different," said Shirley Bramhall, director for the Flint Hills Breadbasket. "He just wanted the food drive to have recognition and for people to enjoy themselves and get that warm and cozy feeling."

Activities will begin with the parade, which will start from Manhattan Town Center, continue along Poyntz Avenue and end in Triangle Park in Aggieville. The parade will include floats, marching bands, community residents and K-State students.

In addition, City Manager Ron Fehr, City Commissioner Bruce Snead and newly-elected state representative Sydney Carlin will be judging the floats. Three trophies will be given to the winning entries, including the Mayor's trophy for originality, the Most Creative trophy and a trophy for the entry with the best use of lights.

"This parade is unique because it's going to be at night," Klimek said. "The timing is what's going to make it work – and the spirit of it."

After the parade, activities will continue with caroling and will conclude with the lighting of the Mayor's Holiday Tree and the kickoff to the annual holiday food drive at the Breadbasket.

"I can't think of any better reason than to go to the parade," Bramhall said. "It's going to be a big event, and it's going to be good for the community.

"After all, the Big Apple has a parade, so why can't the Little Apple?"

AIDS | Community recognizes stigmas of disease

body is infected, but they are all affected," Kennedy said. "People infected with AIDS shouldn't be shunned, but accepted by the community. We should have caring relationships because the disease is so devastating, and we tend to shun instead of care."

In recognition of World AIDS Day, K-State's Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators will be answering questions and have a display booth today through Wednesday in the K-State Student Union.

The Manhattan community had a Service of Remembrance on Sunday evening at the First Congregational Church, where community members lit a symbolic candle of hope.

Amanda Arrington, junior in music education, played the piano during the event. She said the service did a good job of raising awareness, but she wished more people would have attended.

"It was good to bring the topic of AIDS up again," Arrington said. "It seems like it's taken a back burner to other topics."

Stacey Broughman, registered nurse at the Riley County Manhattan Health Department, was the guest speaker at the service.

Broughman spoke about how AIDS patients aren't accepted and how she has brought tears to patients simply by hugging them. She said people are afraid to engage in hugs with AIDS patients for fear of becoming infected.

Broughman said that according to the latest statistics, there are 2,383 total AIDS patients in Kansas.

"A lot of people think with Kansas being a small rural state that AIDS isn't as big of a threat," Broughman said. "But it is – just like any other place."

In 1998, HIV was the fifth-leading cause of death for the age group of 25-44, Broughman said.

"I think students need to be aware that they are the fastest growing age group for HIV infections," she said. "So no matter where you are or who you're with, you need to take precautions – especially sexually."

TO THE POINT

Former KKSU employees' drive deserves praise

On Wednesday, Nov. 27, KKSU radio signed off the air for the final time.

But instead of dwelling on K-State's $1.2 million decision to sell the station to Morris Communications' WIBW, employees are finding innovative ways to continue sending their messages to Kansas residents.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

In their quest for direction, KKSU employees are instituting contracts with other Kansas radio stations to produce programming in Manhattan that will be broadcast elsewhere in the state, with the same subject matter – agriculture, family, consumer science, rural life and health, among others.

Though this system will help other stations relate to a greater number of Kansans, the university has lost a powerful tool, and K-State officials don't seem to be bothered by it.

But that's not keeping KKSU employees from doing their jobs. They are staring adversity in the face by continuing to make the most of their resources. We admire KKSU's ability to continue to serve Kansas, and we encourage other programs experiencing setbacks to follow KKSU's example.

We will miss the station's presence on campus but look forward to its future plans for Kansas.

SPECIAL HOLIDAY

Latin Americans adapt to American holidays

Editor's note: Lorena is pursuing a doctoral degree in curriculum and instruction. Every Monday, she will tackle an issue in her native language, Spanish, as well as English. Gloria Freeland, assistant professor of journalism, edits the columns. Both columns convey the same message and allow the Collegian to reach a more diverse audience. Suddenly last week, campus was converted into a lonely, empty hall. Everybody was gone to celebrate Thanksgiving.

This is common for people from the United States, who have been accustomed to celebrating this religious and civil holiday since their childhoods. It reminds me of the Jewish Passover – a day to remember a historical, meaningful and crucial moment for a whole nation.

It was a long and hazardous voyage for the Pilgrims, a dangerous beginning in a strange land. They left their homeland in search of freedom. They gathered together around the family table, not in a temple, but in family, to thank God for the peaceful settlement of a new home in a new world.

Every fourth Thursday of November, year after year, century after century, generation after generation, the people of the United States celebrate by gathering their families and close friends, to renew the pilgrimage of the people who searched for religious freedom. I was told that when the travelers arrived in Massachusetts, in the middle of the cold winter, the American Indians offered shelter and food and saved their lives.

So, Thanksgiving is not only to thank God but also to thank the welcoming American Indians who saved them from death.

Thanks to the American Indians, the Pilgrims were able to grow corn, and decided to celebrate survival with a special meal each year.

In 1863, President Lincoln declared Thanksgiving a national holiday. The date was chosen to more or less correlate with the approximate Nov. 21, 1620 landing of the Mayflower on Cape Cod. So, the rhythm of life in the United States is marked by this special Thursday, a private ceremony, not a spectacular display, a retreat of the people to celebrate life and family links.

LORENA BARBOZA

As a visitor to the United States, I have enjoyed seeing the unique enthusiasm of the people making plans for the anticipated holiday. Businesses have special promotions and supermarkets offer traditional products, and students, professors and administrators talk of nothing but their plans for the expected long weekend. My mouth watered listening to the descriptions of the delicious recipes for the famous stuffed and baked turkey, or the pumpkin or apple pie, and all those delicious dishes that go with it.

My son Franco and I celebrated Thanksgiving with my sister-in-law Mary Schlagel, married for 30 years to Andy Schlagel, a genuine Kansas gentleman. In their home, the traditional celebration is carefully honored. While I was in Kansas City, celebrating, I discovered with great admiration how people travel long distances to be there with their beloved families, strengthening their links and observing peacefully the traditional ceremony.

It is amusing to note that many of the Latin Americans who have lived or studied in the United States have adopted this celebration. They have learned how to prepare the turkey and the traditional meals but have added their own cultural components – dancing salsa, merengue, cumbia and bachata.

Nice!

Even when our history is different, we also have survived wars, poverty, disease, dictatorship and natural disasters, and we are still here, so we have reasons to join people from the United States in thanking God for giving us the opportunity to live and create families and life. It is our Latin American way to show respect and appreciation for this meaningful and spiritual cultural feature of the U.S. culture.

Well, the campus was lonely and deserted for several days, but it was for the best of reasons. Welcome back, and let's thank God for Thanksgiving.

Latinoamericanos adoptan celebraciónes estadounidense

De repente, el campus se convirtió en un salón vacio. Todos se fueron para celebrar el Día de Gracia.

Quizá eso sea algo común para los estadounidenses acostumbrados a celebrar esta clase de festividad civil y religiosa desde su niñez.

Recordé el Passover judío, ese día que toda la nación rememora como un momento histórico, significativo y crucial.

Fue un largo y peligroso viaje para los peregrinos, un riesgoso comienzo en tierras extrañas, un recuerdo triste de la tierra natal que debieron dejar atrás contra su voluntad por buscar la libertad. Celebran estar reunidos a la mesa, no en un templo, pero en familia, para agradecer a Dios la oportunidad de vivir en paz en una nueva tierra y en un nuevo mundo.

Cada cuarto jueves del mes de noviembre y año tras año, siglo tras siglo, generación tras generación, los estadounidenses se celebran a ellos mismos, juntando a toda la familia y amigos cercanos para renovar el peregrinaje de mucha gente que buscó la libertad religiosa. Me han contado que cuando los viajeros llegaron a Massachusetts, en medio del crudo invierno, los indios les ofrecieron casa y comida y salvaron sus vidas.

Por eso, el Día de Gracia no es solo para agradecer a Dios sino también a los indios que les dieron la bienvenida y los salvaron de la muerte.

Gracias a los indígenas, los inmigrantes pudieron cosechar maíz y decidieron celebrar una vez al año, la sobrevivencia con una comida.

En 1863 el Presidente Lincoln lo declaró día festivo nacional. Desde entonces, el ritmo de vida de los Estados Unidos está marcado por ese Jueves especial, una ceremonia privada, sin gran despliegue, donde la gente se reúne para festejar la vida y los lazos familiares.

Como visitante de los Estados Unidos he disfrutado ver ese entusiasmo único de sus habitantes haciendo planes anticipados para ese día. El comercio lanza publicidad y los supermercados ofrecen los productos tradicionales, y en la universidad los estudiantes, profesores y administrativos no hablaban más que de sus planes para el esperado largo fin de semana. Se me hacía la boca agua escuchando la descripción de las deliciosas recetas para preparar el famoso pavo relleno al horno y el pastel de manzana o calabaza, y todas las demás comidas que engalanan la mesa.

Mi hijo Franco y yo celebramos el Día de Gracia con mi cuñada María, casada por 30 años con Andy Schlagel, un auténtico caballero kanseño. En su casa, la tradicional celebración es cuidadosamente mantenida, y mientras disfrutaba en Kansas City, descubrí con gran admiración cómo la gente recorre largas distancias para estar junto a sus seres queridos y fortalecer sus relaciones y seguir en paz la tradicional ceremonia.

Es divertido notar que muchos latinoamericanos que viven o estudian en los Estados Unidos han adoptado esta celebración. Han aprendido a preparar el pavo y los platillos tradicionales, pero han agregado su propio componente cultural bailando salsa, merengue, cumbias y bachatas.

¡En hora buena!

Aunque nuestra historia es diferente, también hemos sobrevivido a las guerras, la pobreza, las enfermedades, las dictaduras y los desastres de la naturaleza y estamos aún aquí; por eso tenemos razones para unirnos a los estadounidenses y agradecer a Dios la oportunidad dada para vivir y crear familias. Esa es nuestra manera latina de mostrarles respeto y aprecio por esta característica cultural tan significativa y espiritual.

Aunque el campus permaneció deshabitado por varios días, el motivo valió la pena. Bienvenidos nuevamente, y demos gracias a Dios por el Día de Gracia.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

Oh, I see, I see. Smoking is a huge problem on campus, but underage drinking, that's not a problem. That never happens in Manhattan.

Sure, all that stuff said about the greeks is generalized, but is it really that unfair?

Since fraternities started in the United States, all presidents except for two have been members of a fraternity. So basically, greeks have been our bosses for a long, long, long time.

You know what's the funniest thing about people who drink? It's not the falling down, it's not the slurred speech, it's not the stupid things that come out of their mouths. It's not even the promiscuous sex they eventually engage in. It's the denial. That's right, the denial — the fact that they won't even admit they're addicted. That's the funniest part.

What's the difference between a Cornhusker and a corn flake? A corn flake belongs in a bowl.

To the girl who threw peanut butter all over my room: I wouldn't have minded if it wasn't chunky.

If I took Chem II in '97, does that mean I'm old?

I guess we would be your bosses at Burger King, if it wasn't for the fact that we refuse to work there.

To the guy who fell up the stairs and sliced his hand open, then proceeded to go to the hospital and put rubber gloves on his head: You're retarded.

Hey, Layton, maybe we should just do away with the military in general and see how free freedom really is.

To all those people who wave at me at the crosswalks: I'm stopping because it's the law, not because I like you.

It's not the fact that my friend calls the Fourum all the time that cracks me up, it's that he has it on the voice dial on his phone.

Please bring back the free newspapers. I miss them.

To the guy in my Expos II class: Shut up about the all-fraternity GPA, and let me listen to the teacher.

I don't feel bad that I have to buy all my friends because I have really good friends. Go greek.

Maybe we should go to war with Iraq so the Fort Riley soldiers will have something better to do than start fights in Manhattan.

I think I'm going to put rims, a really loud muffler and ground effects on my Dodge Neon because that would be really cool. Oh, wait. I graduated from high school.

The Missouri mascot looks like a reject from a Tigger look-alike contest.

Do you know the difference between Crown Royal and Nyquil? Crown Royal doesn't have any antihistamines.

Being nice gets you nowhere, except somewhere you don't want to be.

The only thing worse than being from Missouri is being Irish and from Missouri.

Johnson County is a fraud. The real money is in Colorado.

I love my twirlers.

I want to be greek. I want my mom and dad to buy me a social life. Organized mating sounds pretty good, too.

Be thankful for the good custodians. They are few and far between. Turn in the ones who are not.

Why are you letting your children read dirty magazines? Oh, what? You're a bad parent? Oh, what? You're not greek?

Greeks, bosses? The only businesses they will run will be related to alcohol.

If any of the greeks in my house worked for a company, they would be fired for being drunk on the job.

If the guys in my frat treat work like they treat school, I'll be surprised if they even get janitorial positions.

I want to know if the Collegian had Wal-Mart's permission to borrow its happy face.

Has anyone ever wondered where Derby and Kramer dining centers get their meat from? Have you noticed the decline in squirrels on campus?

To the guy who lives in 309: A love triangle is a tough thing to be in. Just don't do it between two sisters.

I want to send a heartfelt thanks to all of you who made KKSU the best radio station in Kansas for nearly 80 years. We'll miss you.

To the girl I met in my Natural Disasters class: You are so hot. Will you call me?

There's no such thing as girls' sports. They're just activities.

You know it's a bad night when you think you've been making out with a girl, but you wake up next to a guy.

The other night, I spent the night with the girl of my dreams, and I don't think she realizes how much I really like her.

When is the Collegian going to start a horoscope page?

Friends with benefits needed. Apply within.

Katie, I love you.

To the guy with glasses who works at Aladdin's Castle: My girlfriend thinks you're totally hot.

I find it sad that a family can get torn apart by something as simple as wild dogs.

Ray needs a vertically challenged friend so he can feel taller.

I do like the Powercat, though.

Soderbergh's remake of classic Russian film faithful, inventive, more personal

"SOLARIS"

Movie review by Adam Lee

Some people might have considered it greedy or pretentious to consider remaking "Solaris," one of the most treasured underground films in history, but Steven Soderbergh felt comfortable with it. That conviction is apparent in his final product, a very smart and stunning film.

"Solaris" is based on the science fiction novel by Polish writer Stanislaw Lem and was first made into a movie in 1971 by Russian director Andrei Tarkovsky. The film was hailed as the Soviet equivalent to "2001: A Space Odyssey" and is considered one of the greatest sci-fi movies ever.

It was also great in length. Tarkovsky's version logs in at about three hours, a daunting task for modern directors and modern attention spans. Soderbergh has managed to tell his version of the story in almost half the amount of time. Soderbergh's screenplay is simple and slender.

He's left plenty of room for interpretation, which is both appropriate and practical for the film's complex philosophical themes.

When we meet psychiatrist Chris Kelvin (George Clooney), he is leading a group session for victims of an undisclosed catastrophe. The patients' discussion never fully reveals the nature of the tragic incident, but as they mention their reactions to news coverage and T-shirts, there is just enough information to fuel the imagination.

The film remains vague but thought provoking, as Kelvin is requested to examine the crew of a space station orbiting the remote planet Solaris. The scientists from the station have been transmitting puzzling data, and it's hypothesized that they've been exposed to some sort of emotional trauma.

But nothing else is known as Kelvin blasts off into the emptiness of space and the void of reality.

When Kelvin first arrives at Solaris, the station appears empty, save two crew members' corpses. Kelvin hopes for some sort of explanation from the surviving crew, but Dr. Snow is extremely inarticulate, and Dr. Gordon is barricaded inside her room.

These mysterious developments generate suspense, but this subsides to a more general curiosity after it becomes clear that there is no eminent danger.

Kelvin is forced to experience the strange effects of the space station firsthand as he wakes up to find his dead wife, Rheya (Natascha McElhone), alive in his room.

Kelvin struggles to determine whether this embodiment of his lost love is real or a fantasy, and if it is a fantasy whether it is worth living. Kelvin explores love, death, memory and how the gaseous planet he is orbiting manipulates these aspects of life.

Soderbergh's interpretation manages to be both faithful and inventive.

His film focuses on different aspects of Lem's story and creates a contrasting impression from the Tarkovsky film. This "Solaris" is more personal, and although it may take place light years away from Earth, it is very much grounded in the human condition.

Animated holiday musical falls

Sandler cartoon among actor's worst films

"EIGHT CRAZY NIGHTS"

Movie review by JJ Duncan

Adam Sandler just had to go and ruin the critical praise he's been receiving for "Punch-Drunk Love" by releasing the worst film he's ever made.

"Eight Crazy Nights" is the animated Sandler musical that combines cute animated characters, bad songs and the worst fart jokes. Sandler's juvenile humor has proven to carry other questionable films like "Mr. Deeds," but his non-sequiturs and stupid voices just take "Eight Crazy Nights" farther down the scale.

Sandler is the 33-year-old Davey Stone, a basically sweet kid until his parents die in a car wreck on the first night of Hanukkah – 20 years before the movie begins. Now, he's a drunk loner who makes a point of ruining the holidays for everyone.

When Davey gets himself into trouble for ruining some ice sculptures, a judge sentences him to work with Whitey Duvall, a kind midget with a funny voice and a club foot, as a youth basketball referee. Slowly, Whitey puts Sandler in touch with his emotions, and it sounds like a holiday heart-warmer, but it's not because Sandler has to throw in bad jokes.

If there has been any movie where the Sandler brand of humor has fallen so flat, it's this one. Even die-hard fans of the Saturday Night Live alum were groaning and shifting in their seats.

Sandler should have chosen one type of movie to make. If it was a cute holiday musical with a simple moral and some funny songs, that's one thing. He could have left out some expletives and fart jokes, and the movie would have been the kind of thing you could take kids to see.

Instead, scenes like reindeer baring their poop-smeared teeth after licking Whitey clean of the sewage and ice in which Sandler traps him just ruin the movie. If he wanted to make a gross-out, middle-school level comedy, he should have left it live action and taken out the songs.

So give yourself a Hanukkah present, and go see something else. The only thing Sandler has to offer is the worst of low-brow humor.

British hip-hop debut combines new rhymes, tight garage beats

"ORIGINAL PIRATE MATERIAL"

Album review by Adam Lee

Adorned with a decrepit housing complex and a definite article/noun name, The Streets, debut album, "Original Pirate Material," looks as though it will feature the latest garage rock from either New York or Scandinavia. But peculiarly, the London artist's album features garage beats, not garage rock.

The Streets consists solely of Mike Skinner, a 22-year-old who has been creating a stir in the music world with his unusual hip-hop style. The BBC said, "Not since 'Never Mind The Bollocks' has there been a record that has said as much about being young."

That is a little indulgent in regards to both albums, but Skinner has something to say and a new way of saying it.

His music doesn't have much in common with the Sex Pistols. It's more like Big Audio Dynamite meets modern rap and gets 15 years younger. It's a unique sound but one that will probably not be featured on "Rap City: The Bassment."

You have to get used to The Streets. He's never really rapping, at least not like you hear in the United States. It's more like poems read over beats. But after a few listens, his sharpness, rhythm and flow become more apparent.

Skinner also did all of the album's production, arrangements and mixing. He's good, too. At times he sounds like an Anglo RZA who's heavily influenced by house and reggae.

You have to catch on to the Cockney phrases as well. This album is all about birds and geezers (a bird is a girl and geezer is apparently somebody who sucks). But mixed in is a good deal of social commentary and humor. In "The Irony of it All," Skinner makes a case for the legalization of marijuana, "This ain't no wholesale operation, just a few eighths and some Playstation is my vocation, I pose a threat to the nation?"

"Original Pirate Material" has some hip rhymes and some tight beats, but it's odd enough that it takes awhile to become palatable.

Women lose to Stanford

Cardinal play with confidence against Wildcats

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

STANFORD, Calif. – Kelley Suminski said Stanford played with a lot of confidence even without its All-American guard.

Suminski scored a season-high 18 points as the seventh-ranked Cardinal held off No. 2 K-State 63-57 Saturday night to win the Stanford Invitational.

"We might have been the underdogs, but we were ready for them," Suminski said. "We were confident going into that game."

Sebnem Kimyacioglu and Susan King added 14 points apiece as Stanford (4-0) set a school record for three-pointers attempted with 37. They made 12. The old mark for three-point tries was 34, set two years ago against Washington.

"Our preparation helped us," Kimyacioglu said. "Knowing what they were going to run helped our confidence. We took away some of their weapons."

Megan Mahoney scored a season-high 19 points and grabbed 12 rebounds as the Wildcats (5-1) failed in their attempt to win their second tournament of the season. Kendra Wecker added 18 points, and Nicole Ohlde had 13.

"Rebounding was a big factor for us," Mahoney said. "They got a lot of putbacks. We didn't get out on their three-point shooters, and that was another breakdown."

Wecker has scored in double figures in 18 straight games dating to last season.

"We had a couple of defensive breakdowns, and they were able to get good looks especially from three-point range," Wecker said. "We allowed them to take control."

Stanford extended its home winning streak to 15 games and beat its highest ranked opponent since upsetting then-No. 1 Purdue on Nov. 22, 1998. Coach Tara VanDerveer recorded her 400th win at Stanford.

"I was proud of how our team stepped up," VanDerveer said. "K-State was a huge challenge, and we dug in."

Wecker's 3-pointer gave the Wildcats a 37-33 lead with 15:13 remaining, but the Cardinals hit three consecutive three-pointers to regain the momentum fewer than two minutes later.

Neither team could gain an advantage the rest of the way. The lead changed hands several times down the stretch until Kimyacioglu's three-pointer with 1:47 remaining gave the Cardinal a 59-54 lead.

"We were beaten by a very competitive, tough-minded team," Coach Deb Patterson said. "They maximize the talent they have and play to their strengths."

K-State 72, Temple 65

Ohlde had a season-high 28 points and 15 rebounds as second-ranked K-State rallied for a 72-65 victory Friday night over Temple in the first round of the Stanford Invitational.

"Things weren't always going our way," Ohlde said. "But we had a bunch of people step up at critical times."

Wecker added 16 points. Mahoney, who had 13 points and a season-high 11 rebounds, sank a short jumper with 3:29 remaining during a 10-0 run to give the Wildcats their first lead of the second half at 62-61. Wecker hit a three-pointer a minute later, and K-State began to pull away.

"We were a little tentative," Wecker said. "We had to get back to playing like ourselves."

Ohlde scored 19 of her points in the first half on 7-of-10 shooting.

"We had no answer for her," Staley said. "We tried to crowd her, double-team her. We tried a lot of things. She's a huge target and has great moves around the basket. She didn't have any weaknesses we could expose."

K-State named host site, will see Michigan in 1st round

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

How about another match for the volleyball team in the friendly confines of Ahearn Field House?

Got it.

How about possibly not having to play Nebraska in the second round of the NCAA tournament?

Done.

K-State's volleyball team will be host to the first and second rounds of the NCAA tournament for the second straight year, the NCAA Tournament Selection Committee announced Sunday.

"I thought we had earned an opportunity to host, but I didn't think they would let Northern Iowa and Nebraska and ourselves, all being so close in geographic proximity, host," Coach Suzie Fritz said. "I am just fired up they gave us a shot."

The Cats will play Michigan in the first round. The winner will face the winner of the Washington State-Oral Roberts match in the second round.

K-State was host last year as well, but after defeating Arkansas in the first round, the Cats had to do battle with Nebraska.

K-State lost that match 3-1.

Junior libero Laura Downey-Wallace said K-State has a great opportunity to do some damage in this year's tournament.

"We've got a good bracket," she said. "We played Michigan in the spring, and they're a decent team, but we weren't near as good as we are now."

Conference honors also were handed out Sunday night. Junior middle blocker Lauren Goehring took home first-team All-Big 12 honors, while sophomore setter Gabby Guerre and junior outside hitter Cari Jensen grabbed honorable mention accolades.

Downey-Wallace was named the Big 12's Libero of the Year.

K-State will play Michigah at 7 p.m. Friday at Ahearn.

Cats extend streak over KU, lose to NU

LINCOLN, Neb. – They were statistically the two best blocking teams in the conference when they met this weekend.

But one proved to be head-and-shoulders above its closest competitor.

The fifth-ranked Nebraska Huskers (28-1, 20-0) swept No. 22 K-State (20-8, 16-4) Saturday night at Nebraska Coliseum, shutting down the Wildcat attack by way of 20.5 blocks.

"I think they are one of the best blocking teams in the country for sure," Coach Suzie Fritz said. "One of the identities of this Kansas State team is that they are extremely efficient – they don't make a lot of unforced attacking errors. It's good and bad, because you can also get blocked a lot.

"Looking at our stats, we didn't make a lot of unforced attacking errors, but we got blocked a great deal. I think they are the absolute best at it."

The Huskers came into the contest averaging 3.75 blocks per conference match. K-State was a distant second at 2.8 blocks per match.

Nebraska gained the momentum early in game one, jumping out to a 7-3 advantage.

Three of those seven points were on stuff-blocks, a block that results in a point.

K-State would rally back to gain the lead at 12-11, but that would be as close as the team would get to taking the opening game.

The Husker block keyed in on outside hitters Cari Jensen and Jennifer Pollard all night long. In game one, Jensen had a .000 hitting percentage and Pollard was even worse at -.182.

So how effective can a team be when its best hitters can't get going?

"Not very, because there are such

Northwestern squeezes by men in battle between Wildcats

Frustration was the word junior guard Frank Richards used to describe Saturday night's game.

K-State fell 59-55 to Northwestern during the weekend in Bramlage Coliseum, and for the first time in eight seasons, dropped its home opener.

Northwestern dictated an aggravatingly slow game tempo and used clutch 3-point shooting to counter K-State's first-half advantages. In the second half, Northwestern took the lead for good, and K-State couldn't convert at the end of the game.

The slow game pace, coupled with Northwestern's seeming inability to miss from behind the arch, made for a frustrating home debut for the 2002 Cats, Richards said.

"It seemed like we were always fighting our hardest, and the harder we fought, they fought even harder," Richards said. "We just kept trying to play basketball and kept coming at them like they came at us."

K-State took the early 2-0 lead after Northwestern missed its first three-point attempt. But Northwestern wouldn't make that error many more times in the early part of the game. Northwestern shot 4-for-6 from the arc to start the game, jumping out to a 16-8 lead after seven minutes.

But the Cats responded and went up by as many as four on two separate occasions in the first half.

Both times, though, Northwestern turned to the three-ball to even things up.

Freshman Jimmy Maley hit one with 1:53 to go in the half, then hit another at the buzzer to cut K-State's lead to one point. The teams went into the locker room with K-State leading 29-28.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said Northwestern's persistent long-range shots were the key to keeping the team in the game, but something he knew was a

Cross Country | Mortimer finishes 43rd at Nationals, nabs All-America honors

Amy Mortimer of K-State finished 43rd on Nov. 25 at the NCAA Division I Cross Country Championship, completing the 6,000-meter course in 20:37.4 at the Wabash Family Sports Center.

Mortimer was named an All-American by the NCAA the following day because she was one of the top 30 Americans in the field.

All-America status is given to both the top 30 finishers and the top 30 U.S. citizens.

Women's Basketball | Wecker earns Player of the Week honors

Sophomore Kendra Wecker was named the Big 12 Conference's first Player of the Week for the 2002-03 season last Monday, just a day after claiming MVP honors of the ninth-annual Preseason Women's National Invitation Tournament.

The 5-foot-11 small forward from Marysville, Kan., averaged 22.3 points, 11.5 rebounds and 3.8 assists in four K-State wins.

She also shot 52.9 percent from the field, 40 percent from three-point range and was perfect from the foul line (11 of 11).

NFL | Chiefs romp Cardinals

The Arizona Cardinals checked and double-checked, and they couldn't find a loss this lopsided since they started keeping records 82 years ago.

Priest Holmes scored two touchdowns, and Dante Hall uncorked a 90-yard punt return for a score as the Kansas City Chiefs took a 35-0 halftime lead Sunday on their way to a 49-0 drubbing of the Cardinals.

It's believed to be the most one-sided defeat in the Cardinals' history, which spans three cities.

The previous worst loss was on Oct. 12, 1941, when the Chicago Cardinals lost to the Chicago Bears 53-7. Records aren't available between 1898, when the Cardinals were founded, and 1920.

For the Chiefs (6-6), it was their second-most lopsided win ever, behind only their 59-7 victory over Denver on Sept. 7, 1963.

Golf | O'Meara wins Skins Game

Mark O'Meara was the forgotten man in the Skins Game until he wound up with the most money Sunday.

O'Meara stole the show from Tiger Woods and Phil Mickelson, collecting three skins with a 2-foot birdie putt on the 15th hole and securing his second Skins Game title by holing a 20-foot birdie putt on the 17th.

O'Meara finished the two-day tournament with eight skins and $405,000, and his final skin on No. 17 left the others playing for second.

KKSU | K-State radio station goes off air; employees look for opportunities to keep broadcasting programs alive in KKSU's studios and then aired on other stations.

"We will have time to do things we have been doing part time," Jackson said. "We are talking to stations and asking, 'What within our subject matter – agriculture, family, consumer science, rural life, health – can we create that you would be willing to air?'"

Baker said he is hoping an agriculture program will continue to be broadcast on these other stations.

"I am hoping I can set up a syndicated program that would use the agriculture idea as a basis and how ag affects the average person," he said.

The possibility of purchasing another frequency has been discussed. However, Baker said he is unsure if there would be any available or from where the funding would come.

As for hard feelings from the sale, Baker said he understands where Morris Communications is coming from. However, he also said some of the staff was disappointed with the decision.

"They've always wanted the frequency," Baker said. "We have always had valuable hours during the day. I understand their frustration. We had the frequency first, and they were the ones who came and joined us. You make do with what you've got. Now, they've got everything, and I'm sure they're happy."

Although no one will lose a job because of the sale, Baker said he would like to see permanent positions created so that when he retires, he will be replaced.

"I would like the university to commit to a permanent position of some kind," he said. "I don't want to have the position because I am here. I am not sure if they are just giving us jobs 'til we leave."

Baker said listeners lose the most.

"I have been averaging probably four to five calls a week since it was announced," he said. "I think they are the big losers.

"'Do people need to hear this?' That's what guided us in our decisions to put something on air. That's not gonna happen anymore."

Diane Swanson, associate professor of management, said that after an interview this summer with KKSU, she was impressed with the style of reporting the station used.

"I did an interview about corporate ethics and corporate scandal in July," Swanson said. "Of all the interviews I have done, the one with KKSU was the most in-depth, and the producer asked the best questions and had the most insightful commentary."

Swanson said this kind of reporting will not be found on commercial radio stations.

"From my perspective, the loss is an in-depth kind of news coverage and commentary from the pool of experts at the university," she said. "KKSU was noncommercial and therefore gave in-depth interviews and thoughtful coverage of issues that served particularly the community in Western Kansas. My hope is that the university has plans to resurrect the station in that mode."

Jackson said that although the programs and voice of KKSU will continue in a different way, the university has lost access to Kansans.

"We can contact, in milliseconds, almost anyone in the state," he said. "In the case of the floods in the early '90s, we put experts on the air. We were there with other catastrophic events as a voice people could turn to for help and access to experts from Kansas State.

"K-State has lost control of the message. We lost access to Kansans on an everyday basis. As long as you had access to the signal, you could do anything. But without the signal, you lost media, and you are at the mercy of people who have control."

CUTS | Graves slashes budget; K-State to start cuts said that although the numbers look bad, the cuts are not as deep as they could have been.

"Given the overall state of the budget, it could have been worse," Krause said.

"I think our task now is to sit down and see what that means in terms of overall dollars and dollars by cost centers in the institution."

Krause said department heads and other administration were notified this summer to plan for a 4-percent mid-year cut. The recent cuts come out to 3.9 percent.

In his statement, Wefald said the next few weeks will be a cooperative effort among students, faculty and the administration to find ways to handle the cuts.

"The challenge now is to determine how we can recapture the funds that have been cut while minimizing the damage to our academic programs and maintaining the caring atmosphere of this campus," he said in the statement. "We will continue working with our campus leadership representing students, faculty and administration to identify every option available in meeting this challenge."

Krause said that by the middle of this week, the administration should have a good idea of where the cuts will be. He said a mid-year tuition increase is not an option, and he hopes to shift focus to the 2004 fiscal year. However, state officials have projected an $800-million shortfall for fiscal year 2004.

"There is some ongoing balancing that the incoming governor is going to have to do," he said. "I hope there would be no more this year. Hopefully, we will have an upturn in the economy and that part of the equation improves. If it worsens, we need to keep monitoring the situation, but I hope this would be it for this year."

high percentages on the left sides," Jensen said. "Our middles did a great job of picking up the slack."

Those middle hitters, junior Lauren Goehring and sophomore Lisa Martin, hit .304 and .235 respectively. They were also the kill leaders. Goehring had 10, Martin seven. The Wildcats hit a season-low .098.

K-State was the victim of an emotional senior night for Nebraska, one that said good-bye to four players who have seemed to bring their A-game every time they stepped on the court against the Wildcats.

And three of them (Grechaly Cepero, Amber Holmquist and Laura Pilakowski) have received some sort of All-America honor.

But K-State won't ever have to worry about them again, unless they meet in this year's NCAA tournament.

"Go win it all and get the hell out of here," a smiling Fritz told Cepero, Holmquist and Pilakowski after the match.

Add another Wildcat to the list of K-State graduates who have never lost to Kansas.

Outside hitter Jennifer Pollard said farewell to the fans at Ahearn Field House on Wednesday by helping K-State dominate the Jayhawks for the 16th straight time, sweeping Kansas 30-27, 30-27, 30-14.

The win locked up second place in the Big 12 for the Wildcats.

It was also the 17th sweep of the season for K-State, the most in school history.

"We definitely got better as the match went on and in that third set really took it to them," Pollard said. "And getting the most conference wins by a K-State team, that's big time. It makes a statement for us."

K-State finished the season with 16 conference wins. The Cats had 15 Big 12 victories last year.

store. He made them alcoholic drinks, and then they went to a small back room after hearing a noise outside. Then the victim's friend left the room, and she was alone with Dean.

The alleged victim said she then blacked out. When she woke up, she said, her pants were at her ankles. The women then left the liquor store, and when the victim arrived home, she said she noticed her underwear were shifted sideways.

Blood tests the next morning showed her blood alcohol content was .06, and she had cocaine in her system.

Defense alleges that Dean did not slip the victim drugs and that all sexual activity was consensual.

Dean was arrested near his home May 9 for two felony counts of aggravated criminal sodomy and two misdemeanor counts of criminal restraint. He was released from the Riley County jail on a $15,000 bond.

Prosecutors dropped one felony count prior to his preliminary hearing Nov. 15.

Dean Liquor was at the corner of 12th and Laramie streets. Dean sold the liquor store in June, he previously said, so he and his wife could move to a larger city where she could utilize her interior design degree.

INTERNATIONAL | Students help out economy

www.NAFSA.org.

Geiger, a state and local consultant at the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards in Washington, said foreign money is only one thing international students bring to American universities.

"The economic impact is tremendously important," he said. "But if this world is ever going to see peace, it is only going to be done through the exchange of students, faculty and adults."

Experiencing different cultures is important, Geiger said, because it opens students' eyes to different ways of life. Students who grew up in rural areas often did not have an opportunity to see different ways of life, he said.

"It's also important for American students to study elsewhere," he said. "In too many instances, they aren't told early enough about opportunities to study abroad, and it's too late to work it into their schedules."

In the study, Geiger recommended informing incoming freshmen about opportunities to study abroad to give them time to fit it into their schedules.

He also recommended offering more languages in junior high and high schools.

"We ought to be doing more to encourage students to take a second language," he said. "And not just Spanish, French and German. We need to think a little differently and offer Japanese, Chinese and other languages."

possibility coming in.

"When you play them, that is always a possibility," he said. "Their three-point shot kept them in the game and you can almost say won the game for them. They were big shots."

In the second half, K-State led by three early. Then the game was tied at 33, 35 and 40 before Northwestern took the lead for good with 11:24 on the clock.

K-State fell as far behind as six with three minutes to go, but managed to make a comeback bid at the end of the game. Reserve guard Tim Ellis drained a three-pointer, one of his two treys in the game, to cut the lead to three.

Then, after Northwestern sunk two free throws, senior Gilson DeJesus hit a three to pull K-State to within two.

But the team would not come any closer.

With a minute to go, Richards, who led the team with 16 points, missed a contested three pointer.

K-State would, however, get the ball back after Northwestern's T.J. Parker missed the front end of a one-and-one.

With 11 seconds left, Richards fed the ball to an open DeJesus who missed his seventh three-point attempt.

Northwestern hit 11 three-pointers, including four in the final 10 minutes. Maley, starting in place of an injured Winston Blake, scored 15 points – all of them from behind the arch – in his first career start.

Northwestern also was able to control the tempo of the game. Many of its possessions lasted through nearly the entire shot clock. The slow tempo was something K-State expected, freshman forward Marques Hayden said.

But, he said, defending consistently for 30 or 35 seconds still caused the Cats fits.

"We talked about how there's normally 70 possessions in a game, and there would probably be about 40 in this one," he said. "But when you're playing defense for 33 seconds each time, it changes things."

The fruit of Northwestern's patience was good three-point looks. That made the difference, Richards said.

He said K-State has to improve its perimeter defense.

"When you match up three for two, two for three, it adds up in the end," he said. "It is just our mistakes. It's just defensive slips. We find ourselves being locking in on one thing. It's not something we can't fix, though."

Ogden man granted extension

22-year-old faces murder charges in minor's death

By Nancy Foster
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An Ogden man charged with the death of a 17-year-old Ogden teenager was granted additional time before appearing in court again, a Riley County judge ruled Monday. His appearance was moved from Monday to 10:30 a.m. Jan. 13 at the Riley County Courthouse.

Aaron Lewis, 22, is charged with one felony count of second-degree murder and two misdemeanor counts of endangering a child and furnishing alcohol to a minor.

Lewis' attorney, Troy Huser, requested more time so that more information regarding the case could be collected. Huser said McCracken's autopsy report has not yet been released.

Allegedly, Lewis intimidated Curtis McCracken, 17, into drinking large amounts of alcohol at a party in Ogden. Riley County police officers found McCracken unconscious at about 5:30 a.m. Nov. 10 after responding to a 911 call. He was transported to the Irwin Army Community Hospital, where he was later pronounced dead.

Police investigations allege the quantity of alcohol McCracken consumed contributed to his death.

The Shawnee County Coroner's Office in Topeka conducted the autopsy.

Lewis was arrested Nov. 10 for one felony count of second-degree murder and two misdemeanor counts of endangering a child and furnishing alcohol to a minor. His bond was set at $100,000.

Al-Qaeda to blame for attacks in Egypt

Web site calls attacks signal to Palestinians

By Maggie Michael
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt – A statement attributed to al-Qaeda claimed responsibility Monday for last week's car-bombing of an Israeli-owned hotel in Kenya and the attempt to shoot down an Israeli airliner the same day.

The statement, posted on an Islamic Web site, called Thursday's attacks a Ramadan greeting to the Palestinian people and referred to the al-Qaeda attacks against U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998, which killed 231 people – including 12 Americans – and wounded more than 5,000.

"At the same place where the 'Jewish Crusader coalition' was hit four years ago ... here the fighters ... came back once again to strike heavily against that evil coalition," the statement said. "But this time, it was against Jews."

In Washington, U.S. counterterrorism officials said they considered the claim credible and part of growing evidence that al-Qaeda was involved in the Kenya attacks.

Three suicide bombers attacked the Paradise Hotel, killing 10 Kenyans, three Israelis and the three bombers.

A big, yellow grinning face in the center of the shirt catches the eyes of passers-by, who then read the words underneath the face: "Smile, there's no hell."

For the most part, when atheist Paul Youk wears his smiley face shirt, it goes relatively unnoticed. But on occasion, he said he hears people's muffled comments like, "You'd better hope there's not."

However offensive or shocking his no-hell shirt may be to some, it is a positive statement for Youk, senior in sociology and English.

Youk said he doesn't agree with the idea that people could suffer for eternity for being human.

Christmas tree lighting, parade usher in holiday festivities

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bands marched on, lighted floats rolled by and Santa Claus came into town Monday night at the first Mayor's Lighted Christmas Parade.

Festivities began with the lighted parade down Poyntz Avenue followed by the annual lighting of the mayor's Christmas tree in Triangle Park.

Manhattan resident Pam Hagar brought her daughter Jessica Roberts, 8, to get into the holiday spirit.

"The cold weather makes it more like Christmas," she said.

Her daughter, however, seemed to enjoy the many parade participants throwing out candy, along with the 1960 Volkswagen Bug passing by, filled with multi-colored twinkling lights.

"I like the people who throw candy," Roberts said, as she jumped at the sight of wrapped sweets. "I also like the lit-up slug bug with all of the lights on it."

Unlike Hagar, Lana Arpin decided to attend the parade after spending an afternoon downtown.

"I didn't even wear my coat this morning, but I had a blanket so I decided to wrap up and stay," she said. "I like parades, and I think this is better than just the lighting of the Christmas tree, because the streets are lined with people."

A 1960 Volkswagen bug, decorated by David Cook, junior in radio, rides down Poyntz Avenue. Cook said this is the fourth year he has decorated the car and taken it to parades. It has been in Topeka and Wamego and will make an appearance in Rossville next week.

While the parade featured lighted floats and cars, a number of K-State student organizations took part in the parade, including the Silver Key Sophomore Honorary, Student Governing Association and members of the baseball team.

The evening was capped off with the annual lighting of the Christmas tree, where members of the K-State Hospitality Management Society served hot cider and cookies.

"I like doing this because I enjoy helping out and being part of the community," Brandy Sherwood, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said. "We're a hospitality club, so it's part of the hospitalization."

Along with refreshments, awards were presented for the top three floats.

The Manhattan Public Library walked away with the Most Creative trophy, while KHCA Angel 95 radio station took home the trophy for the entry with the best use of lights.

The Mayor's Trophy was given to the Chartwell's Breakfast with Santa float.

In addition, Mayor Ed Klimek gave his support to the host for the evening, the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"As mayor, you learn what the Breadbasket is all about," Klimek said. "Their spirit and energy is infectious."

Enthusiastic fans bring life to Bramlage during men's, women's home basketball games

'Ref Crew' adds spunk, creativity to Cat crowd

By Tina Deines
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eleven men give K-State basketball their best during each home game, but these guys don't play basketball.

They are the K-State "Ref Crew" and have been described by women's associate head coach, Kamie Ethridge, as "a backbone for other fans."

These 11 students, who met in Moore Hall last year, attend each men's and women's home basketball game dressed as referees, an idea they got after looking at an old K-State calendar.

Jason Showalter, sophomore in sociology, said the initial reason for starting the crew last year was the lack of "extreme" fans in Bramlage Coliseum.

"We knew that the basketball teams didn't have wild and crazy fans," Showalter said.

Aaron Johnson, sophomore in architectural engineering, said it was school spirit that initiated the crew.

"We just have a lot of K-State pride," he said. "We just all bleed purple."

Ethridge agreed that the "Ref Crew" has a lot of pride in the team and said it is appreciated by the players.

"To see those guys that are

O'Donnell's partner gives birth to girl; baby named after 'Ya-Ya' character

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rosie O'Donnell's girlfriend has given birth to a baby girl.

Kelli Carpenter, the comedian and former talk show host's longtime partner, gave birth to Vivienne Rose O'Donnell on Friday at an undisclosed New York hospital, O'Donnell spokeswoman Cindi Berger said Saturday.

The baby weighed 6 pounds, 6 ounces and is 19 inches long, Berger said.

Carpenter and O'Donnell named the baby Vivienne after the main character in the book "Divine Secrets of the Ya-Ya Sisterhood," and Rose after O'Donnell's mother, Roseanne, Berger said.

O'Donnell has adopted three children – Parker, 7, Chelsea, 5, and Blake, 3. This is 35-year-old Carpenter's first child. Berger would not say whether O'Donnell was formally adopting Vivienne Rose.

O'Donnell ended her syndicated talk show in May, and four months later left Rosie magazine, saying the publishers had stripped her of editorial control. Publishers Gruner + Jahr and O'Donnell are suing each other over the magazine's demise.

'Magic' to speak at Drake

Basketball Hall of Famer Earvin "Magic" Johnson will speak to Drake University students about living with AIDS.

Johnson will speak Tuesday night at Drake University's Knapp Center. The school handed out 4,000 tickets.

Johnson, 43, helped the Los Angeles Lakers win five championships in his NBA career, which ended in 1991, when he announced he was HIV-positive.

Since then, he's built an extensive business empire including movie theaters, restaurants, shopping centers and a bank.

Actress releases album

Megan Mullally, the helium-voiced Park Avenue socialite-turned-office assistant on NBC's "Will & Grace," said the role of Karen Walker doesn't strain her vocal cords.

Mullally said she wouldn't allow it, since her real love is singing.

"Singing isn't an attempt to branch out but who I really am," said the Oklahoma City native who recently released her second album, "Big as a Berry" – an eclectic mix of standards, rock, country and blues.

The 44-year-old formed her band, the Supreme Music Program, about five years ago, but it took only 2 1/2 days to record the album.

Skater creates chemo site

Olympic figure skater Scott Hamilton has started an Internet site to help newly diagnosed cancer patients find information about chemotherapy.

Chemocare.com features information about how the treatment works, how long it lasts and how it affects different parts of the body. The site also includes inspirational stories about Hamilton and other cancer survivors.

Hamilton – a four-time U.S. National Champion and four-time World Champion from Bowling Green – is now a TV commentator and skating show producer. Diagnosed with testicular cancer five years ago, he underwent chemotherapy and surgery and says he's now cured.

To determine what information was included on the site, developers asked current and former cancer patients at the clinic what questions they had when they were first diagnosed.

Union offers special meals to celebrate holidays

Hanukkah buffet, Breakfast With Santa, holiday buffet feature traditional food, decore

By Kari Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The holidays are a time for people to eat, drink and be merry.

The K-State Student Union is working hard to create a traditional holiday atmosphere on campus.

"A lot of individuals are very busy during the holidays with all the hustle and bustle of shopping and family visits," Eric Braun, Union food services director, said. "It is part of the mission of the Union to be a part of the life of people on campus."

To fulfill this mission, the Union is providing a Hanukkah buffet, Breakfast With Santa and a holiday buffet this month.

The Hanukkah buffet was from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Monday at the Union's Bluemont Buffet.

- Holiday buffet

  When: 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Dec. 12
  Cost: $7 a person

The chef met with a rabbi who gave him kosher-style recipes for the meal, Braun said.

"Eric Braun and Jason McGraw, the chef, try to incorporate as many of the traditional foods as they can," Pam Soeken, catering director, said.

"We also do decorating in conjunction with whatever the theme is," she said.

Hanukkah decorations last year included menorahs and banners, and an ice carving of a dredel.

Decorations have been accumulating for years, Soeken said, especially for the Christmas meals.

"We have Santa's living room set up with Mr. and Mrs. Santa, with a decorated Christmas tree and mantel," she said. "We have lots of decorations to make it look nice."

Breakfast with Santa is from 7 to 11 a.m. Dec. 7 and 14 in Union Station. Cost is $2.

Children can sit on Santa's lap and get their pictures taken while enjoying a nice breakfast, Soeken said.

The holiday buffet is from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Dec. 12. This meal, which costs $7, will include honey-glazed ham and other traditional holiday foods.

"We try and have the foods that your grandma used to fix," Soeken said.

This holiday food program was created by Braun and is in its second year.

"I think it's a break from the drudgery of everyday life," he said.

"Everyone enjoys the holidays, and it's a time to relax and get a break from our jobs and our studies."

Celebrating the holidays with food is also a way to celebrate other cultures, Braun said.

"Food is the international language anyways," he said. "What a better place to have that than in the Union?"

Bush still hinting toward war following week of inspections

By Sandra Sobiera
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – President Bush warned Iraq's Saddam Hussein that he has until Sunday to prove he is serious about averting war. After the first week of United Nations weapons inspections, Bush said, "So far, the signs are not encouraging."

"The inspectors are not in Iraq to play hide-and-seek with Mr. Saddam Hussein," the president said Monday at the Pentagon, in his first extensive comment on the United Nations weapons inspections.

"In the inspections process, the United States will be making one judgment: Has Saddam Hussein changed his behavior of the last 11 years? Has he decided to cooperate willingly and comply completely, or has he not? So far, the signs are not encouraging," Bush said.

As evidence, he noted that Saddam's regime has recently fired upon American and British pilots patrolling no-fly zones over Iraq and has responded to United Nations disarmament demands with "protests and falsehoods."

"On or before the eighth of December, Iraq must provide a full and accurate declaration of its weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missile programs," Bush said, referring to a deadline established by the U.N. Security Council resolution unanimously approved last month.

Making clear that the consequence would be war, the president added:

"The temporary peace of denial and looking away from danger would only be a prelude to broader war and greater horror. America will confront gathering dangers early before our options become limited and desperate."

Sunset Zoo endures smaller crowds, cooler temperatures

By Jessica Pitts
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The temperatures are dropping, but the level of activity at Sunset Zoological Park remains high.

"We don't slow down in the wintertime," said Melissa Miller, market developing officer for the zoo. "We are full force with animals, staff and visitors."

The zoo, open 360 days a year, receives about 60,000 visitors each year, Miller said.

While a majority of the patrons come to the zoo in the warmer months, the cold weather doesn't always affect attendance.

"It is a different experience if you come to the zoo in the wintertime," she said. "We have a hearty collection of animals for both seasons, because we are in the middle of Kansas."

Ninety-eight percent of the zoo's animal collection stays out year-round, head keeper Lisa Greening said.

"It depends on the animal, but most of them don't mind the cold weather," she said.

The Siberian tigers, snow leopards and North American river otters are more active in colder weather, Greening said.

"If people can brave a little bit cooler temperatures, it is worth coming out," said Greening, who has worked at the zoo for 14 years. "A lot of the animals are more alive."

While zoo administration does expect to see a decrease in visitors during the winter months, Miller said they are sometimes surprised by the turnout.

"Last year, we had record attendance in January and February," she said. "More people came out during those winter months than they did in March because of the weather. We had a warm winter, and March was extremely rainy."

A majority of the zoo's facilities are outdoors, which means the weather is a big deciding factor of the attendance level.

"It is busy during the winter, but when it is 20 degrees, you don't see a lot of people," Greening said.

"Same thing when it rains. Since we have a limited number of indoor facilities, visitors have to battle the weather if they come to the zoo – rain or shine."

ATTACKS | al-Qaeda takes credit

narrowly missed an Israeli charter plane departing from Mombasa's airport, in what was the first phase of the dual attack on Israelis in Kenya.

The five-page claim was made in the name of "The Political Office of al-Qaeda Jihad Organization."

Unlike four years ago, when the United States was the target in Kenya, the statement said this time the message was for Jews.

"We send them a message: Your practices in corrupting earth, occupying sacred places, criminal acts against our families in Palestine ... all your practices will not pass peacefully without firing back," it said. "Your children for ours, your women for ours, your elders for ours, and we will follow you wherever you are because you made us live in terror and fear."

It pledged that further attacks would be carried out, saying "it is a war between faith and the infidel, between truth and fallacy, between justice and injustice."

The only other claim of responsibility came shortly after Thursday's attacks, made in a fax to news organizations in Beirut from the previously unknown Army of Palestine. Palestinian officials have denied any involvement by Palestinian groups.

IS GOD CALLING YOU AND GETTING A BUSY SIGNAL?

In today's world, it's so easy to lose sight of why we're really here. So perhaps the thought of devoting your entire life to God has never crossed your mind.

Then again maybe it has. Maybe you're the one of the rare women who are being called by God to follow in the footsteps of Jesus. And if you'd only take a moment to really listen to your inner voice. God will get through.

We are the Sisters of St. Joseph, an international order with roots right here in Wichita. And we invite you to come live a life of holiness, in a community where we strive for unity and reconciliation among all people with God and with one another. Ours is a community of prayer and service. Our dedication to God motivates us and is the source of joy for all that we do.

But how can you know if you truly have been called? Do you feel a longing for more in your life? Do you feel a void in your heart? Do you radiate joy? Does love pour out of your smile and do you long to follow Jesus?

If so, you owe it to yourself to answer God's call. To learn more about The Sisters of St. Joseph, call or visit us online. You'll be eternally grateful you did.

THE SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH OF WICHITA

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Loyalty, spirit of 'Ref Crew' commendable

They are the K-State "Ref Crew," and they could teach us all a lesson in school spirit.

This group, established in 2001, consists of 11 students. Their job? Attending each and every men's and women's home basketball game, as well as some volleyball, baseball and football games.

Clothed in referee-style garb, the group has been referred to as "extreme fans," and even was presented with 11 front-row season tickets to women's basketball home games, courtesy of Coach Deb Patterson.

The "Ref Crew" is so committed to the teams that it has six substitutes available to fill any empty seat.

Coaches and players have given positive feedback to the group and see the Crew as a staple of their fan base.

K-State is rich in tradition as far as sports are concerned. The "Ref Crew" recognizes this. So should the rest of us.

There is a lot to celebrate in K-State sports, and strong crowds help to maintain the energy that sports teams thrive off.

Being a part of the university experience begins with spirit, and the K-State "Ref Crew" is exactly what some of our sports teams need.

So, take a hint from the zebra-clad crew, and support our Wildcat athletic program.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

No Winners in War:

Greeks, non-greeks battle with claims of superiority

Illustration by Ben Dolezal | COLLEGIAN

It's a war that began before they even realized it was a war. Every day it pits husband against wife, boyfriend against girlfriend and friend against friend. Recently, it's been waged between on- and off-campus students.

ANGEL WILSON

The war wears the mask of greekdom. It has gotten to the point where no one is safe from the supposed harm of this rage.

What is the big deal? The office of Greek Affairs reports that 3,400 undergraduates belong to the greek community. Being greek is obviously a choice not shared by all of us. But it isn't a lifelong condemnation to hell, either.

Like other choices in life, it isn't for everyone. Truthfully, non-greeks perpetuate many of the myths and stereotypes about greeks. How can a person who isn't involved in something know everything about it? That's a lot like trying to be president and never having been involved in politics, or trying to tell somebody to study abroad when you've never left Kansas.

Sure, at times it might seem like greeks are the devil, with their themed T-shirts and intramural monopoly, but that's just a small piece of the pie. There are pros and cons.

Greeks have built-in community. It is somewhat easier to meet people when you live in a house where people are interested in at least a couple of the same things as you. And greeks have a monopoly on campus. Sixty-five percent of our campus leaders are greek. It is easier for them to form intramural teams or volunteer groups because they have a greater number of people who can concentrate on those areas.

Greeks also have more opportunities for leadership, too. Imagine being in a house where there is always something going on. There has to be a chair for this program, an officer at this meeting, a delegate at this conference, a volunteer for this cause and a representative for this council. It is almost impossible not to become a leader.

There are, however, arguments against greekdom. Unfortunately, the myths of cloning are true, but only if you allow yourself to become another brainless statistic. Individuals are what make all organizations distinctive. It might be OK to resemble people, but to act like their conjoined twin is ludicrous.

Dressing alike does happen on occasion, too, but only because when you start hanging out with people, you develop similar tastes. How many of you started wearing flip-flops because you saw someone else with some?

Doesn't it logically make sense that if a house buys T-shirts in bulk, there is a chance that members will wear them on the same day?

Greekdom caters to an elitist ideology, but to be the best, you have to have the best.

Some say greeks act snobbish, rude and think they are too good. This really should be judged on an individual basis because that might have been the person's personality beforehand.

That is another thing about greeks – the actions of one are transferred to the entire organization. That is just like being convicted because your mother stole bread from Wal-Mart, or your father laundered money from his job.

Accountability rests with the individual first.

It is no secret that there remains discrepancy in the opinions of greeks. But what is the true issue? Is it that most of you complaining want to be greek? Is it because you knew someone who became greek that shouldn't have? Or is it because you just hate greeks?

In any case, greeks are people. There is a glamorous side, but there also are flaws. Your job is to decide if it's something you would like to find out for yourself. This way, your arguments can be taken a little more seriously.

Or, you can take the theory that I have about my sorority sisters, "Individually unique; together complete."

Moral issues important to religious, non-religious people

Concepts of right and wrong are essential to a society because they create a framework called morality.

NASRINA BURNETT

For instance, it is good to be kind and charitable. It is bad to take something that doesn't belong to you.

The source of a person's morality can come from different places, but the most frequently cited origin is religion. This leads to a mistaken idea that a person who professes to be non-religious is immoral. It is too often assumed, when one professes to be atheistic or agnostic, that he or she rejects religion to avoid following rules of morality. However, it is only by rejecting religion as justification for morality that one can achieve the potential to develop a more advanced moral code.

My first reason for placing morality above religion in importance is that we need the concept of morality to evaluate and discuss religious beliefs. To understand the topic better, we should look at what constitutes religion.

Webster's Dictionary defines religion as "An organized system of beliefs and rituals centered on a supernatural being or beings." This allows a variety of practices to be determined immoral, yet religious. Hypothetically, there could be a religion that believed stealing is an appropriate way of obtaining what one wants. We wouldn't want to say stealing is moral, but in this circumstance, we would have to say it is religious.

Many religions allow believers to elude morality through forgiveness. A person can rape or murder, among other immoral actions, and avoid being condemned by asking forgiveness. Meanwhile, those same religions condemn anyone who does not subscribe to their doctrine, even if they have led a virtuous life.

This boils down to plain hypocrisy.

It's evident in examples throughout history of devastating acts in the name of religion. The crusades justified slaughter with religion. Another example is the Spanish Inquisition, which tortured and killed in the name of religion. A more modern-day example is Fred Phelps, who uses religion to justify the spread of hate.

These situations are analogous to with placing the law beyond reproach. We depend on the right to question the morality of the law and to speak out against laws with which we disagree. If we simply accepted any laws the government passed without ever questioning their morality, alcohol still would be illegal due to prohibition, and it still would be illegal for women and black people to vote.

This same line of thinking needs to be applied to religious doctrine.

I understand that many people are reluctant to question their religious beliefs because it would contradict having faith. But it makes more sense to say that true faith will be able to withstand questioning.

Using morality to justify religion allows multiple religions to unite on the basis of common moral ground. Even when beliefs about how the world originated or what days are holy disagree, the importance should be placed on the morals they share in common.

People too often allow themselves to focus on the differences between religions in order to justify claims that their own practice is superior to others. By focusing on the more important morals, we realize that there is a unifying theme among most of today's main religions.

This same concept allows us to understand how individuals who do not subscribe to organized religion can still possess the same moral framework as those who do.

We should use moral reasoning in order to determine if religious beliefs are ethical. Morality gives us the ability to justify religious doctrine. Neglecting to question religious beliefs is dangerous because it deprives people of the ability to reason independently about the concepts of right and wrong.

TO THE EDITOR

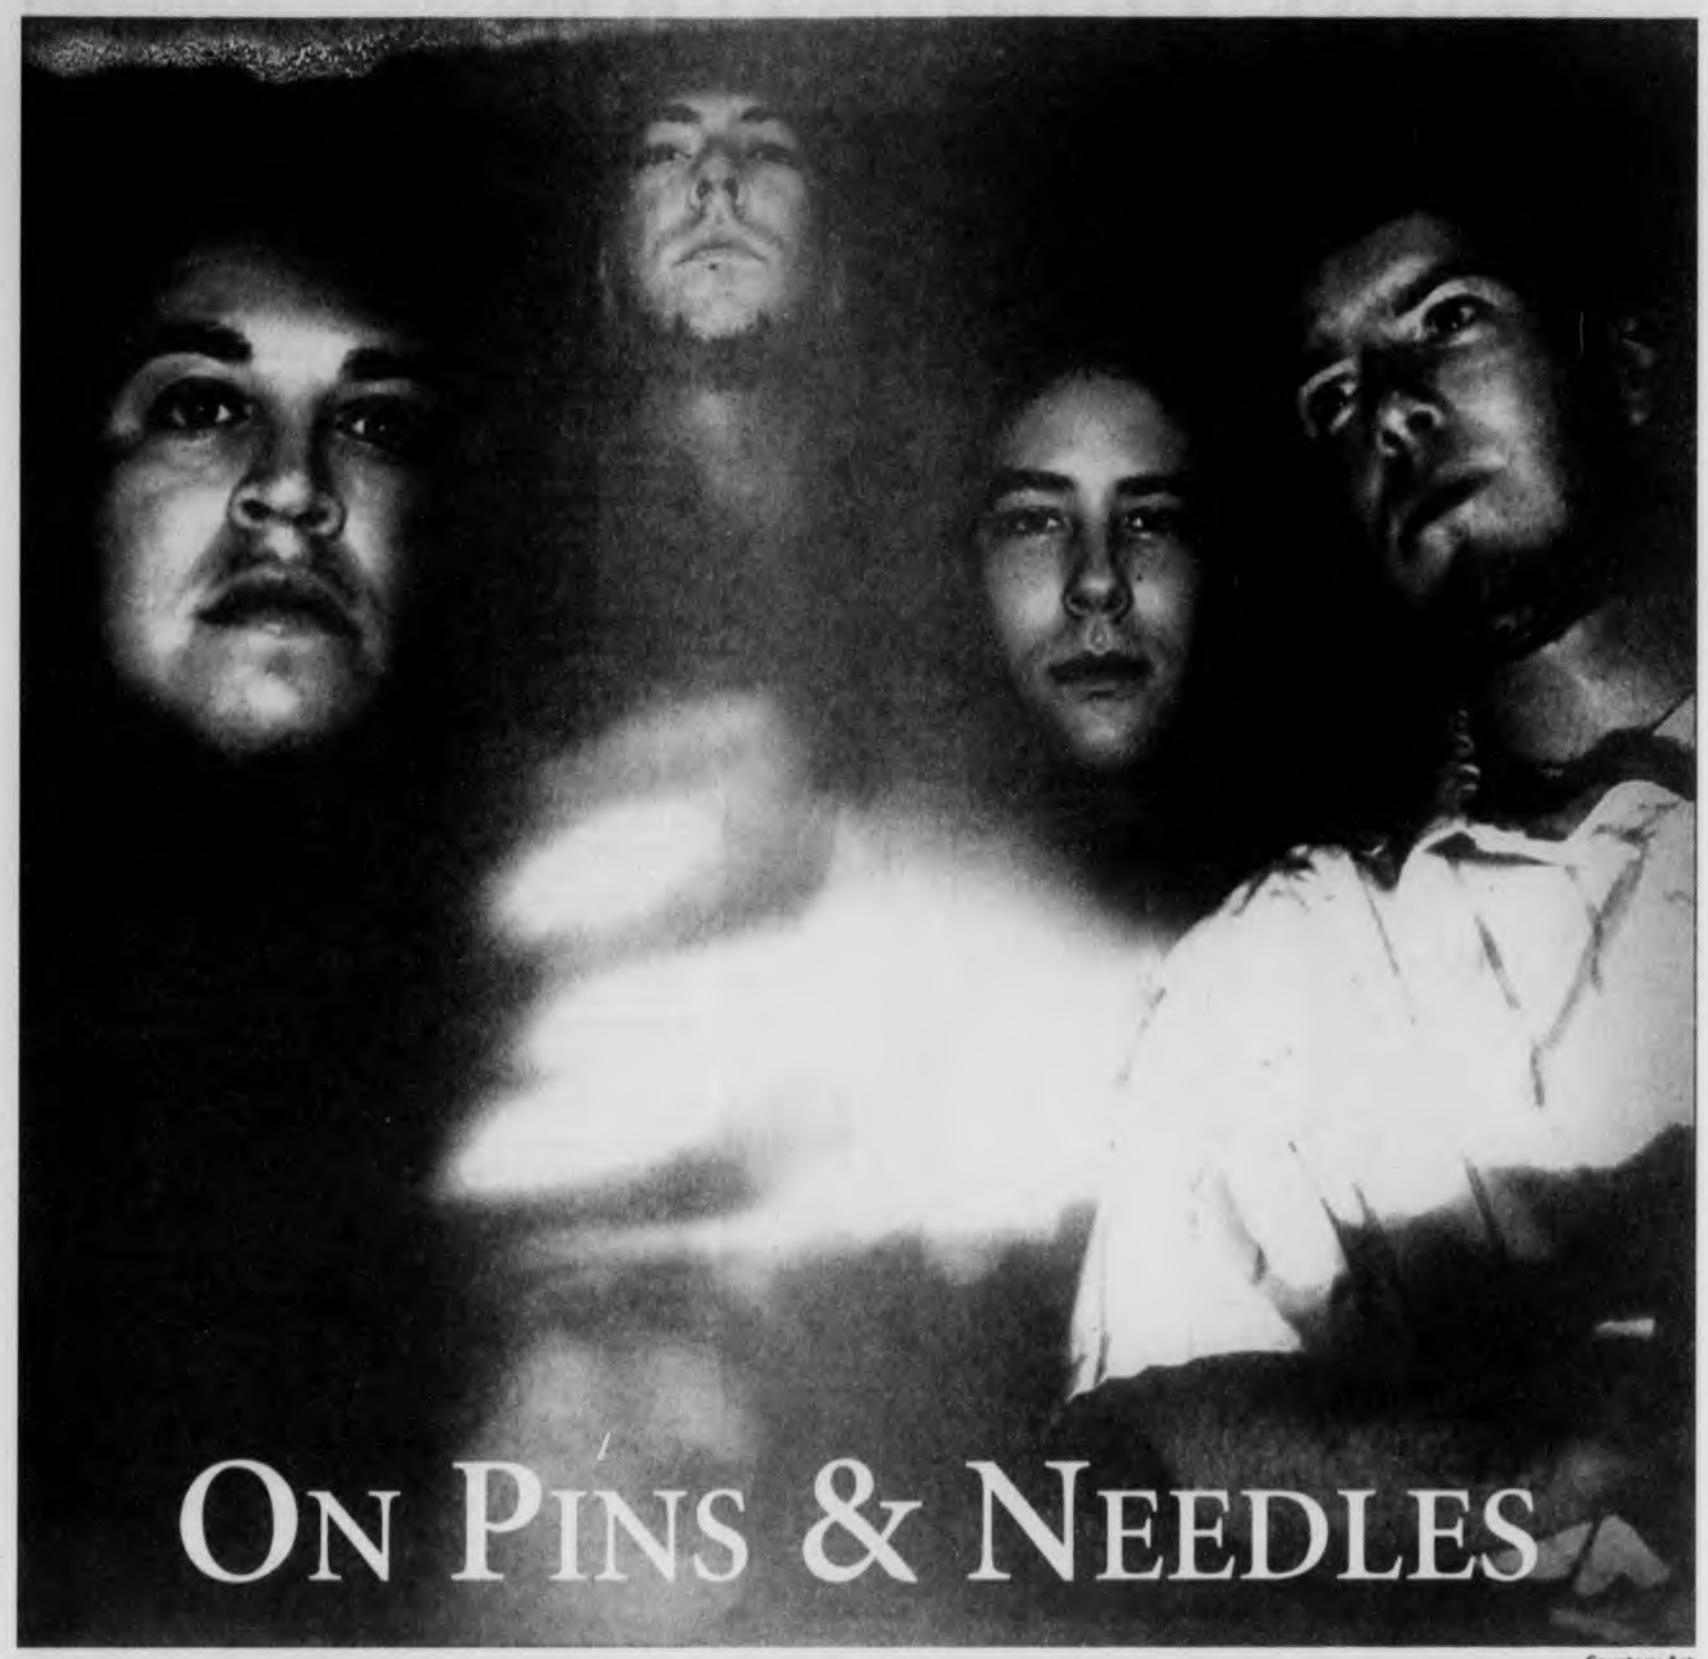
War on Iraq about more than oil

Editor,

There seems to be a growing consensus among our citizens that the only reason our government wants to go to war with Iraq is somehow to benefit from Iraqi oil.

This is a ridiculous argument.

Saddam Hussein is a dangerous man. Since the end of the Gulf War in 1991, he has continually failed to meet the demands of the United Nations. The only logical reason one can ascertain for this type of behavior is that he is trying to hide something.



We all know that Saddam has weapons of mass destruction. We all know he has used chemical weapons on his own people. And, we all know that building a nuclear device is not as hard to do as it once was.

What is to stop him from loading up a SCUD missile with nuclear device and shooting it at Israel? Nothing, unless Uncle Sam does something first. We have the responsibility to all of the people of the Middle East to keep this man from killing thousands. And no, a war against Iraq is not a war against the Iraqi people.

Like the war on terrorism, we only want to get rid of the people in charge. We do not want to kill the mistreated people of Iraq. This is the 21st century. We have the ability to destroy the Iraqi military's infrastructure without killing a mass of Iraq's citizens. Granted, a few casualties will be counted, but nothing like wars of the past.

If the U.N. inspectors fail, we must support our government in this war. The stability of the Middle East depends on it.

Local band to release debut album tonight during concert at Silverado Saloon

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Watching John Franco behind his rock-star kit of drums and cymbals is an experience.

Amidst the thrashing guitar riffs, screaming vocals and heavy bass lines of Pins & Needles, Franco sometimes threatens to steal the spotlight while sitting in the dimly lit back of the stage.

His fills drop in quick and cocky barrages that precisely emphasize the loud metal music. At times, it's like he's saying, "Look, Ma, no hands." He exudes confidence.

And confidence is what this band has. More than $10,000 worth.

Tonight's CD release party will be the culmination of the time, money and work Pins & Needles has put into recording its self-titled, independently released debut album. Franco, senior in graphic design, said that after figuring recording, production, printing costs, and promotion, the album will have cost the four members a figure exceeding $10,000.

With no support from any label, independent or otherwise, no preceding album or EP, a nearly non-existent fan-base and only a year and a half of experience, was it crazy to spend so much of the band's personal money to bring this album into existence?

"For us, it's worth it," Franco said. "As a band, we believe enough in ourselves that we think we'll get a return on that investment eventually. I believe in this band enough that I'll take this money out of my pocket and put it up. As they say, you've got to spend money to make money.

"Not that we're going into this with a business attitude, but to me, it's part of paying your dues as a band."

So, what if the album flounders and the band breaks up? Vocalist Ben Dickey, senior in illustration, maintains that the quality of the product is more important than its financial fate.

"We just want something good," he said. "I'm so sick of this garage demo crap that's recorded on a cheap Emerson tape recorder. We want something we can be proud of and hear on the radio and not say, 'God, that was bad.'"

The album itself is a meaty 10 tracks of mainstream Midwest metal style with notable influences from the sounds of Tool and the vocal style of Mike Patton from Faith No More and Mr. Bungle. The latter influence is enthusiastically worshiped by Dickey for using his vocals as an instrument where the delivery is more important than the actual words.

In "Bleed," for instance, Dickey goes from a staccato verse with a hint of vibrato at the end of each line until the song builds to choruses that find him "screaming hard as piss," in his own words.

The music is not exactly for light listening. Packed with tracks meant to be played at top volume with two songs sprawling beyond seven minutes, the mix is loud, sometimes obnoxious and other times more complex than your average local release.

Not many songs fit into the radio-friendly mold, but the band has come to terms with that, guitarist Doug Buseman, senior in graphic design, said.

"If I m playing something or writing something that I like, I don't want to conform it to fit radio standards," he said.

Of lengthy tracks like "Stool," bassist Chris Cossette, senior in Spanish, said the band plays until "they end where they end."

Though a good deal of money was spent on the recording, it was kept local at the Manhattan M&M studio and produced by owner Joe Mills.

The band had nothing but good things to say about the producer, who lends the album a sense of polished musical authenticity in what could have been an ill-conceived endeavor.

"People don't even realize he's around here," Dickey said.

Tonight's show will be the first time many people have heard a full set from Pins & Needles. Franco and Dickey both acknowledged the difficulties and benefits of winning over fans.

"Nobody knows about us here, but we want Manhattan to appreciate us and see the things we do even if they don't like us," Dickey said. "It is hard to play here, and it's really hard to gain the respect of this town. This is our hometown, so I hope they come out and know we're here."

Franco said it is hard to get an audience to try to understand what the band is doing musically, but that burden lies upon the band as its "job to make people believers."

Sitting around a table littered with a few pitchers of beer and the remnants of about 50 chicken wings, the four personalities come out the most. While Franco is comfortable, he's business-like and goal-oriented, Buseman and Cossette are happy to sit back most of the time, interjecting thoughts when they think it will help. Dickey looks like a kid waiting for Christmas.

He fidgets and rephrases sentences when he gets too excited, sometimes randomly blurting, "but don't put that in," during the interview.

But above all, he looks like he can't wait for people to hear the final product.

"We don't care so much whether anything ever happens, but when we get old, we can have an album to show to our kids and say, 'This is what we did when I was young,'" he said. "So, why half-ass it?"

E! asks viewers to pick 'True Hollywood Story of the Year'

What was the biggest celebrity story of 2002 — was it Liza Minnelli's marriage? Or Robert Blake's arrest for the murder of his wife?

Those are among the finalists for "The E! True Hollywood Story of the Year."

E! Entertainment Television has chosen five episodes from those that aired this year, based on ratings, newsworthiness and how much each subject lives up to the definition of "The E! True Hollywood Story."

Starting Tuesday, viewers can log onto E!'s Web site and vote for what they believe is the top celebrity story of 2002. "The E! True Hollywood Story Of The Year" premieres at 7 p.m. Dec. 22.

Japanese tale of horror The Ring' comes home to fans

An eerie story about a haunted videotape that spells death to its viewers is coming home as a Hollywood hit and playing to rave reviews in its country of origin — Japan.

"The Ring," starring Naomi Watts, is based on a low-budget, 1998 Japanese movie, "Ringu." Its success has kindled hopes here of new writing and movie-making opportunities.

Films by past Japanese masters such as Akira Kurosawa, Yasujiro Ozu and Juzo Itami once inspired Hollywood. Kurosawa's 1954 "Seven Samurai" gave birth to "The Magnificent Seven," and George Lucas has acknowledged his indebtedness to Kurosawa for his "Star Wars" movies.

But "The Ring," from DreamWorks, is the first major Hollywood film to be based on a Japanese movie in years.

A weakened economy means many U.S. opera companies and orchestras are facing financial crunches, reflected in less-than-brisk box-office sales, delayed ticket purchases, declines in subscriptions and fund-raising, and curtailed programs.

Tiger should not be focus of gender controversy

NICK BRATKOVIC

Tiger Woods should play in next year's Masters.

The New York Times in a recent editorial asked him not to play until the Augusta National Golf Club allows female golfers to become members.

Yes, that is the latest. The gender equality movement is targeting the Masters.

It's a sign of progress. Women used to want just the opportunity to play the game. Now, they want to play everywhere.

The leaders of the movement say they will take their case to the advertisers. The rationale is that it will hit the Masters' organizers where it hurts – in the pocketbook.

The movement's organizers said it's a way to get the Augusta National Golf Club to admit female members.

I find it unfair that Woods is being singled out. He is the best golfer on the planet. But that doesn't make him an activist.

This is 2002 – organizers say it is time for the course to get modern.

It's really difficult to disagree.

The thing is, it's a private club. Augusta Golf Club has been segregated for years. There is no government money involved. They are not legally obligated to allow female members.

Sure, socially, it makes sense. But in an era of war, terrorism and a sluggish economy, why worry about this?

It does not fit into America's group consciousness. To me, forcing a backward golf course to change its ways just isn't a priority.

Yet, there is still the cause. Gender equality is being sought on the links. I guess it parallels the corporate world as America seeks gender diversity at the executive level. It just shows how far we have come. This latest movement is the residue of Title IX and a country that demands gender equality. The Masters would be the final straw.

Yet I find it unfair that Woods is being singled out.

He is the best golfer on the planet. But that doesn't make him an activist.

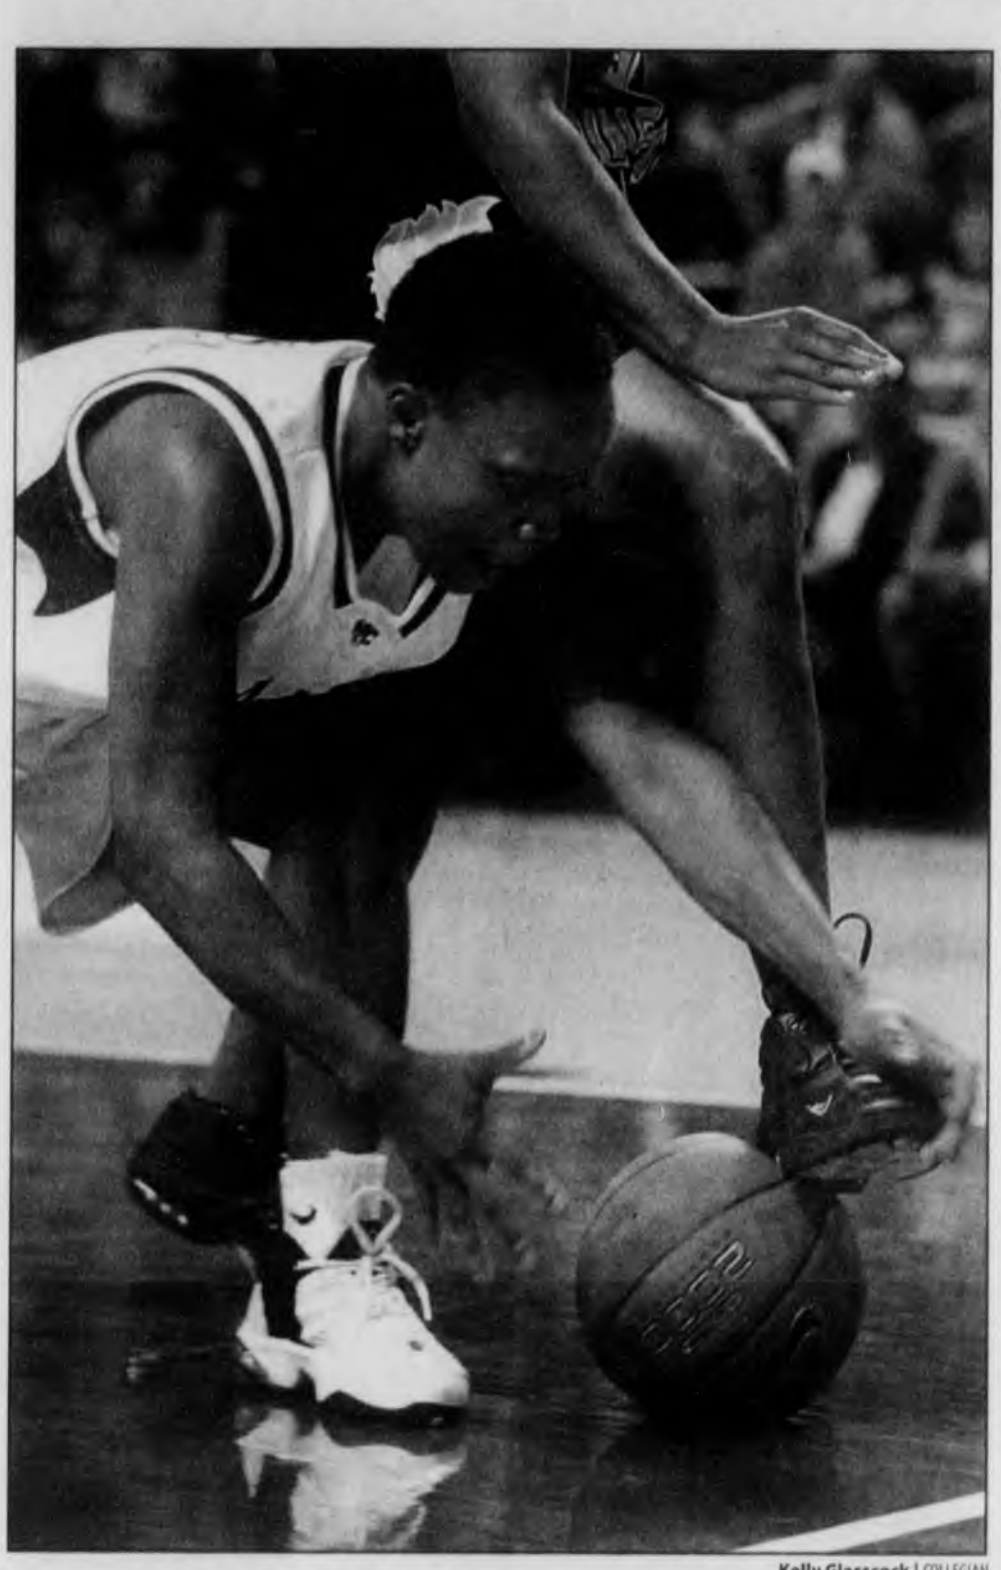
He is pretty boring if you aren't watching him on the golf course.

Woods doesn't care who plays what course, as long as they don't slow down his round or muck up the green. He doesn't make money because of the way he feels, but rather the way he putts.

The formula seems to work for Woods.

So why do we always expect more from Woods and great athletes?

For some reason, society equates being physically gifted with being morally impeccable and intelligent. That isn't right.



We shouldn't expect Tiger Woods not to play the Masters because he is the best player. This issue is bigger than golf, or any one player. As a country, America needs to decide what it wants from Augusta, but Woods doesn't need to take a stand for it to happen.

Trust me – if the ratings plummet next year and nobody watches the Masters, then good business will force the Club leaders' hands.

Targeting advertisers is a smart move. However, zoning in on Woods isn't necessary.

K-State's Kimmery Newsom dives for the ball as Arkansas-Pine Bluff's Thuretta Arnold steps on the ball and kicks it out of bounds during first-half action Monday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Cats rough up Pine Bluff, 115-37

By Ben Fehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State opened with a 7-0 run against Arkansas-Pine Bluff Monday night at Bramlage Coliseum and never looked back in its 115-37 win over the Golden Lions.

Pine Bluff guard Danisha Garrison broke the run with a 3-pointer, but the Cats countered with 26 unanswered to make things official early.

At the half, Megan Mahoney had 14 to lead all scorers and Laurie Koehn had 12, but every Wildcat had scored by the time the first-half buzzer sounded, and K-State started the second period up 53-12.

In the second half, it was more K-State dominance as four Wildcat starters powered their way to double-digit nights. Koehn, Mahoney, and Kendra Wecker finished with more than 20 each, and Nicole Ohlde had 17 points to go along with four blocks.

Ohlde's block total made her the all-time K-State leader in the category.

The sophomore said it was good for everyone to get involved in the win.

"It's always good to have everyone get a lot of experience out there," Ohlde said.

"It's definitely going to help us in the long run, and I think all of us wanted to play the whole game through, but it's very good for everyone to get experience, and I think it will definitely help us."

Pine Bluff Coach Angela Daniels said a need to improve is the only thing the Golden Lions were able to take away from the blowout.

"They were able to execute and make good shots," Daniels said. "We need to re-evaluate, and we need to get better. We need to get better as a team.

"K-State is an excellent ball club," she said. "But I don't think that they're 78 points better than we are. I think we just need to work harder."

Pine Bluff might need some more work, but Koehn wasn't having any trouble finding her game from three-point range. The sophomore chipped in 23, going six for nine from long range.

Koehn said Saturday's loss to Stanford left a lot of K-State's players eager to return to the court.

"We were all happy we had a chance to play this quickly after the disappointment on Saturday," Koehn said. "Everyone just came out really excited to have the opportunity to play again.

"We just wanted to come out, execute our offense, play good defense and rebound the ball at a higher level than we did last Saturday."

The Wildcats were certainly able to perform at that high level last night, and K-State broke some school and Bramlage Coliseum records along the way.

K-State's 115 points against Pine Bluff set the school record for points in a single contest. Also, the 78-point difference between K-State and Pine Bluff set the school record for largest margin of victory.

Coach Deb Patterson said the emphasis for Monday's game was more on the Wildcats than the Golden Lions.

"We knew going into this game our priority was Kansas State Basketball," Patterson said. "There was a way we wanted to play. There were priorities we were going to put in place.

"We weren't necessarily focused on the opponent," She said. "We were focused on execution, assignments on defense, getting physical on the boards and playing Kansas State basketball."

Jessica McFarland and Brie Madden tower over Arkansas-Pine Bluff's Jessica Fulce during the Wildcats' 115-37 Monday night. K-State set a new record for points in a game with 115. "It's one of the best teams to ever wear the Kansas State jersey," Coach Deb Patterson said. "I think it's fitting that they would have another record in the Kansas State history."

Koehn posts impressive performance

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a dismal performance against Stanford on Sunday, it would have been easy for Laurie Koehn's confidence to be damaged.

But Koehn isn't that type of player, Coach Deb Patterson said.

The Wildcat sophomore scored a team-high 23 points Monday night as K-State rolled over Arkansas-Pine Bluff, 115-37.

Koehn was coming off her worst offensive performance of the season, a five-point effort against the Cardinal.

"It's kind of hard to compare offensively," Koehn said. "We just took what their defense gave us, and they were giving us outside shots, and I think everyone stepped up and shot well."

However, Patterson thought differently.

"Just another demonstration of competitive maturity tonight," she said. "She stepped off the floor after Stanford just seeing a lot of good shots not drop for her.

"Tonight, the first shot she saw, she put it up with great confidence – nothing but net."

"We took what their defense gave us, and they were giving us outside shots, and I think everyone stepped up and shot well."

Laurie Koehn
SOPHOMORE GUARD

But Koehn would have to wait to get into the flow on K-State's third possession.

Junior center Nicole Ohlde nabbed a defensive rebound and immediately got the outlet pass to Koehn.

K-State's point guard took it from there, promptly dribbling to the other end of the court and sinking a three-point shot.

Koehn would have five more of those on the night. She missed just three shots from behind the arc.

The night looked like this for Koehn – 7-for-10 shooting from the field (6-for-9 from three-point land), 23 points, eight assists and seven rebounds. She even had four steals – all in just 25 minutes of play.

That was partly due to the bench giving the Wildcat starters some much-needed rest.

It was K-State's third game in four days.

So it was conceivable to think the Cats were just a little fatigued, right?

No way, Koehn said. They were ready to get back at it.

"I don't really know what jetlag is – sitting around on your back-side all day. I don't know how you get tired doing that. That's what we did yesterday so there is really no reason to be tired," Koehn said. "We were all really excited to come out and play and be in the game whether at the beginning or the end."

Enough said, according to Patterson.

"That's what great players are all about," she said. "That's what the best in the game – the Jordans and the guys like that – can have a bad night or a couple of bad nights and come back and drop down big plays.

"That's what Laurie Koehn's night was all about tonight."

Volleyball | Times change for weekend tournament games and matches

K-State athletic department officials announced time changes Monday for both the NCAA Volleyball First Round matches and the eighth-annual Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic this weekend.

In the NCAA Volleyball First Round, the 12th-seeded Washington State Cougars (21-7) will now play Mid-Continent Conference champion and automatic selection Oral Roberts (22-10) beginning at 5:30 p.m. Friday. K-State (20-8) will battle Michigan (16-14) 30 minutes after the conclusion of the first match.

The winners of Friday's two matches will still play at 7 p.m. Saturday for the right to advance to the NCAA Sweet 16.

The department also announced time changes for the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic at Bramlage Coliseum this weekend. On Friday, UW-Milwaukee will play Weber State at 3 p.m., while K-State battles Middle Tennessee State beginning at 5 p.m.

MLB | Phillies sign Thome

Jim Thome, the most coveted hitter in the free-agent market, agreed Monday to a six-year contract with the Philadelphia Phillies, two baseball officials said.

Thome, who hit a club-record 52 homers for the Cleveland Indians last season, accepted a deal worth about $87.5 million, one of the officials said on condition of anonymity.

For the deal to become final, Thome must pass a physical.

Philadelphia is aggressively trying to improve as it prepares to move into its new ballpark in 2004.

U.N. teams search Iraqi missile nerve center in longest-recorded inspection

By Charles J. Hanley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – It was combed over by inspectors, then blasted for days by U.S. air attack. But four years later the Karama ballistic design plant is still a focus of world concern, a place where new U.N. inspectors Monday conducted their longest search yet, looking for signs of outlawed Iraqi missiles.

After six hours in the well-guarded Baghdad compound, they departed, and the plant's deputy director said all went well. "They didn't find anything," Brig. Mohammed Salah told reporters.

The inspectors, as usual, had no immediate comment for waiting journalists. But a U.N. report later Monday said some equipment of interest at Karama was missing.

The Iraqis said some of the missing equipment had been destroyed in U.S. air attacks and some had been transferred.

It was the fifth day of renewed arms inspections after a four-year break. Until Monday, the longest inspections had been running about four hours, some much shorter.

The inspections come under a new U.N. Security Council mandate requiring Iraq to shut down any nuclear, chemical or biological weapons programs as well as any facilities to build missiles with more than the 90-mile range allowed under U.N. resolutions after the 1991 Gulf War.

A second U.N. team, of nuclear inspectors, visited industrial sites north of Baghdad on Monday.

Inspectors in the 1990s eliminated tons of Iraqi chemical and biological weapons and the equipment to make them, dismantled Iraq's effort to build nuclear bombs and destroyed scores of longer-range Iraqi missiles.

Those inspectors didn't believe they found all of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, however.

President Bush threatens to wage war on Iraq – with or without U.N. sanction – if it doesn't disarm. Bush indicated Monday he wasn't impressed with Iraq's cooperation thus far, saying inspectors don't have the duty or ability to uncover weapons of mass destruction hidden in the vast country, but that Iraq has a responsibility to provide evidence of total disarmament.

"So far, the signs are not encouraging," Bush said in a toughly worded speech at the Pentagon.

Other governments say that only the Security Council can authorize such an attack on Iraq, in a situation not involving immediate self-defense. The presidents of Russia and China, two of those governments, issued a statement Monday calling for a peaceful resolution of the U.S.-Iraqi showdown.

Karama missile plant

Location: Hidden behind 9-foot-high walls in Baghdad's Waziriya district.
Previous inspections: In the early 1990's, U.N. inspectors determined that engineers had developed guidance and control system for the "stretch Scud." In 1998, the U.S. military fired 18 cruise missiles into Karama.

ATHEISM | Students rely on logic for life's answers

The concept of eternal damnation was just one conflict Youk had with the religion he was taught as a child and young adult, which was Christianity, he said.

In late high school when Youk began to reevaluate the religion given to him, he said he found aspects of it that didn't sit well with him. However, Youk said it wasn't until a little later that he became an atheist. "Once I stopped being a Christian, I didn't go directly to being an atheist," Youk said. "That was a whole other process."

For Youk, his transition of beliefs began with considering the ideals of Deism, he said. But that did not last too long.

When searching the Internet for K-State organizations as a freshman, Youk said he was introduced to Individuals for Freethought and wanted to know more about the group. After having lunch with the Freethought president and meeting some other members, Youk became a regular member of the group.

And that was a catalyst in his switch to atheism, Youk said.

"I didn't think there was enough evidence to support the existence of the supernatural," Youk said. "And I was perfectly happy being an atheist. I stopped feeling the need to have a religious belief."

When Youk moved from being a religious person to a non-religious person, he said he went through a few rough spots but for the most part his daily life didn't change. Though he did not care for the thought of hell, he said he remembers struggling with the idea of there not being a heaven either. But after more consideration, he said, it became a good thing for him.

"I don't have any negative feelings about the idea that there might not be an after-life. I don't know for sure – I haven't died yet," Youk said. "It makes my life more meaningful, because if this is the only life I have, I have to make it the best."

Youk said he no longer adhered to religious taboos, but that didn't mean he went on a binge of socially offensive behavior.

"It's not like you stop being a moral person, but that the way you define your morality definitely changes," Youk said. "My moral system is based around doing the least amount of harm to others as possible."

Stephanie Fox, junior in biology, has a similar outlook on life and had a similar experience with Freethought. She said that after having religious doubts in high school, Freethought played a role in her decision to be an atheist. Fox said lack of evidence is her main reason for not believing in the existence of a god.

"I rely on science to tell me about the world," Fox said. "Talking about ethics and how I treat other people, I don't just accept society's prejudices. I take what society gives me, and I consider if it is logically right or not."

Though Freethought was part of Fox's and Youk's moves to atheism, not all members of Freethought are atheist, which Youk said is a common misconception about the group.

Also, Youk said, contrary to what others may think, Freethought's goal is not to be an anti-Christian organization.

"Part of being non-religious is not letting it define your life," Youk said. "But some atheists and agnostics are so obsessed with religion that it still defines their lives. Pushing your ideas onto others is a bad way to deal with people."

Matt Peterworth, junior in architectural engineering, is one member of Freethought who does not consider himself an atheist or an agnostic. He said that if he were to classify himself, he would be in the Zen-Buddhist category. Peterworth said he is part of the group simply because "they listen to me."

"Freethought supports stronger separation of church and state and is pro-science," Peterworth said. "Everything else we pretty much argue about."

As Youk said, Freethought serves as a medium for people to have an open forum without fear of social condemnation. Freethought encourages the basic acceptance of non-religious people and minority religions.

Finding faith

This is the fourth of five stories on different faiths present on the K-State campus. Watch the Collegian every Tuesday to learn more about what these religions mean to the students who practice them.

■ What is Individuals for Freethought?

Individuals for Freethought is an organization at K-State that brings together atheists, skeptics, humanists and others who value independent thought. The organization uses science and reason to counter dogma and authoritarianism, provides a voice and a community for freethinkers, fosters acceptance of non-theistic people and advocates separation of church and state.

■ Titles for non-theist people:

Atheist: a person who does not believe in the existence of a god or supreme intelligent being.

Agnostic: an individual who believes there is no way of proving the existence of a supreme being and therefore remains neutral on the belief in God.

Freethinker: one who rejects authority and dogma, especially pertaining to religion, and instead uses rational inquiry and speculation.

Deist: a person who believes in God and divine providence but rejects revelation.

Humanist: one who follows the philosophy of asserting human dignity and man's capacity for fulfillment through reason and scientific method, often rejecting religion.

FANS | 'Ref Crew' brings life to basketball games

willing to be very visible, it just shows the loyalty they have to our team," she said. "It definitely affects our players."

She also said it was especially nice to have the group because extreme fans are hard to come by in women's sports.

"You just don't get that extreme fan atmosphere in women's games," Ethridge said. "They're very devoted to our program. They travel with us – they went to the Colorado game last year. You don't see that a lot in women's basketball."

Last basketball season, Showalter said, the group would come to games sometimes six hours in advance to secure their front row seats.

Because of this, Deb Patterson, women's basketball coach, presented the "Ref Crew" with 11 front-row season tickets. The only requirement Patterson gave them, Showalter said, is to make sure the seats were always occupied.

"It kind of made all the stuff we went through last year worthwhile," he said.

Johnson said being given those seats motivated the ref crew even more.

"We almost feel in debt to Patterson because she was so nice to us and gave us those seats," Johnson said.

Showalter agreed.

"I think we hold a big responsibility to the team for all that they've given us," he said. "We owe them to fill the seats every game and be vocal every game."

In order to ensure that the seats are always filled, the crew has six "subs" who all have referee T-shirts and come to games as needed.

Past highlights for the crew, Showalter said, include being presented with the game ball after the K-State men's win over the University of Texas from Coach Jim Wooldridge and receiving a locker room tour from the women's team.

He said the crew was surprised to see pictures of themselves displayed in the women's locker room.

"I don't think everyone knew how much the team thought of us until we went down and saw that," Showalter said.

In addition to basketball games, the crew also has been spotted at volleyball, baseball and football games.

Attending these sporting events as extreme fans complements the college experience, Johnson said.

"I think it makes it a lot better," he said. "I always have so much fun going to the games."

Showalter agreed.

"If you're just a fan, you don't really get to be a part of the game," Showalter said. "Not only do we get to experience the game, but we get to be a part of it, too."

Steady holiday sales expected

Electronics, children's toys on everyone's shopping list

By Katie Lane
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite the struggling economy, store owners around Manhattan are expecting normal sales during the holiday season.

"Electronics are going to be big," Jeanette Standlee, Sears store manager, said. "We have some dual decks with DVD and VCR in one unit. We have an aggressive selling plan for the Christmas selling season."

One difference that stores will be facing this year is the type of gifts people buy.

In years past, customers have bought many different gifts, but this year people will be buying one big gift, Scott Bryson, assistant manager of Kmart, said.

"Home electronics will be big, especially with the tough economy," he said. "The unemployment rate is at an all-time high since the early 1990s.

"You're going to see customers that come in and stick to one item, like a DVD player for Dad."

A good type of gift for a wife, sister or mother will be anything that can make her life easier, Standlee said.

"Small kitchen appliances, bath spas and back massagers will be popular," she said.

"A woman's life nowadays is very hectic. To receive a gift that will give them some relaxation will be a hit item."

Wal-Mart Manager Roy Hulett said sweaters and dressier clothes have been selling well because they just started a new line of merchandise from George. He also said K-State attire is a popular gift for males.

"K-State merchandise is the biggest. The enthusiasm of the fan support determines how that stuff will sell," Hulett said.

At Sears, the gifts expected to sell well for males are power tools and table saws, Standlee said.

"I think that men still want to do it themselves on some projects, and this helps make it a lot easier," she said.

Electronics aren't only good gifts for the family, they are also ideal gifts for teenagers.

Hulett said they have been selling well at Wal-Mart.

"In electronics, everything that relates to the Playstation and Microsoft's Xbox is still doing very well.

"When there's new releases, they start to reduce prices," he said.

Hulett also said other electronic gifts such as DVDs and DVD players are good gifts.

"It's amazing how fast things go from video to DVD," he said.

"DVD units are getting more and more affordable all the time."

The expected popularity of children's gifts vary for each store.

At Kmart, the Yu-Go-Mei toy is expected to be a top-selling toy this year, Bryson said.

"It's been a pretty hot seller up until this point, and I expect that to be pretty big until Christmas," he said.

KB Toys Manager Jamie Pride said the bestselling toys so far range from stuffed animals to action figures.

"So far the most popular item is the FurReal cat," Pride said. "Nothing is even comparable.

"It is virtually widespread action figures for boys. Another really good thing for this year is CareBears.

A lot of people had them when they were younger, he said.

Little girls are buying them because they are cute, and big girls are buying them because they had them when they were younger," he said.

Wal-Mart also is experiencing good sales from the return of the CareBears.

"One thing that came back this year was CareBears," Hulett said. "That's been phenomenal. Sometimes when things come back, they are real popular again."

At Wal-Mart, the biggest toy last year was Leap Pad products.

Hulett said they are still selling strong this year.

"One of the big toys last year and is good again this year is the Leap Pad merchandise," he said. "It's very big."

SEASONAL SUGGESTIONS

Stumped holiday shoppers can turn to Collegian for useful gift suggestions

AMBER KOEHN

Once again the holidays are upon us, and the Collegian has compiled ideas for its annual Holiday Gift Guide.

This collection of how-to articles is sure to include something for everyone.

There are stories on how to budget yourself while buying gifts for all those friends and relatives, how to buy for that special someone and the top gifts of the 2002 holiday season.

We have an assortment of very special gift ideas you will not find anywhere else on the planet, especially if you're taking the "in good taste" route.

These are not the average, "ho-hum" gifts that get shoved in the back of a drawer or closet. No way! These are the impressionable gifts that go straight to the trash bin.

Take one of my worst holiday gifts, for example. The electric fuzz-ball remover given to me by my uncle (I love the guy and all, but I can't contain the rage any longer) originally looked like a great gift. I really hate those little balls of lint that stick to everything from sweaters to socks to my winter coat. So, this gift was definitely going to come in handy.

At least until the vibrating fluff vacuum snagged more than a lint ball. Before I knew it, the crocheted afghan my great-grandmother made me was nothing more than a large pile of yarn.

I should have sent it to the folks in Cawker City so they could add it to their beloved twine ball, but sadly, it was introduced to the Dumpster.

But I'm sure I'm not the only one who has received one of these grit-your-teeth-and-smile-while-cussing-under-your-breath gifts. Trust me, they're on every infomercial this side of the Mississippi.

However, at the risk of sounding like Sally Struthers, there are thousands of starving and underprivileged children all over the world who desperately need our compassion and unwanted gifts. The bobble-head Willie from McDonald's you are saving for your nephew would make a great addition to any Red Cross food sack.

We don't need the latest and greatest gadgets and gizmos.

Instead of buying everything new and flaunting our Christmas bonuses, we should just break out the toys stored away in the attic. After all, Christmas isn't about material things (insert sarcastic laugh here).

In all reality, though, it is inevitable that you will reflect on this holiday season and wince at the pile of undesirable grab-bag gifts, family gift-exchange items and anonymous secret-pal relics. You will unavoidably ask yourself what, in God's name, you are going to do with all your newly acquired junk.

To ease your pain, the Collegian has instated a Holiday Gift Guide "No Questions Asked" policy: If you purchase one of the Gift Guide items or received one from someone you know, and, for any reason, are not completely satisfied, simply send the item to us in shrinkwrap, along with the receipt of purchase, the lease to your apartment, your second cousin's wife's brother's birth certificate and a copy of your last physical examination.

Without questioning your motives for returning whatever it is that left you wondering what on earth you or the gift-giver were thinking, we will give you a full refund within four weeks, or 35 years, depending on the mood of our editor in chief.

The Collegian is not responsible for any stupid purchases made before reading our Gift Guide. We also are not responsible for refunding purchased items not appearing in our Gift Guide.

Our operating budget only stretches so far.

Columnist counts down worthless gifts; meat logs, socks not worth the bother

PAUL RESTIVO

There are some gifts that should be banned from Christmas lists.

What used to be a celebration of Christ's birthday has now become a month of collecting as much junk as possible. Christmas part one begins on Thanksgiving, when everyone exchanges Christmas lists.

Then comes Christmas part two on Dec. 25 – the day we decide which gifts we will keep, trade, exchange or toss.

Every year, there are six gifts that make their way under my Christmas tree. They are the six gifts everyone thinks everyone else wants. But they are the same six that make me wish the magi would have stayed home and just given Jesus a call.

1. The meat log – This gift should be banned simply because of the awkward situation it puts a person in upon receiving it.

What does one say after opening a couple pounds of meat?

"Hey, thanks for the meat. Can't wait to eat the meat." How weird does it feel when Grandma asks what your cousin bought you, and you say, "meat." Just don't buy this.

2. Socks – Christmas is not a time to be getting stuff you need.

It's about getting the stuff you want, but wait for Christmas, hoping someone will buy it.

Also, this creates another awkward moment while opening it.

"Hey, thanks. I needed socks." Nobody ever really wants socks, so that's the only response.

3. A card with money – This is a dangerous gift. If you open the card, you do one of two things. First, you look at the money and get excited, and then wave it in the air and do a stupid jiggle.

Aunt Nancy across the room yells, "Oh, so you don't like the card. Only interested in money, eh? Greedy little turd."

This is followed by her leaving the room and pretending not to cry.

The other response is to open the card, pretend to ignore the money while continuing to read the card to be courteous.

Then Aunt Nancy yells, "Oh, I stick in $30, and I get no reaction. Ungrateful, disrespectful brat." She leaves and pretends not to cry.

4. Gift certificate – This gift creates problems if you're the only person in the room receiving it.

Everyone else is working hard unwrapping something while you have an envelope.

It's not like you don't know what's inside of it.

So, you spend an absurd amount of time opening it, trying not to open it before anyone else opens a gift. Size does matter in this case.

If everyone else is opening up stereos and clothes, and you have a piece of paper – yeah, somebody took the easy way out with you.

5. Chia Pet – I just don't understand these. Every plant in Uncle John's house is dead from lack of water, but if the product will end up being a Scooby Doo with a brussel-sprouts afro, he'll water it twice a day.

6. Anything from Bath & Body Works – This is the ultimate I-give-up gift. If you have nothing to give someone, what do you give them? Soap and smell-good stuff.

You think you're giving a good gift until they open it.

Looking at their expression, you see that they can see right through you and that your peach-lotion basket is insulting.

These gifts have turned me into the Scrooge my family and friends have come to loathe.

Regardless, I have only 22 shopping days left. I have meat logs to buy.

CHILD'S PLAY

Trendy toys top shoppers' must-have lists

By Kari Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Toy shopping can dominate many Americans' lives during the holiday season.

There is often a "must have" toy, which parents go crazy over just to get that one desired gift for their child.

It didn't use to be this way, though.

Before any laws protected children from working, children were viewed as miniature adults and therefore worked right alongside adults, leaving almost no time to play, according to www.toys4kids.freeola.com.

Only when wages rose enough to support a family did children begin to be sheltered from the difficulties of life, Michael Ramsay, assistant professor of history, said.

When these children did have time to play, they created games and toys out of household items.

Later, in 1914, children playing with sticks inspired the creation of Tinker Toys, according to www.yesterdayland.com.

As time went on, toys become a larger part of children's lives.

In 1903, the introduction of the teddy bear, named after President Theodore Roosevelt, caused a buying frenzy known as teddy-bear mania.

Out-of-control consumer purchasing, such as this teddy-bear mania, continued throughout most of the 20th century.

The early 1980s brought the Cabbage Patch Kids, which also brought more shoppers to the stores to buy these dolls.

Cabbage Patch Kids became the most successful new dolls in the history of the toy industry because of this consumer pandemonium, according to www.yesterdayland.com.

The holiday season of 1998 was also a crazy buying season.

It was the year of Tickle Me Elmo, which, according to the Web site, tripled Christmas shopping crowds.

Toys also play a role in the lives of the children who play with them, Joan Twiggs, assistant professor of sociology, said.

"Toys are a way that our social structure socializes boys and girls into gender roles," Twiggs said.

"Boys and girls literally play at becoming socially appropriate men and women."

Barbie was created to be an idol for young girls when it was introduced in 1959.

The doll is meant to be a fashion model and holds different types of jobs to which girls can aspire.

For boys, the action figure was advanced in 1965 with G.I. Joe.

Created to promote a TV show, G.I. Joe paved the way for the many action figures that are popular today.

How do popular toys become that way?

"Usually it is by word of mouth. One person wants one, then someone else wants one, too. It just kind of snowballs from there," Jamie Pride, KB Toys store manager, said.

So far the hottest-selling toys Pride has seen this season are FurReal Friends Cats.

He said that once the store gets them in stock, the toys are gone.

"It started blowing up last month, and it hasn't stopped," he said. "It is our most popular toy right now."

Sticking to budget makes shopping less stressful

By Shannon Hartenstein
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Holiday shopping can be financially draining. But planning, research and discipline could help consumers set and stick with reasonable budgets.

Establishing a budget or spending plan is important in avoiding going overboard on spending, said Chris Burk, consumer credit counselor for Housing and Credit Counseling Inc.

"Christmas is not about the quantity or expensiveness of the gift, and some people tend to forget that," he said. "The meaning behind it is more important."

Early in the year, consumers should select gift recipients and decide how much to spend on each, Burk said.

After determining the total cost, shoppers can save a set amount of money each month to avoid a financial pinch in December, he said.

"It's a matter of basically just having things written down in front of you on paper and sticking to it," Burk said.

But holiday spending can easily get out of control, said Joyce Cantrell, family studies and human services instructor.

"People don't establish guidelines before they go shopping," Cantrell said.

Consumers need to look at where holidays fit into their financial situations, she said.

Determining a reasonable budget varies by individual, but Cantrell said she advises consumers to spend within their means. If consumers haven't been saving money for holiday expenses, they need to use only what is available from their discretionary cash flows, she said.

Cantrell said she recommends spending a few minutes every day to keep finances updated. She also said she keeps receipts and a notebook to keep track of what she's purchased to avoid exceeding spending limits.

When it is time to hit the stores, research could be helpful in finding the best buys, Burk said.

He said he encourages holiday shoppers to take a list of gift ideas with them and window shop to study prices.

"Then come back and compile all that stuff you've done. The next weekend, go directly to get only that," he said. "It kind of stops some of the compulsive shopping that takes place this time of year."

Spending isn't limited to only gift purchases. Costs for attending holiday parties and events also should be considered, Cantrell said. Holiday gatherings might demand special clothing, food and exchange gifts.

"If your social life has increased during the holiday season, you need to take that into account, as well," she said.

Borrow clothing, if possible, Cantrell said.

Burk also said party-goers should decide if it is cheaper to make food and drink items or purchase them already prepared. Don't forget to figure in costs of purchasing items for school, organization and work gift exchanges, he said.

Affordable gift options might include making homemade gifts, making coupons to do chores, or having ornament, cookie or white-elephant gift exchanges, she said.

"People are very creative in doing a lot with a little," Cantrell said. She said shoppers also can watch for sales. Retail sales have been moving slowly, so many stores have been having sales, she said.

Burk agreed. Some stores may have sales to avoid extra inventory work, he said.

"If you're good at planning, go after Christmas to buy for next year," he said.

Shoppers can find good deals on post-season sales, especially on holiday decorations, he said. But without adequate planning, holiday shopping could result in irresponsible spending habits and serious financial and credit consequences, Burk said.

"It's the impulse buying," he said. "When they're out seeing things, it's so easy to fall into the trap of using the credit cards and then having a big balance afterwards."

Credit card abuse can become a serious problem during holiday shopping, he said. An estimated 40 percent of people still are paying on credit balances incurred from last year's Christmas shopping, Burk said.

"It gets to the point where you run the risk of going over a credit limit," he said.

If a credit card holder has a $1,000 balance, makes no more purchases and only makes the minimum payments of 2 percent, or $20, it will take 63 months at a 9-percent annual percentage rate to pay off the card, Cantrell said. At 12-percent interest, it would take 70 months, and at 18-percent interest, it takes 93 months, she said.

"It's an expensive way to borrow money," Cantrell said. Consumers also can experience more trouble when minimum payments become too high to pay, Burk said.

This could result in late fees, over-limit fees and high interest, he said.

"Always try to pay off the balance in full every month, if possible," he said.

Always pay more than the minimum because usually it only barely covers the interest, he said. Burk also said he recommends tracking spending to see where money is going. This allows consumers to identify areas where spending could be reduced, he said.

Holiday budgeting

A holiday shopping survival guide offers tips for avoiding costly spending mistakes.

- Pay in cash. After setting a holiday budget, put that amount of money in an envelope. When it is empty, stop spending.
- Don't buy anything at full price. If it hasn't been marked down at least once, don't buy it.
- Give service gifts with coupon books. Family members can redeem services such as a car wash, a back rub, babysitting and house cleaning.
- Gifts of thoughtfulness could be the answer for individuals who have everything. Give a charitable donation in their name, deliver holiday meals to the elderly or donate toys for local children.
- Get a part-time job. The extra cash could make holiday spending less stressful.

Handmade, original gifts could be better for loved ones

Tina Deines
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The holiday shopping season is here, and couples are beginning to look for gifts for that special someone in their life.

Candice Spear, sophomore in international agribusiness, said gifts should be unique.

"Gifts that are more meaningful than expensive are good," she said. "I would try to buy them what they want."

Jake Marsh, sophomore in civil engineering, agreed.

"I try to avoid material gifts," Marsh said. "It's better to make something or be original."

Some examples Marsh mentioned were concerts, dinners and homemade gifts.

Marsh's girlfriend, Kristi Sargent, sophomore in apparel design, said she enjoyed getting a homemade music box from her boyfriend as a gift.

"I like receiving handmade gifts," Sargent said. "I think it shows they really thought about it."

Spear said one of her favorite gifts from him was a specially mixed CD.

"Anyone can make a CD, but it was a CD with all our songs on it," Spear said.

She said also likes to buy gifts with jokes behind them.

"I get Mark little gifts that are a joke between us, like I got Simpson's slippers because he likes 'The Simpsons,'" she said.

Katie Bachelor, junior in family studies community service, said she buys things she knows her boyfriend wants.

"I usually get stuff I know he has mentioned that he likes," she said.

Area merchants also are getting prepared for the season.

Lee Haar, custom design specialist at G. Thomas Jewelers, said the holiday season is a popular time for couples to purchase jewelry.

Although jewelry can be expensive, Haar said there are many options available for students on a budget such as diamond earrings, chains, watches and jewelry boxes.

Haar, however, cautioned buyers to make sure they buy from a trusted dealer.

"Wherever you would buy from, I would strongly recommend it is a reputable place," Haar said. "Just because you can get it at a better price on the Internet doesn't mean you will receive good service."

Renee Jackson, assistant manager of Maurices in Manhattan Town Center, said that coats and sweaters are also good gift ideas.

Jackson said there are specific clothing items that people should avoid buying as gifts.

"Stay away from shoes and pants because nobody knows anybody's sizes," she said.

Plenty of great offerings make music another attractive option for shoppers

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Music always has made the perfect gift for everyone, from those you are really close to, to the ones who barely made the final cut of your shopping list.

Here is a guide to some of the better discs on the racks this season.

Just avoid gift wrapping a burned CD.

Season picks

Various Artists: "MTV2: Hand Picked Vol. 2"

Boasting a healthy mix of everything that the masses have deemed cool this year, "Hand Picked" is good for people who listen to the radio and kind of like it all.

You've got your garage rock with the Hives and the Vines, your pseudo-indie with OK Go and Jimmy Eat World and frat boy acoustic rock with a live John Mayer track and Jack Johnson's "Inaudible Melodies."

Phantom Planet's "Lonely Day" is the hidden gem of the album, and Norah Jones and the Doves are on board to slow things down in a good way.

While "Now 11" is a more comprehensive compilation, "Hand Picked" boasts the more interesting lineup.

Dave Matthews Band: "Live at Folsom Field – Boulder, Colorado"

This loaded double live album is a recording of one concert from beginning to end, and the result is a real treat for hardcore Dave Matthews fans, but it is tiresome for anyone else.

No thought is given to radio play, so all those long jams are intact, and the band shines.

The succinct "Everyday" clocks in at eight minutes, 42 seconds, with some gospel harmonies, though it might not hold your interest the whole time.

The album builds to a funkified version of "Ants Marching" for the encore that takes two minutes before it starts. At least the fiddle solo is good.

Talib Kweli: "Quality"

Kweli unleashes his hip-hop for the thinking fan in these 16 tracks of skeptical rhymes.

The hip-hop artist sums up the past two years of politics in "Shock Body," addressing voter disenfranchisement, police violence (followed with praise for their work after Sept. 11) and racial profiling.

His expanded vocabulary and casual flow work with his clever phrasing to evoke cerebral activity.

The album is recommended for fans of Mos Def, the Roots or anyone who felt like raising a fist after hearing "Fight the Power."

Interpol: "Turn on the Bright Lights"

This Joy Division-influenced New York rock band is just right for that indie-rock newbie sibling back at home.

The band combines a deadpan vocal style with a television-esque drive to make expansive music that will make you want to dress in black even if you've never shopped outside Old Navy.

The single "PDA" is excellent, but check out "Stella Was a Diver and she was Always Down," for some serious indie goth.

Missy "Misdemeanor" Elliott: "Under Construction"

For the pop fan on that list, opt for Missy's irresistible beats and rhymes on "Under Construction," instead of the lackluster albums from Christina Aguilera and Britney Spears.

The single "Work It" is possibly the best dance single in the top 40 right now.

The rest of the album is filled with strong work featuring plenty of guest appearances from the likes of TLC and Beyonce Knowles.

Missy Elliott may have dropped some pounds, but she's still dropping heavy tracks.

Thievery Corporation: "The Richest Man in Babylon"

Thievery Corporation has received praise for this recent release featuring mellow electronica with soaring vocal parts and Eastern musical influences.

The music blends loads of world music influences the group has dredged up to make a truly interesting electronic album.

When Oakenfold and Moby fans start looking for something more complex but still laid back, this is the right album.

The Transplants: "The Transplants"

With Travis Barker of Blink-182 and Tim Armstrong of Rancid both on board, this is a good gateway album for that almost-a-punk-fan.

The album blends punk and hip-hop in an innovative style that will leave everyone asking where this music came from.

The truth is it came from 2-1/2 years of labor in Armstrong's basement, and the final result is one of the most fun albums of the year.

Season duds

Nirvana: "Nirvana"

Trust me, it's a disappointment.

If people tell you they are Nirvana fans, get them "Bleach" or "From the Muddy Banks of the Wishka" because they probably already own every song on "Nirvana" except for the new single.

The single "You Know You're Right" is indeed excellent but not worth the whole album since you can just download it.

The parties involved in releasing this polished dud would have been better off with the proposed box set, but maybe they'll save that for next Christmas, kids.

OK Go: "OK Go"

Imagine mixing Ultimate Fakebook with the Cars and a big bag of sugar and you'll have a good idea of what OK Go sounds like.

They are the next thing in cool and they come from Chicago, but the band's sweet sound is just like a pixie stick.

You can only take so much of this super-sweet rock 'n' roll before it starts getting on your nerves.

Stick to a few tracks from the album for burned CDs and your personal WinAmp, but don't listen to it all at once or your teeth may fall out.

Smoking put to vote

Students to decide smoking resolution during spring election

By Jamie Barrett
KANAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State might become a non-smoking campus.

In March, students will have the opportunity to vote about whether they would support a no-smoking policy on campus.

The question will be decided in a referendum vote, which will be on the ballot in the spring student government elections.

The issue was brought to the attention of Student Senate when a resolution to improve air quality on campus was introduced Oct. 31.

Student Body President Zac Cook, one of the authors of the resolution, said Senate considered the resolution but decided it would be better to let the students vote about whether to instate a no-smoking policy on campus.

Cook said both sides of the issue were strongly voiced during Senate meetings.

"There was a lot of input received about it," he said.

The strong opinions for both sides of the argument were the reason Senate decided to let the student body decide, Cook said.

"Both sides of the issue were adamant they were right," he said.

Vice Senate Chair, Vicki Conner, said that after the resolution was considered in front of the body, it was referred to the Student Affairs and Social Services.

The SASS committee then conducted a poll of 800 students in human development classes, regarding the policy.

Students graduate later

College careers lasting more than 4 years

By Rogie Dorpinghaus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eric Nally's voicemail message is, "Hi, this is Mr. Eric Nally, career student..."

Nally, senior in geography and international studies, refers to himself as a career student because he's been attending college for seven years.

Nally received his first bachelor's degree in January 2001 after five years of college and is now working on another major and a secondary major before he begins work on a master's degree.

According to a 2000 report published by the National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education, Nally isn't alone.

The report, "Measuring Up 2002," found that many students are taking longer than four years to get through college, based on 2000 census data.

Mike Lynch, associate vice president for educational and personal development, said many factors should be considered when determining an average for the number of years it takes for students to graduate from college.

He said that while K-State offers degrees in fields such as architecture and engineering that are geared toward completion in five years, the more common 120-hour degree programs are designed to be completed in eight 15-credit-hour semesters, or four years.

According to the latest figures, about one-third of students who have attended K-State since they were freshmen – and haven't dropped out – graduate in four to 4 1/2 years, Lynch said.

Lynch said that although the number of students graduating in four years is slowly increasing, about 85 percent of students graduate within five to 5 1/2 years, including the 33 percent who graduate in four years. This leaves about 10 percent who attend college for six years or longer.

According to an Associated Press article published on Dec. 1, 2002, in Newsday, ACT, NCAA and national magazines that rank colleges, claim that six-year graduation rates are the national standard.

Lynch said K-State is probably about average in comparison to other universities in terms of how long it takes students to obtain their degrees.

Finals, holiday shopping and semester projects dominate students' priorities this time of year – but for a night, none of that mattered.

"These kids are just barely starting life, and they're facing incredible trauma," Aaron Leiker, junior in mass communications, said. "We'll do anything we can to help them have a better life."

Leiker was one of about 700 K-State students who joined teams in the Up 'til Dawn philanthropy, a national organization formed to raise funds for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital.

The teams met Tuesday night at Flint Hills Christian School to design holiday cards and candy reindeer to send to patients at St. Jude.

"Every person – young and old – deserves a happy holiday season," Leiker said.

This is Up 'til Dawn's first year at K-State, and the student response has been phenomenal, said Sol Pettit-Scott, executive director and senior in chemical engineering. Nearly 100 teams already have raised close to $30,000 this year. No other school has ever raised more than $52,000 or had more than 63 teams, Pettit-Scott said.

Weapons inspectors search palace

U.N. team content with Iraqi cooperation during latest search

By Charles J. Hanley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – International weapons hunters went straight to the heart of Saddam Hussein's regime on Tuesday, searching the rooms of an opulent presidential palace in a show of U.N. power, just when Washington was openly questioning their ability to do the job.

A senior Iraqi official, meanwhile, said Baghdad will reaffirm in a crucial upcoming U.N. declaration that it has no weapons of mass destruction despite U.S. and British claims to the contrary.

Melissa Fleming of the U.N. nuclear control agency in Vienna, Austria, said the Iraqis were expected to submit their report to the U.N. office in Baghdad on Saturday – one day before the deadline mandated by the Security Council.

The unannounced visit to the Al-Sajoud palace was the biggest test yet of the arms monitors' authority under a new U.N. resolution, which led to resumption of inspections here last week after a four-year break.

Seven minutes after the inspectors rolled up to the palace entrance, the towering front gates swung open, allowing them access to the palm-lined compound. Inside, they found a sprawl of ostentation and luxury, but there was no word they found anything else.

"Our inspectors were able to inspect every corner of the presidential palace," said their spokesman, Hiro Ueki. The chief Iraqi liaison, Gen. Hossam Mohammed Amin, said the Iraqis were cooperative and "the inspectors were happy."

Video from inside the palace, obtained by Associated Press Television News, showed inspectors, clipboards in hand, quickly moving through darkened rooms with flashlights, stopping occasionally to peruse, for example, a utility room or a

Saudi Arabia announces anti-terrorism measures

By Barry Schweid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – Saudi Arabia went on the diplomatic offensive Tuesday, announcing new measures to deny funds to terror groups and disputing allegations it has done a poor job in keeping the money out of terrorists' hands.

The State and Treasury Departments immediately issued statements complimenting the Arab kingdom's efforts and muting calls by the White House last week for the Saudis to do more.

The unusual campaign by the generally withdrawn, oil-rich monarchy was waged by Crown Prince Abdullah's foreign policy adviser, Adel Al-Jubeir.

Speaking before cameras at the Saudi Embassy not far from the State Department, he depicted Saudi Arabia as a victim of an outrageous campaign that "borders on hate."

Roundly denouncing al-Qaeda as a terrorist organization, he said Saudi Arabia was a target of Osama bin Laden, the Saudi expatriate and reputed mastermind of the Sept. 11 attacks, and was the first nation to freeze al-Qaeda's assets, in 1994.

BANTER AND BELLOW | Santa offerings

Milk, cookies don't live up to Santa's standards; unique snacks key to keeping St. Nick smiling

Keep Santa feelin' "jolly"

Layton: How would you feel if all you got every year was the same batch of stale chocolate chip cookies and warm milk? You'd feel like you had gotten the cold shaft. Santa, being overworked and underpaid, needs a little more encouragement than that.

Unless you want a turd-sized lump of coal for Christmas this year, I suggest putting some imagination into what you leave for Saint Nick. First, you must ask yourself what makes people "jolly."

Jolly people are that way because they are either hanging out with people who have a good sense of humor, or they are drunk. So put a case of Boulevard Wheat by the DVD player, along with a copy of George Carlin's HBO special, and let the holiday magic roll. I guarantee you'll end up with more presents than you asked for.

You also might want to leave the phone number of a reliable designated driver to haul Santa around so he can finish his job.

Make the holidays interesting for everyone this year. Leave some muscle relaxants, portabellas and a couple of reggae records for him. Won't the neighborhood be surprised when they discover happy faces with dreds and random ink blots painted all over the living room walls, and a trail of "XXXL" red velvet leading to the dog house?

Surprise surprise, it's Christmas time.

Or, you can do what I'm going to do, and play a joke on the ol' fart. Leave cheese blintzes and sufganiyot. But you can only do this if you're willing to take the risk of getting whacked in the face with a brass Menorah in your sleep.

Question

What should be left for Santa Claus this Christmas?

You can e-mail Banter and Bellow columnists Dana Strongin, junior in print journalism, and Layton Ehmke, senior in print journalism, at banter@spub.ksu.edu.

Feed Santa as you envision him

Dana: Santa's a great guy. This year, consider filling his jiggly belly with something other than hard cookies and lukewarm milk.

What you leave depends on what kind of fella you think Santa really is.

One take is how busy his night is. He's got a lot to do, delivering toys to all the good little boys and girls of the world. I think that by the time he hits the Midwest, he's probably ready for an energy boost. What he could really use is an energy bar – I like Clif Bars – and some Gatorade. Be sure the Gatorade isn't watery but is cool and refreshing.

At another glance, however, Santa looks like pure calories mean more than electrolytes to him. Maybe he needs a good, home-cooked meal. Since I can't really cook one, I'd have Mom Strongin make a hot casserole or, even better, some of her delicious manicotti and garlic bread. Santa might be Italian, but if not, he probably loves the food.

Santa's also really nice. Among all creatures, he is one of the most giving – although some might question his judgment. I know my dad got a piece of coal in his stocking one year – I heard he was being a grinch. But if you take the nice angle, Santa probably likes sweets to meet his disposition. Leave him an assortment of delights – raspberry-chocolate tort, marble cake, ice cream, brownies and maybe some petits fours, whatever those are.

You could also treat Santa to an American man's buffet. Give him steak, mashed potatoes, fried chicken and some potato chips with ranch dip. If you think that's the way to go, don't forget to top it off with a six-pack of your favorite brew. Santa's got a long night ahead.

Don't forget the reindeer. Leaving them a little dried grass or willow twigs might be the bonus Santa needs to see to leave extra booty in your stocking.

Businesses hiring extra help for holiday shopping blitz

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
Josie Youll, sophomore in open option, uses a puppet to make a young child on Santa's lap smile before taking a photo of them. "I took photos last Easter for them and had a blast. That's why I'm doing it again," Youll said.

Long before the red and green decorations go up and stores greet their customers with Yuletide carols, employers start the search process for that extra holiday help.

Throughout October, many store managers and merchants begin employing seasonal help – extra workers who will help them during the busy holiday season.

"We start taking applications in October and hire before Thanksgiving so they can be trained," said Christine Harris, assistant manager at Pier One and senior in apparel marketing and design. "We hire extra people to help more customers find gifts, since it's such a busy time."

Justin Rogers, store manager for Eddie Bauer, said his store, like Pier One, hires three to four additional workers well in advance for adequate training before the holiday rush hits.

While Rogers hires a mixture of applicants, he said college students prove to be beneficial during the holiday sales.

"The big reason is because we're such a big college town," he said.

"It's nice to have a staff of some students, because college students probably think that when they come in, they can relate to someone."

In addition to the extra sales throughout the holiday months, a majority of the stores have to hire seasonal workers to take the place of absent college workers away on winter break.

"The seasonal workers help us out a lot," Harris said. "We really appreciate our holiday help."

At American Eagle Outfitters, customer service plays a key role in hiring additional workers during the busy holiday season.

"We hire for better and adequate customer service," said Sara Schultz, store manager for American Eagle.

"If we didn't hire, there wouldn't be enough people here to help."

Eddie Bauer's philosophy is similar to that of American Eagle's.

Rogers said his workers, unlike workers at some other clothing stores, are paid by the hour instead of a commission wage, therefore implementing better service to the shopper.

"It's all about customer service," Rogers said. "We want the customer to feel confident because someone is there to help them."

Early in November, Chris Carter walked into American Eagle looking for clothes and came out with a seasonal job after talking to Schultz.

"I needed something to do before I headed up to school at KU," he said.

"I was getting bored just sitting around, and I'm looking forward to it – and I get great discounts."

When the Christmas season rolls around for Bob Nixon, owner of Reflection Photography, he starts looking for college students to help with the Santa pictures in the mall.

After advertising on the Internet and in newspapers, Nixon hires students to be transform into elves in order to help with the pictures of Santa Claus and children in the mall.

The job, Nixon said, allows students to enjoy a unique experience.

"They have a good time doing it, and it's extra money for the holidays," he said.

Another benefit, Nixon said, is that the students can go home for break, since the job ends Dec. 24.

While a majority of the seasonal workers will only work into the months of December and early January, some may find themselves with permanent jobs when the Christmas rush is over.

"After the seasonal help works during the holiday, we will decide if we want to keep them," Rogers said.

Since Carter will only be working at the Manhattan American Eagle store during the holidays, he said the benefit of his new job is transferring up to the Lawrence store at the start of next semester.

"My manager here already recommended me to the Lawrence store," he said. "They're really good to me here."

Although the stores have to dip into their budgets when hiring additional help, Rogers said he believes the end result is well worth the money.

"Ultimately, the more people who work means more sales for the store," he said.

U.S. to compare Iraqi weapons report with American intelligence findings

By John Lumpkin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – American officials said they will check Iraq's report on its weapons programs against U.S. intelligence information that suggests Saddam Hussein has hundreds of tons of chemical weapons, the ability to produce biological weapons and an active nuclear weapons program.

The officials are not confident that Iraq's report will have accurate information but say it still will be useful – if nothing else, so the Bush administration can try to catch Saddam in a lie. It will be examined and compared to U.S. information.

President Bush, during a trip to Louisiana, said Tuesday that he remains skeptical about Saddam's intentions.

"We're not interested in hide-and-seek inside Iraq. The only question is ... will this man disarm?" Bush said. "The choice is his. And if he does not disarm, the United States of America will lead a coalition to disarm him."

Iraq denies it has any weapons of mass destruction.

U.S. defense and intelligence officials are convinced that Saddam has chemical and biological weapons and an active effort to obtain nuclear weapons. In their view, if inspections don't turn up any weapons, it could mean Saddam has simply managed to hide them successfully.

But officials also acknowledge that international support for war could be undercut if the U.N. doesn't find weapons.

While surprised that Iraq has provided easy access to U.N. inspectors thus far, officials said the likelihood that it will throw up roadblocks will increase as the inspectors conduct more visits, particularly on suspected weapon sites they have not sought access to in the past.

Still absent from U.S. intelligence's prying eyes – including cameras mounted on Predator drones and spy satellites – are signs that Iraq is shuffling equipment and people around to avoid inspectors.

Several months ago, Iraq did just that, apparently in anticipation of new inspections, but no major movements have been detected since, said a U.S. defense official, speaking on the condition of anonymity. That is being taken as a sign that inspectors have yet to tighten the net on Saddam.

Under a U.N. Security Council resolution unanimously approved last month, Iraq has until Sunday to declare all of its biological, chemical and nuclear weapon programs and any long-range missiles. Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations, Mohammed Al-Douri, said the declaration could be ready as early as Wednesday.

Any information provided by Iraq or uncovered by inspectors will be compared to existing U.S. intelligence on a site-by-site basis, officials said.

At the Pentagon, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Iraq might choose any number of responses, ranging from an unqualified denial of weapons programs to saying most of such work had been destroyed by previous U.N. inspections and what little remained would be surrendered. He said he saw little hope for a successful U.N. inspection process unless the Iraqis decided to cooperate.

CIA targets American al-Qaeda operatives

By John Lumpkin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – American citizens working for al-Qaeda overseas can legally be targeted and killed by the CIA under President Bush's rules for the war on terrorism, U.S. officials said.

The authority to kill U.S. citizens is granted under a secret finding signed by the president after the Sept. 11 attacks that directs the CIA to covertly attack al-Qaeda anywhere in the world. The authority makes no exception for Americans, so permission to strike them is understood rather than specifically described, officials said.

These officials said the authority will be used only when other options are unavailable. Military-like strikes will take place only when law enforcement and internal security efforts by allied foreign countries fail, the officials said.

Capturing and questioning al-Qaeda operatives is preferable, even more so if an operative is a U.S. citizen, the officials said, speaking on the condition of anonymity. Any decision to strike an American will be made at the highest levels.

U.S. officials say few Americans are working with al-Qaeda but they have no specific estimates.

The CIA already has killed one American under this authority, although U.S. officials maintain he wasn't the target.

On Nov. 3, a CIA-operated Predator drone fired a missile that destroyed a carload of suspected al-Qaeda operatives in Yemen. The target of the attack, a Yemeni named Qaed Salim Sinan al-Harethi, was the top al-Qaeda operative in that country. Efforts by Yemeni authorities to detain him had previously failed.

The CIA didn't know a U.S. citizen, Yemeni-American Kamal Derwish, was in the car. He died, along with al-Harethi and four other Yemenis.

American authorities have alleged that Derwish was the leader of an al-Qaeda cell in suburban Buffalo, N.Y. Most of the alleged members of the cell were arrested and charged with supporting terrorists, but Derwish was not accused of any crime in American courts.

TO THE POINT

Smoking ban unenforceable, not worth time

Students will have the opportunity during a referendum vote in March to voice their opinions about a no-smoking policy.

The policy, which has been under consideration by Student Governing Association, would ban smoking on all K-State property.

We believe the vote will simply be a waste of time.

A no-smoking policy at K-State would be unenforceable and a waste of resources if it were approved.

K-State currently has a policy that bans smoking 30 feet from main entrances to campus buildings, as well as ADA-accessible entrances. This policy is practically unenforceable, simply because there is no one who enforces it, and most smokers don't pay attention to the signs near the entrances. It is not feasible to think a smoking ban will be any more effective than the current policy.

Even though it is a notable gesture on the part of SGA representatives to care about public health, a no-smoking policy on campus would be a waste of time and effort. K-State is a large campus that is used by many of people. It is illogical to think that smokers who work, live and attend classes at K-State will go all day without stepping outside for a smoke, policy or no policy.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

LOSE THE ATTITUDE

Being thankful is critical all year, not only during the holidays

MICAH HAWKINSON

The thing I wanted most this Thanksgiving Day was for the holiday to be over.

Don't get me wrong – I love the ol' turkey day as much as the next guy. There's nothing I enjoy more than sitting down with loved ones and considering all of the blessings I've been given.

No, my problem with this year's Thanksgiving was with what happened before and after the meal. I'm talking, of course, about the part where my family and friends convinced me that I'm a total loser.

I'm sure they didn't mean to do it on purpose, bless their hearts, but that was the net outcome of my Thanksgiving feast at the Hawkinson compound.

The weekend began with a bang on Tuesday, when I journeyed to the lovely city of Topeka to take the Graduate Record Examination. Later that night, I spiced things up a bit by playing a board game with four other guys in the back room of a comic shop. Yes, my life is one continuous roller coaster of wildness.

Just when I thought things couldn't get any more exciting, I came home Wednesday night to find that my older brother had just gotten engaged. My younger, Topeka-dwelling brother was also there, along with his girlfriend. At dinner, I sat in the corner by myself.

My older sister, her husband and their son arrived later, along with a good family friend and his fiancée. The house virtually dripped with domesticity.

Before the Thanksgiving meal was ready the next day, we sat around and chewed the proverbial fat with some old friends. I got to explain several times that yes, I was an English and history major; yes, I was planning to go to graduate school next fall; and no, I did not know what I wanted to "do with that."

I think they got the hint when I started foaming at the mouth and uncontrollably gnashing my teeth.

For the rest of the weekend, I pretty much sat in bed writing papers while everyone else did fun stuff. I might have gotten up a couple of times to use the restroom and ingest quantities of leftover turkey, but other than that, my life was a solitary one of writing papers and ripping .mp3 files onto my notebook PC.

Also, I occasionally lost consciousness.

I was pretty bummed out.

Then, as I was reading a fascinating book on the medieval concept of the self, a revelation hit me. I had been thinking about everything in the wrong way. By wallowing in my own misery, I had completely overlooked the whole point of Thanksgiving.

The idea of the holiday isn't to see how gluttonous or slothful I can be. It isn't about celebrating only when things are going my way. Rather, it's about being thankful for everything, even when my plans and desires are thwarted.

The Plymouth Puritans, whom we associate so readily with Thanksgiving, understood this idea of giving thanks in all situations. They arrived in the New World in November 1620, which meant they had to brave the New England winter without the advantage of any kind of preexisting living quarters.

Nonetheless, these people gave thanks at the drop of a hat.

I'm not saying I agree with their theology, to say nothing of their philosophy of life, but they sure knew how to be thankful at all times.

This Thanksgiving, I realized I have things good. Even if my life isn't going the way I might have chosen for myself, I still have an incredible number of blessings.

For example, even though my family members are so hip with it that I get an inferiority complex when I'm around them, I am still blessed to belong to such a groovy clan.

More importantly, I learned that when I feel like a total loser with a terrible life, the only thing I can really blame is my own bad attitude.

Pet psychics not credible; owner should rely on intuitions, feelings

AMBER KOEHN

I always wondered what it would be like if I could talk to and understand my pets.

I always thought about what they would say if they could communicate with me.

Then I grew up.

Call me cynical, but once the mystery of letting my imagination run wild wore off, I realized that having conversations with my beloved companions was impossible.

Or was it?

With the pet-psychic fad being revived from the old "Dr. Dolittle" days, I'm once again questioning whether I could possibly have the ability to know what my pets are thinking.

Well, according to a Nov. 26 article in The Kansas City Star, I can only communicate with my pet via a pet psychic, because, apparently, the psychics are the only people who can telepathically speak to my animals.

"It's a gift," some psychics say. Yeah, well, whenever I ask my dog or cats if they want food or if they need to go outside, they get all spastic and practically maul me over.

They understand the baby-talk phrases like, "You want some treats?" and "Outside, potty?" At least they seem to when they wag their tails.

They send me signals through body language, not telepathic phrases. I'm sure other pet owners talk to their animals in the same manner and receive virtually the same responses.

So why are so many people buying into the pet-psychic phenomenon?

The answer is simple: magic.

People see Sonya Fitzpatrick, from Animal Planet's "Pet Psychic" and other pet psychics as magicians who are able to perform unbelievable feats right before their very eyes.

It's the same situation with psychics like John Edwards – people are so obsessed with needing to know the answers to life's most difficult questions that they will go to any lengths to find those answers.

But isn't basking in the mystery and reveling in the unknown exciting enough?

Well, according to Fitzpatrick, all humans have the ability to talk to animals – they just don't know it. Anyone can talk to animals, and the best pet owners already do.

To find out if I was as good of a pet owner as I claimed to be, I decided to follow Fitzpatrick's "Seven Simple Steps to Communicating With Your Pet" to see if I really was missing out on something profound.

I picked up the closest animal to me (my cat, Emma), dug out my crystal ball and summoned the spirits from the psychic world.

Step one: Begin with a calm mind, and seek out a calm atmosphere.

Check.

Step two: Say your animal's name telepathically to get its attention.

Check.

Step three: Visualize your animal.

Check.

Step four: Send a picture of its body. Direct it to the animal, along with its name.

Check.

Step five: Ask if there is anything your pet would like you to do for it. Imagine your animal is sending an answer back to you, and accept whatever you receive in your imagination.

Check.

Step six: Always acknowledge the answer, whatever you receive in your imagination.

Check.

Step seven: Ask your animal other questions, and remember to trust your imagination for what you are receiving back from your animal.

Check.

My result: Absolutely nothing.

I asked Emma if she liked the food I was feeding her, if she got along OK with my other two animals and if she was still sore from being spayed a week and a half ago. The only time she responded was when I actually said, "You love your mommy, don't you?"

She purred and rubbed her nose against my cheek. I guess I'm going to need more than a seven-step program to convince me.

Am I the only guy I know who's actually pumped about K-State volleyball? Go Cats!

All but two of the presidents were frat boys? That explains the national debt.

If we took "like" out of the English dictionary, sorority girls would talk a lot less.

I completely agree with the comment about frats and the presidency. Look at George W. Bush: His dad not only paid for his friends but also got him elected.

Of course there's no such thing as women's sports. After all, we just sit around in the kitchen, baking cookies and popping out kids, right?

If you want a nickname, don't choose "Teddy." It will associate you with lying and forcing every girl to hug you.

Everyone needs to go to Orangebowl.org and vote for K-State, so we can go to Miami.

The frat rats need to get their facts straight. More than two presidents were not members of fraternities. Both the Bushes were members of secret societies, which are far cooler than fraternities. Get it right, boys.

To the guy who called in about girls' sports: I'd like to see you go up and down the court just once with the women's basketball team. Then we'll see how many teeth you have left to talk trash.

Smoking kills people. Underage drinking is funny. Get over it.

The president of the United States is an elected public official, not my boss.

For all the greeks and non-greeks who have such a good time bickering amongst each other: Why don't you try outgrowing your high-school glory days, thinking that you're better than the other guy? Maybe you should try doing something positive, like studying.

To the person who stops at the crosswalks: We wave to let you know we saw you — and to see what you look like in case you decide to gun it.

TO THE EDITOR

Doctor dismisses previous letter; influenza vaccine appropriate for people suffering from specific conditions

Editor,

The letter attacking the influenza vaccine in the Nov. 18 Collegian contained some factual information but was highly misleading. The conclusions were suspect.

The writer attacks the safety of the vaccine. I can think of nothing in medicine that I would claim as totally "safe." People die from taking penicillin and aspirin, yet the benefits outweigh the risks.

There are contraindications to getting the vaccine. All persons receiving the vaccine from Lafene are carefully screened to avoid giving it to persons for whom it is contraindicated. The questions we must answer are what are its risks, and how safe is it compared to the disease?

Influenza is a respiratory infection characterized by fever, cough, sore throat, headache and body aches. This illness will affect 10 to 20 percent of all persons in the United States each winter, resulting in nearly 114,000 hospitalizations and 20,000 deaths. Other complications of the flu include pneumonia, myositis, rhabdommyolysis and Reyes syndrome.

The writer of the letter states "the flu vaccine ... can be deadly," and therefore implies the disease is safer. Deaths from the flu vaccine are rare. While it is true that someone occasionally will die, it is indisputable that the vaccine is safer.

If one looks at vaccine side-effect data, certain points are important to remember. If an unusual event occurs within a period of weeks after a vaccine is given, it is classified as a possible vaccine-associated event. When millions of doses of vaccine are given, some illness will coincidentally occur within weeks of the time the vaccine was given. That illness is then listed as a potential side effect. If a similar list were kept for natural illness, the list would be equally long, if not longer.

The letter says the vaccine can cause Guillain-Barre Syndrome (GBS) and states this is the worst side effect. GBS is a disease that occurs randomly with an incidence of about two in 100,000 persons. It usually follows natural infections. GBS has occurred in people who have had influenza as well as the vaccine. A causal relationship has not been clearly demonstrated for either the vaccine or the natural influenza disease, but it would be logical to suspect that both cause it.

The statement, "The only way to get permanent immunity is to recover from the flu naturally, without vaccines," is incorrect. You will not become permanently immune to influenza with either. The influenza virus has two types. Each type mutates frequently, so the immunity acquired last year will not necessarily be protective against this year's strain.

A worldwide surveillance network tracks the virus around the world, and new vaccines are developed as new strains evolve. This process has been remarkably effective.

Who should get the vaccine? Persons with chronic illness, especially of the respiratory tract or cardiovascular system, everyone 50 or older, persons on long-term aspirin therapy, pregnant women in the last two trimesters, children younger than 2, persons who have weakened immune systems or work or live with immunocompromised persons, persons who live in crowded conditions, health and safety workers whose services might be required for emergencies and anyone who wants to reduce the risk of this illness.

Influenza is unlikely to kill healthy persons, but it can make life very unpleasant. If you wish to reduce your risk of this, I suggest you get the vaccine.

City commission passes K-State cable agreement unanimously

Services won't be provided by Cox

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first reading of an ordinance authorizing a cable franchise agreement with K-State was passed unanimously Tuesday night by city commissioners and Mayor Ed Klimek.

In the past, Cox Communications had passed 5 percent of its revenues gained from the K-State cable system to the city of Manhattan.

However, under the ordinance, the university has now decided to provide cable service without the assistance of Cox Communication.

"This document is very similar to that of 1999, except with a few changes," said Sammi Mangus, assistant to the city manager.

Under the ordinance, K-State is granted the right to construct, maintain and operate a communication cable throughout an approved right-of-way to supply service to those facilities owned by the university.

In addition, instead of working through Cox Communications, K-State would make payments directly to the city.

If passed, the agreement will take affect Jan. 1, 2003, and the document will continue for five years with quarterly payments made by the university.

Moreover, Mangus said K-State has agreed to provide Channel 3 in its new lineup, since the university would no longer be included with Cox Communications.

Although the motion passed 5-0, Klimek expressed his concern over this issue of the city maintaining their revenue in the future without the 5 percent from Cox Communications.

"We're really taking this on as a good faith gesture," he said. "I would suggest that we have a guaranteed statement."

City Commissioner Bruce Snead, however, said that he is comfortable with the future plans.

"I'm confident with belief that the revenues in five years will equal out," he said. "I'm comfortable with the projection."

Turkey to approve U.S. use of military bases for attack on Iraq only if UN approves action

By Louis Meixler
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANKARA, Turkey – Turkey's foreign minister said Tuesday that his country would allow the United States to use military bases in the country for a strike against Iraq, but only if the United Nations first approved such military action.

The move boosts pressure on Iraq and comes just before a Sunday deadline for Baghdad to declare all its banned weapons of mass destruction to U.N. inspectors. President Bush has threatened the use of force if Iraq does not disarm.

The announcement by Foreign Minister Yasar Yakis represents a partial victory for the United States in building a coalition against Iraq. It came as U.S. Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz was in Turkey lobbying for support in an Iraq operation.

Turkish leaders have previously refused to publicly commit as to whether they would allow the United States to use bases in a strike against Iraq, which borders Turkey.

Yakis, however, cast doubt on the possibility of deploying large numbers of U.S. ground troops in Turkey. And the condition of U.N. approval might not be easy for the United States to meet.

Turkey has opposed a war on Iraq, but politicians have always indicated that if a conflict started, the country would have to back Washington.

"There should not be left any stone unturned before resorting to a military solution," Yakis said. "But if it comes to that, then of course, we will cooperate with the United States because it's a big ally and we have excellent relations with the United States."

When asked to define cooperation, Yakis said, "the opening of air space, first of all, and the utilization of facilities in Turkey."

"The military authorities of the two countries are consulting on the assumption that such a cooperation may be necessary one day," Yakis added.

Turkey has said action in Iraq must have U.N. approval.

When asked if the United States would have to seek a new U.N. resolution to use force against Iraq, Yakis said: "Yes, yes, yes. The Turkish understanding (is) that the present resolution, 1441, does not allow automatic resorting to armed intervention."

The support of NATO ally Turkey is crucial to any war. Turkey hosts some 50 U.S. aircraft patrolling a no-fly zone over northern Iraq and was a key staging post for U.S. air raids against Iraq during the 1991 Gulf War.

BCS system leaves much to be desired

Playoffs would produce true champion through competition, not hype

BEN FEHR

Injustice, Bowl Championship Series is thy name.

OK, OK, it's not that simple. It kills me to write about the BCS, by the way. I mean, in any given season, you're likely to read, or more accurately, skip over, hundreds of negative stories about the BCS.

It's just an overdone topic. But like it or not, the BCS is the governing entity of college football. And until the football Gods give us the playoff system we're so desperately longing for, we'll all just have to deal.

But there are some glaring injustices concerning the setup of this system, and I'm compelled to write about them. So here we go.

Let me begin by saying that a playoff system is the only just way to decide a champion.

Why should one of the world's most competitive – and loved – sports be played out without a year-end opportunity for a team to make a run at the top?

Elementary sports, high school sports, pro sports and every NCAA sport excluding college football have working and well-adapted playoff systems that determine respective champions.

And the world won't stop spinning cockeyed until college football has one as well.

That being said, how in the cockeyed world can Florida State be allowed to play in a BCS game? FSU has four losses, and that's not nearly good enough to qualify a team as one of the top eight in the land.

The reason the Seminoles are going to be playing in a big bowl at the end of the season is because they won the ACC division, and the Almost Competitive Conference champion gets an at-large bid to the BCS.

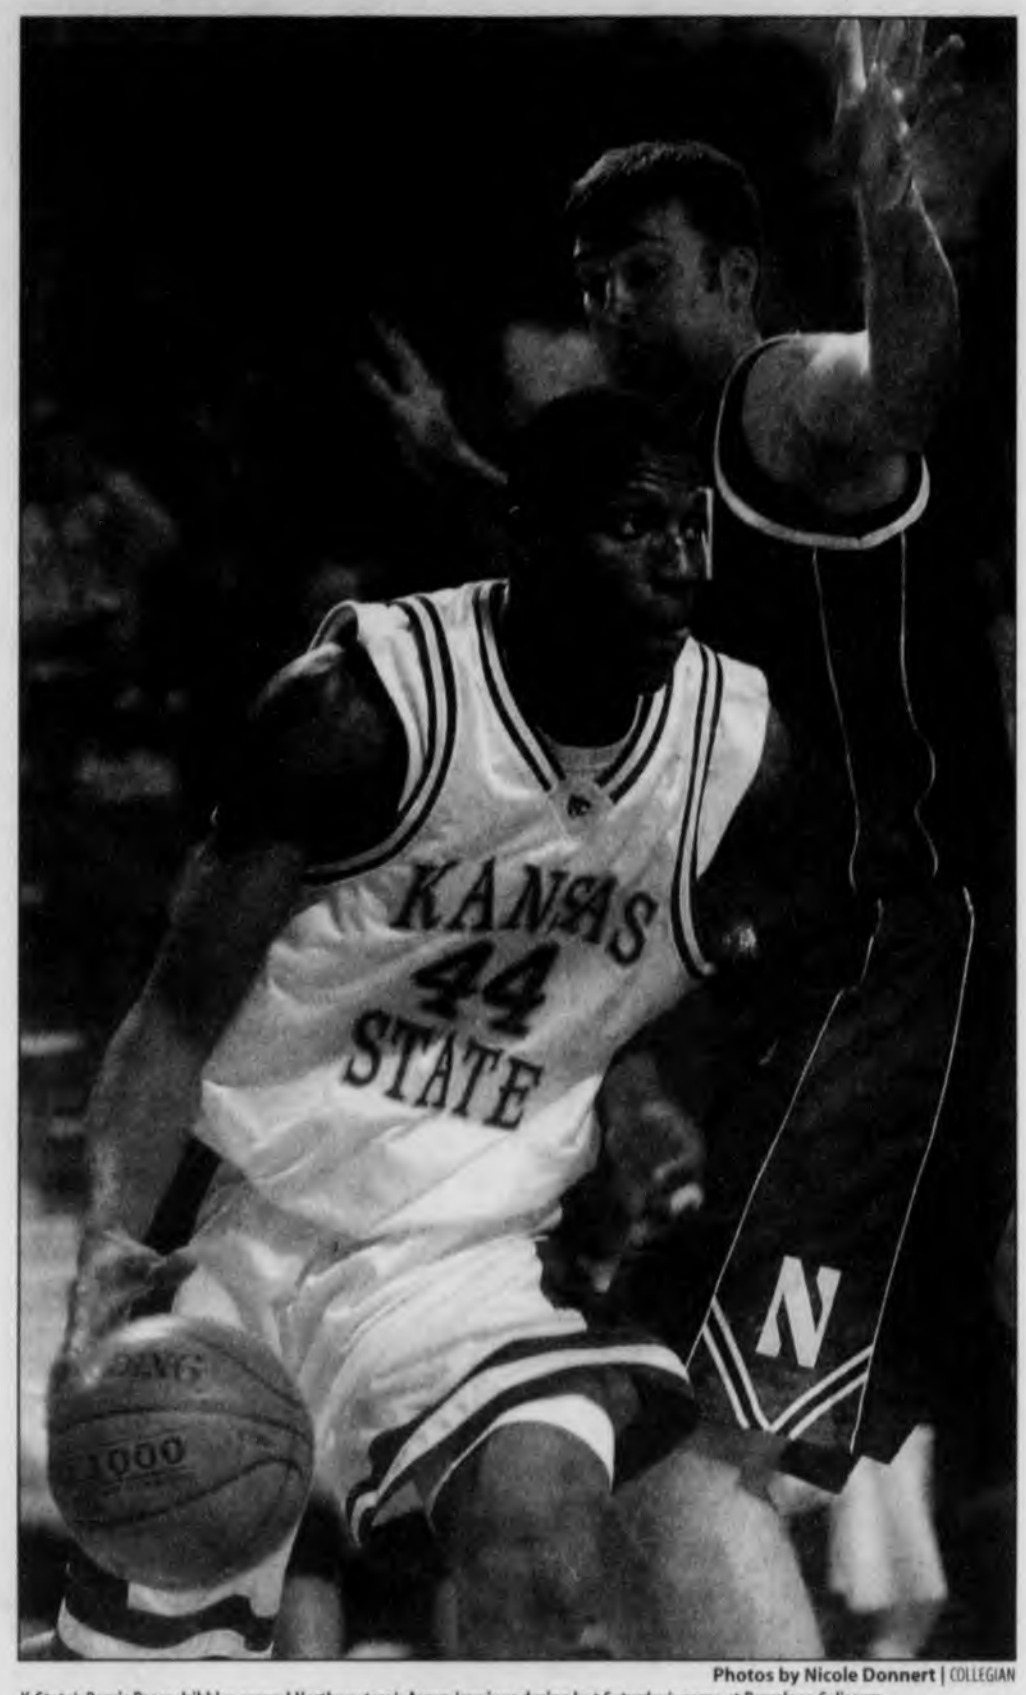
That's a bitter pill to swallow if you're a college football fan.

The reason Florida State won the ACC? Because the ACC is bad. Bad, bad, bad.

The lack of strength in the ACC has to do with patsies. The equivalent of a mulligan in golf, a patsy is an opponent that offers scarce and little opposition. And the ACC is chock-full of patsies.

Clemson, Duke, Georgia Tech, Maryland, North Carolina and Wake Forest round out this year's patsy club in the ACC. And Maryland finished 6-2 in the conference. That's saying quite a bit.

After Florida State feasted on the smorgasbord that is the ACC, we, the fans, have to endure a mediocre Seminole team's placement in a prestigious bowl. Bad taste in your mouth, anyone?



It doesn't end there. The ACC, while bad, isn't the only lousy conference that gets consideration as a significant one. Of all the conferences that receive conference championship bids – the Big 12, the Big Ten, the Pac 10, the ACC, the SEC and the Big East – the Big East is the poster child for the dissolving of the BCS.

The Big East should be renamed the Big Easy. It's that simple. Aside from Miami, college football's team of the moment, Virginia Tech is the only other consistent performer to call the Big Easy home.

And patsies? Take cover, Suzie – here comes a train. The Big Easy is a breeding ground for college football futility.

Cats hope to right ship tonight at home

By Joel Reichenberger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's men's basketball team is searching for its rhythm, Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

Tonight, they will look to find it.

After a 1-3 start, the Cats will take on Arkansas-Pine Bluff at 7 tonight at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Cats are trying to avoid their first 1-4 start in more than 35 years, however by losing by an average of only 7.7 points, K-State's season could possibly be different.

"It's disappointing," Wooldridge said of his team's start.

"But I think the most important thing we can do now is look ahead and look at the next opportunity. We have to take care of what we have at our doorstep."

Waiting at the door for the Cats is an 0-4 Arkansas-Pine Bluff team.

The Golden Lions will play their fifth straight game on the road. So far they have only found trouble, as their schedule has led them through Memphis, Illinois, Georgia Tech and Pittsburgh. In those games, Arkansas-Pine Bluff found itself overwhelmed, losing by an average of nearly 40 points.

Fritz tabbed league coach of year

Coach credits unprecedented conference finish to young talent

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All Suzie Fritz wants to do is win volleyball matches.

That's what she is paid to do, she said.

Well, Fritz is obviously doing an all-right job of just that – winning.

Fritz was named the Big 12's Coach of the Year on Sunday one day after K-State had completed its conference season with a school-best 16-4 record.

"I am flattered. But I coach a great bunch of young people," Fritz said. "They're athletic, they're talented, they're smart, and they make my job easy. As flattered as I am, it's a tribute to their success."

Fritz has been around Ahearn Field House for quite some time now, serving as an assistant to Coach Jim McLaughlin from 1997 to 2000. When McLaughlin decided to test the waters of Washington, Fritz was promoted to head coach of the top-25 Wildcat program.

At the start of the 2001 season, Fritz got a rude awakening to life as a head coach.

K-State dropped the first two matches of the season – a heartbreaking five-game loss to No. 5 Hawaii and a four-game defeat at the hands of the 7th-ranked UCLA Bruins.

But things turned around for Fritz and the Cats. K-State finished the 2001 season with 20 wins, including 15 in one of the toughest conferences in the nation: the Big 12.

"I thought she should have got it last year, but it didn't happen," assistant coach Jeff Grove said.

"I think she's made the leap from being an assistant to a head coach about as good as you can do it."

But not receiving too many pats on the back for continuing a tradition already set in place by McLaughlin didn't faze Fritz all too much.

All she did was lead K-State to sole possession of second place in the Big 12 this year, the highest finish by any Wildcat team.

The conference couldn't ignore what she was doing any longer.

MLB | A's trade Koch to White Sox

Dumping yet another big salary, the Oakland Athletics traded closer Billy Koch to the Chicago White Sox on Tuesday in a six-player trade.

In exchange for Koch and two minor leaguers, the Athletics will get White Sox closer Keith Foulke, catcher Mark Johnson, minor league right-hander Joe Valentine and cash.

Koch, who turns 28 on opening day, has emerged as one of the American League's top closers, becoming the first ever to start his career with four consecutive 30-save seasons. He won AL reliever of the year honors this season, going 11-4 with 44 saves.

MLB | Cubs sign Remlinger

The Chicago Cubs hope Mike Remlinger is the start to fixing their bullpen problems.

The left-handed reliever and the team agreed Tuesday to a $10.65 million, three-year contract.

Remlinger will bolster a Cubs' bullpen that blew numerous leads last season and squandered 25 saves.

He was 7-3 with a 1.99 ERA in 73 games with the Atlanta Braves last season, his fourth year with Atlanta. He came up to the major leagues with the Giants in 1991 when new Cubs manager Dusty Baker was San Francisco's hitting coach.

NCAA | Texas A&M fires Slocum

R.C. Slocum won the most games in Texas A&M history and never had a losing record in 14 seasons.

That still wasn't enough to keep his job.

Slocum was fired Monday, three days after the Aggies closed the regular season with a 50-20 loss to rival Texas, that clinched their first losing season in conference play in 18 years.

Slocum had a record of 123-47-2 for a .715 winning percentage that was second only to that of D.X. Bible (.765).

Carolina Panthers rookie Julius Peppers was suspended for the final four games of the season for violating the NFL's substance-abuse policy.

Peppers' agent, Marvin Demoff, told the league Tuesday morning that he was withdrawing an appeal of the suspension. Demoff said last month that the league told him Peppers tested positive for a banned substance in a dietary supplement.

Golf | Whaley to become first woman to play in PGA event at Hartford Open

Suzy Whaley will enter the Greater Hartford Open, making her the first woman to play in a PGA Tour event.

The 36-year-old golf pro from Connecticut earned a spot in the field by winning a qualifying event against men in September.

She qualified for July's tournament by winning the PGA Connecticut Sectional, the first woman to do so.

She played from a forward set of tees, meaning she played a course 10 percent shorter than the men, at the Ellington Ridge Country Club.

At the Greater Hartford Open, she'll have to play from the same tees as the men.

Talent Triumphs

As pop empire falters, new breed of musicians emerging

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This has been the year the boy bands and pop divas fell, and the value of rock, hip-hop and good production has been realized.

Last year, mainstream music was so boring that the Beatles had the top-selling album of the year with songs they wrote 30 years ago.

The Backstreet Boys and *NSync were in the top 10, followed in the top 30 by Destiny's Child and Britney Spears.

This year's results have yet to be tabulated, but Britney is the only one of those artists with even a chance of repeating that performance.

Britney's chances of placing in the top 40 seem unlikely with many pop fans discovering music with a bit more substance through artists like Michelle Branch and Vanessa Carlton.

Even Avril Lavigne is more complicated for fans than Christina Aguilera's dirty dance music. Arista big wigs recognized the trend away from prepackaged pop by letting Lavigne keep control of her sound and image when she threw a fit about the overly pop sound of "Let Go" after an early draft of the work.

Another Arista artist, Pink, has done everything possible to make people forget she got into the business as a pop star.

So, besides the new pseudo-intellectual face of pop, what else has changed? It has officially become cool, even in the eyes of MTV, to like underground music. Long-time fans are cringing as the kids have started to buy into indie rock and underground hip-hop right down to the shoes.

By the way, did you know Dashboard Confessional released its "MTV Unplugged" set Tuesday?

Indie rock isn't quite so indie anymore. Bands like the Vines and the Strokes are making people forget that it's called indie because the bands are on independent labels, unaffiliated with any of the five main conglomerates.

The insurgence of indie rock in the mainstream was good this year. Artists like Dashboard Confessional, Saves the Day and Thursday brought depth to music and showed the world that emo-rooted music could be marketed to a wider audience.

And just like last year, true indie shined with the Sub-Pop, Vagrant and Saddle-Creek labels coming out on top in the indie world. But beware of 2003, which will likely be the year the majors invent prepackaged indie-wannabe bands.

And underground hip-hop has never had a stronger year. This was possibly the most important year for hip-hop in general since Dr. Dre released "Chronic" and brought gangsta rap to white suburbia.

Besides Eminem conquering the world of entertainment, intelligence was given more appreciation in recorded rhymes.

Artists like Cee-Lo and the Roots showed that people are now more willing than ever to listen to thought-provoking rhymes.

But mainstream hip-hop realized the power of a producer as the Neptunes stormed music, producing 'Clipse, Snoop Dogg, Jay-Z, Mary J. Blige and even No Doubt among many, many more. Even the Neptunes' own band, N.E.R.D.

The result of all this is that Top-40 radio is listener-friendly once again for ages older than 12 with excellent singles from Eminem, Missy "Misdemeanor" Elliott, Madonna and, as hard as it is for me to admit this, even Avril Lavigne. Even if you don't like the Top-40 playlists, you have to admit they are a few steps above last year's batch.

CARDS | Event proceeds to benefit cancer patients

He expects K-State to triple the amount it already has raised.

"The success of the program can be directly attributed to the excellence expected here at K-State," he said. "Instilled in K-State students' hearts is a desire to help others."

In fact, the success has given Pettit-Scott and other organizers some problems in preparing for events – multiple trips to Wal-Mart and Staples were required Tuesday night to keep the card-makers stocked with supplies. A similar problem occurred when the teams were writing letters to raise funds for the organization – the 23,000 letters provided ran out quickly.

Pettit-Scott said the holiday cards and candy will be sent to the hospital in Tennessee in time for Christmas. Many Hanukkah cards will also be sent, and he said he hopes they will arrive before the holiday ends.

Each Up 'til Dawn team consists of about six people, public relations director Megan Barr said.

The goal is to have each team raise at least $750 during the year. Many of the teams are from greek houses, she said, but organizers have made an effort to include as many different groups as possible, including residence halls and other campus organizations.

"The more diverse, the better," Pettit-Scott said.

At the end of the academic year, Up 'til Dawn participants will have an overnight celebration with St. Jude patients and their families to commemorate the work done throughout the year. The celebration is scheduled for March 28 at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"It's something different than a normal philanthropy," Kara Gross, junior in accounting, said. "You actually get to meet them and see where the money's going.

"It's more tangible. If you can personalize it, it makes you feel like you're really affecting someone."

The feeling of closeness to the patients helped motivate many of the participants.

"I thought about the kids," Kelly Hunter, freshman in open-option, said. "Obviously, it's hard for them because they have cancer. But small things like the holiday cards really let them know we're thinking about them and hoping they'll get better."

Pettit-Scott agreed that the philanthropy was all about the children.

"The dream behind the program was never a monetary goal," Pettit-Scott said. "Just to brighten the children's day and unite K-State around an awesome thing."

CATS | Team looks to avoid worst start in 35 years

They have shown some aspects that could prove dangerous to the Cats, Wooldridge said.

In the first half of their last game against Pittsburgh, the Lions lit up the scoreboard with eight first-half three-pointers.

The three-ball has proven to be the Cats' kryptonite this season.

In the 59-55 home-opener loss to Northwestern on Saturday, Northwestern scored 33 points from behind the arch.

That, Wooldridge said, is something his team will have to correct tonight when it faces the Lions.

"They have a lot of shot-makers on the team," he said. "We have to do a better job of closing on the ball and getting up on the shots. To do that, we will look to guys who can get that job done for us."

Wooldridge said that despite the soft perimeter defense of the Northwestern game, the starting five will remain the same.

Wildcat guards Frank Richards, Jarrett Hart and Gilson DeJesus could have the eyes of their coach on them as they chase down three-point shooters, however, they aren't the only starters who have failed to live up to expectations.

K-State's forwards were thought to be a preseason strength considering both starters are returning seniors. But four games into the season center Pervis Pasco and forward Matt Siebrandt have yet to generate enough productivity to please Wooldridge, he said.

Pasco has averaged 8.5 points per game, but has only grabbed 3.8 rebounds.

Siebrandt has tallied just 5.3 points per game, while only nabbing 2.7 rebounds.

Surprisingly, the Cats' best forward has been freshman Marques Hayden. He has as many points per game as Pasco and averages nearly two more rebounds per game than his teammate.

Improvement is something that will just have to be done, Wooldridge said. He said the Cats need to rely on big numbers and huge performances from the senior leadership down low.

"We need to play better there, and I think they know," Wooldridge said. "We're counting on them to do that, and I have confidence that they will."

In order for them to put up those improved numbers, Wooldridge said they will have to learn to make more of their opportunities. Both Pasco and Siebrandt are shooting less than 50 percent, 41 and 42 respectively.

Capitalizing on the shots they are able to get will be key, Wooldridge said.

"They are getting opportunities, we just need to be more effective with those opportunities," he said.

But not all can be blamed on poor production around the basket. Wooldridge said to get the team back on track, the Cats need to start playing together.

He said tonight's game is a prime opportunity to do so.

"I think for our team to be successful we will need a balanced attack and it has just taken some time to get into a rhythm and play well together," he said.

"We got to find a winning way. We got to find a way through. This is a real important month for us, December. We have to get back on the right track, and (this game) is certainly an opportunity to do that."

COLUMN | BCS only makes winners of ACC, Big East

In a conference that houses eight teams, four teams – Rutgers, Syracuse, Temple and Boston College – finished with sub-.500 records in a conference where finishing below .500 is just inexcusable.

Miami should win the Big East every year. After beating good teams in their non-conference schedule, the Canes need only take one or two games in their conference schedule seriously.

And yes, I know Syracuse beat K-State last year.

But if you think this year's Orangeman squad could hang with the Wildcats, you're flat crazy.

So how about giving a little bit of strength-of-schedule love to the conferences that actually house dangerous teams? The Big 12, SEC, Pac 10 and Big 10 are all loaded with competitive teams.

Teams in these four conferences don't get a rest when they head into conference play. In these conferences, you have to bring the A-game every week.

In the Big 12, ten teams have a legitimate shot to hurt you.

And the Big 10, SEC and Pac 10 all house at least six legitimate contenders every year.

It's not fair that teams in the ACC look down the way and see match ups with Duke, Wake Forest, Maryland and North Carolina while Big 12 teams can look down the way at college football powerhouses like Colorado, Oklahoma, K-State, Texas and Nebraska.

There must be a legitimate method to decide the best teams in the land. And while the ACC and Big East benefit from the current system, I'd bet the fans of the teams in those conferences are in favor of the playoff system anyway.

I don't know what it's going to take to get a playoff system in place, but how about a matchup like K-State vs.

Ohio State to advance to the semifinals of the national playoffs? Any takers?

College football is played on football fields. Not on computers.

So who tops who at the end of the year shouldn't be decided by how teams stack up according to numbers.

It should be decided on football fields.

In other news, the Texas A&M Aggies made one of the most brain-dead moves in the history of college football by firing head coach R.C. Slocum on Monday.

Any way you cut it up, this one stinks of impatience. Slocum, A&M's winningest coach, had a career record of 123-47-2. So much for longevity.

Hey guys, K-State didn't fire Bill Snyder, 115-51-1, after a 6-6 season a year ago, and he rebounded with a 10-2, possibly 11-2, season and Big 12 Coach of the Year honors.

So much for paying attention to what's going on in your own backyard.

FRITZ | Volleyball coach grabs league's top honor

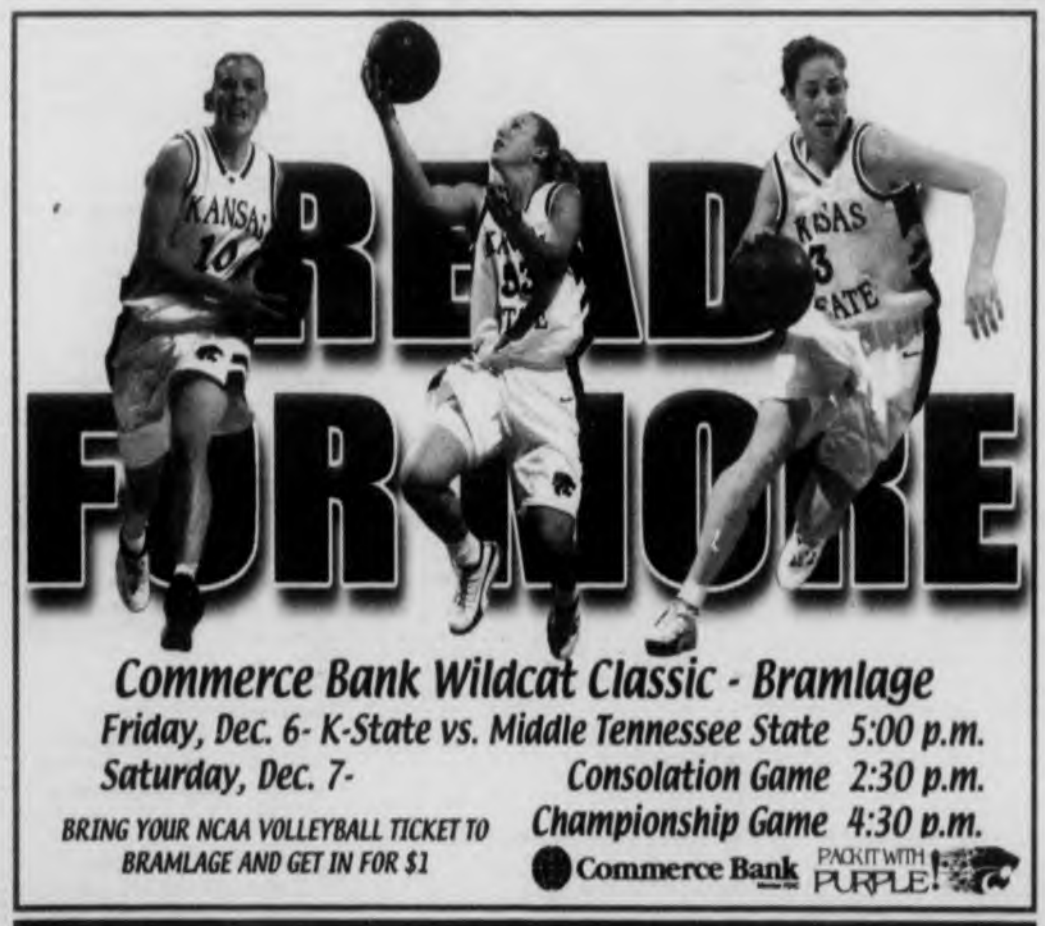
"She proved it last year, but doing it again – losing three seniors – I mean, we were picked preseason fifth in the conference and coming up with sole possession of second, it shows you don't have to have great players, just a great team," senior outside hitter Jennifer Pollard said. "She just has good philosophies and methods, and it just got put together, and we made a run. She deserves all the credit in the world."

Fritz, however, wouldn't take all that credit.

"I thought these girls did a nice job of rebounding after a tough preseason schedule," she said. "They did a nice job of picking up the pieces and getting back on track.



"They, more than any other team I have ever coached, came into practice wanting to get as good as they could. There are very few days when I could say, 'Man, that was a bad practice.' So that means most days you're getting better. You either get better or you get worse. There's no in between."

And with just a few more practices remaining in this 2002 campaign, Fritz said the team is making the right strides to accomplish what it set out to do every year – make a run in the NCAA tournament.

The Wildcats will face Michigan in the opening round on Friday at Ahearn Field House.

Fritz said all the achievements and accolades she has received this year won't mean nearly as much if the Cats can't get some significant wins in the tournament this year.

"This is what I do for a living, so I want to be good at it," she said. "I think whatever you choose to do in life, you should try to be the absolute best at it you can be. That's all. It's nothing magical. We work extremely hard at what we do, and I am surrounded by a tremendous group of people, so they make my job easy on many occasions."

SMOKING | Students to decide on no-smoking policy in spring vote

Matt Beaven, senior in elementary education and member of the SASS committee, said that about 75 percent of the students surveyed supported a no-smoking policy on campus.

He said that even though the results of the poll are not conclusive, they are an accurate way to gauge the general opinion of the students.

"Obviously, if it is very unpopular with the students, we would have to consider the resolution again and see if students favor it at all," Beaven said.

Beaven said the poll surveyed about 100 smokers, but only about 59 of the them smoked on campus. He said the students they surveyed in class are the population of students a no-smoking policy would affect the most – those who come to class and care about the issue.

"What we wanted to do with the poll was to make people aware of the issue," he said. "Lots of students don't know what is going on in senate, and when there is an opportunity to communicate with them, we need to take full advantage of that."

Conner said that although the question on the ballot will be an effective way to get student's opinion, she said Senate could have decided on the policy without a referendum.

"I don't think having the question on the ballot could be negative, but we could have handled it ourselves," she said.

Cook said that after the referendum vote takes place, the policy will have to be considered by administration before it is put into effect. But, he said, the administration usually goes through with what the students ask for in a vote.

As for the policy itself, Cook said the intention is not to go after people's right to smoke, but to protect the rights of others.

"No personal decision you have should infringe on the rights of others," he said. "The argument boils down to whether or not we should infringe on people's right to smoke or protect public health."

INSPECTION | Weapon hunters begin search of presidential palace

refrigerator. "Marmalade," one announced after looking over a jar.

The visit by 17 U.N. inspectors lasted just 1 1/2 hours, hardly enough for an exhaustive search of scores of rooms and the vast grounds.

But it bore a symbolic message: this time, unlike in the 1990s, the U.N. teams have a free run of Iraq, under a Security Council mandate requiring Baghdad to shut down any chemical, biological or nuclear weapons programs.

President Bush alleges the Iraqis have retained some chemical and biological weapons, missed during previous inspections and haven't abandoned their nuclear weapons program. In a speech Monday, Bush contended that so far "the signs are not encouraging" that the Iraqis will "cooperate willingly and comply completely" in the inspection process.

The inspectors, however, report the Iraqis have fully cooperated thus far. In New York, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan underlined that point. "There is a good indication that the Iraqis are cooperating, but this is only the beginning," he said Tuesday.

The declaration the Iraqis are required to submit by Sunday, reporting on any weapons of mass destruction, along with chemical, biological and nuclear activities they say are peaceful, will help shape the inspectors' future work in Iraq, as they seek to verify Baghdad's claims.

Gen. Amin indicated the report, which may run to thousands of pages, would include "new elements," but "those new elements don't mean that Iraq has weapons of mass destruction. Iraq is free of weapons of mass destruction."

The U.S. administration is expected to dispute that. The Iraqi report "must be credible and complete," Bush declared Monday. The United States has threatened war against Iraq, with or without U.N. approval, if in its view Baghdad is not stripped of weapons of mass destruction.

Other governments say only the U.N. Security Council can authorize such aggression in the absence of a situation of immediate self-defense.

Turkey's foreign minister said Tuesday that his country would allow the United States to use military bases on its soil for an attack against Iraq, if the United Nations approves military action.

Yasar Yakis spoke after meeting with U.S. Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz, who was in Turkey to lobby for support of an operation against Iraq.

Hundreds of staff officers of the U.S. Central Command were gathering in the Persian Gulf emirate of Qatar, meanwhile, for a major "war game" beginning next week that could provide models for any eventual conflict with Iraq.

Tensions flared at the head of the Gulf on Tuesday. An Iraqi vessel traded fire with two Kuwaiti coast guard speedboats near the countries' maritime border. Kuwaiti officials said no one was wounded.

The U.N. inspectors of the 1990s eliminated tons of Iraqi chemical and biological weapons and the equipment to make them, and dismantled Iraq's program to build nuclear bombs. Those inspectors suspect they didn't find all the weapons, however.

That monitoring regime broke down amid disputes over U.S. spies in the U.N. operation, and over access to sites, including presidential palaces, when suggestions arose that the Iraqis might be hiding doomsday weapons in Saddam's grandiose homes.

It took personal negotiations in 1998 between the Iraqi president and Annan to reach an accommodation under which inspectors could visit with diplomatic escort and advance notice. Teams did eventually inspect eight disputed palaces, including Al-Sajoud, and found nothing.

The U.N. resolution adopted last month overrides such previous arrangements and mandates unrestricted access.

The arrival of the inspectors' half-dozen U.N. vehicles at Al-Sajoud on Tuesday sent gate guards scrambling and security men radioing for instructions. But their speed in allowing the inspectors inside indicated they were generally aware they might receive a U.N. visit any day.

At the same time, a second U.N. team entered from a back gate, and inspectors were seen filing into the main building, a modernized, Islamic-style palace, with a frontage of several hundred yards.

In another development Tuesday, at an industrial complex north of Baghdad, Gen. Amin displayed for reporters a supply of aluminum tubes, which he said were of the same type U.S. officials allege was destined for use in building gas centrifuges for an Iraqi nuclear weapons program.

EDUCATION | Most students taking more than 4 years to graduate

"How long it takes is so much a function of the degree programs offered," Lynch said. "A liberal arts college that doesn't offer architecture or engineering will have a much higher percentage of students who graduate in four years, because the degree programs are more oriented to four-year graduation than some of the professional programs offered that take more than four years."

Contributing factors for students taking longer than four years to graduate include working, transferring colleges, switching majors and taking fewer than 15 credit hours per semester, Nally said.

Nally said he intended on attending the College of Veterinary Medicine, but with a 2.4 GPA, he decided to change to history and now hopes to teach.

He said he is getting the two other majors in geography and international studies in case he wants to do something else.

Nally said he would advice students not to get stressed about the amount of time they take to get through college.

"It's better to take a while and explore a lot of options – to make sure you do what you really want to do – than to spend four years of college and realize it's not what you want to do," Nally said. "It's expensive, but you might find that the field you're getting into doesn't interest you, and there's something else you would like to do."

SAUDI | Country to take new measures to deny funds to terror groups

The fact that 15 of the 19 alleged hijackers were Saudis was an attempt by al-Qaeda to give the attacks a Saudi face to try to drive a wedge between the United States and Saudi Arabia, Al-Jubeir said.

"We believe that our country has been unfairly maligned. We believe that we have been subjected to criticism that we do not deserve. We believe that people have been misinformed about Saudi Arabia and what Saudi Arabia has done, or frankly that people have lied about what we have done or what we allegedly have not done," he said.

A report issued at the embassy said Saudi Arabia had set up a commission to oversee charitable groups and had barred transfer of assets from one bank to another in cash.

"We've pursued terrorists relentlessly and punished them harshly," Al-Jubeir said.

More than 2,000 terror suspects have been questioned, and more than 100 are in detention, the Saudi official said.

The report said three al-Qaeda cells had been broken up, and 33 accounts totaling more than $5.5 million had been frozen.

In all the investigations, Al-Jubeir said, "we have not found a direct link between charity groups and terrorism."

Last week, the Bush administration disclosed that working groups through the U.S. government were considering ways to tighten controls on the flow of money to terrorists.

Ari Fleischer, the White House spokesman, said, "The president believes that Saudi Arabia has been a good partner in the war against terrorism, but even a good partner like Saudi Arabia can do more."

The U.S. drive is being undertaken with great care. The administration wants support from Saudi Arabia in the event of war with Iraq.

"We are really very happy with the effort," Treasury Department spokeswoman Michele Davis said of Saudi oversight of donations to charitable groups.

Similarly, Philip T. Reeker, a State Department spokesman, said monitoring donations was an important step to counter terror and "the United States is encouraged by Saudi efforts and will continue to provide technical cooperation to Saudi Arabia and other allies in the region."

Reeker said U.S. and Saudi officials would meet in Washington next month to "formalize" cooperation in countering terrorism.

On Capitol Hill, Rep. Eliot Engel, D-N.Y., urged President Bush and the administration to take a close look at the U.S. relationship with Saudi Arabia.

Parental notification policy not instituted at K-State

By Edie Hall
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite a policy change at the federal level that allows institutions to notify parents about their children's use or abuse of alcohol and drugs, K-State hasn't adopted a formal policy on parental notification.

Carla Jones, senior associate dean of student life, said she began researching parental notification policies after Congress approved an exception to the Family Education and Right to Privacy Act in 1998.

The exception permits a university to notify a student's parents or guardians of violations of the university's alcohol and drug policy if the student is younger than 21 and has been found responsible for such a code of conduct violation. The university also may release the results of university disciplinary proceedings in which a student is found to have violated the university's policies related to violence or non-forcible sex offenses.

Jones said the act may have been amended due to several deaths at different institutions involving alcohol poisoning.

"Parents were saying, 'We need more information, we didn't know our kids were in trouble, and we wish we would've known,'" Jones said. "I think that's part of the reason the law was reevaluated."

Jones said that while she could only comment on the way parental notification policies work at other schools, in theory, besides notifying parents of violations of policies, a school could ask parents to speak to their child or look at educational programs on campus.

"Some schools make it a type of sanction in their judicial process," Jones said. "We're a ways away from that."

She said while K-State doesn't have a formal policy, university officials do contact parents in regards to problems their child may be having if it is felt that it will be in the best interest of the student.

"I know that when there's a need to involve a parent with a student of crisis, we've done so – whether we're required to or not," Jones said. "We see parents as part of a support team for students in crisis. We're involving parents, but not a sanction."

Although other Big 12 schools, such as the University of Missouri, have been told by a governing body similar to Kansas' Board of Regents, to adopt the policy, that's not the case at K-State, Jones said.

"It's not a Regents requirement at this time," she said. "Each university has the ability to look at policies to see what they want to do. The law says you may, but doesn't require you to."

Jones said although there are many ways a formal policy could be implemented at K-State, the decision to do so and how to do so would be up to Pat Bosco,

Morning after pill sparks controversy

Emergency contraceptive medicine available at Lafene

Birth control is available even after the night is over.

Emergency contraception, a spin-off of birth control introduced in 1999, decreases the chances of pregnancy within 72 hours of unprotected sex and is available at several locations in Manhattan.

Different types of emergency contraception, often called a morning-after pill, are offered at Lafene Health Center and the Riley County Health Department.

Lafene uses a prepackaged emergency contraceptive containing progesterone to help prevent pregnancy, said Wendy Blank, director of the Women's Clinic at Lafene. Pills cost about $20 at the Lafene pharmacy, while monthly birth control ranges from $8.50 to $30.

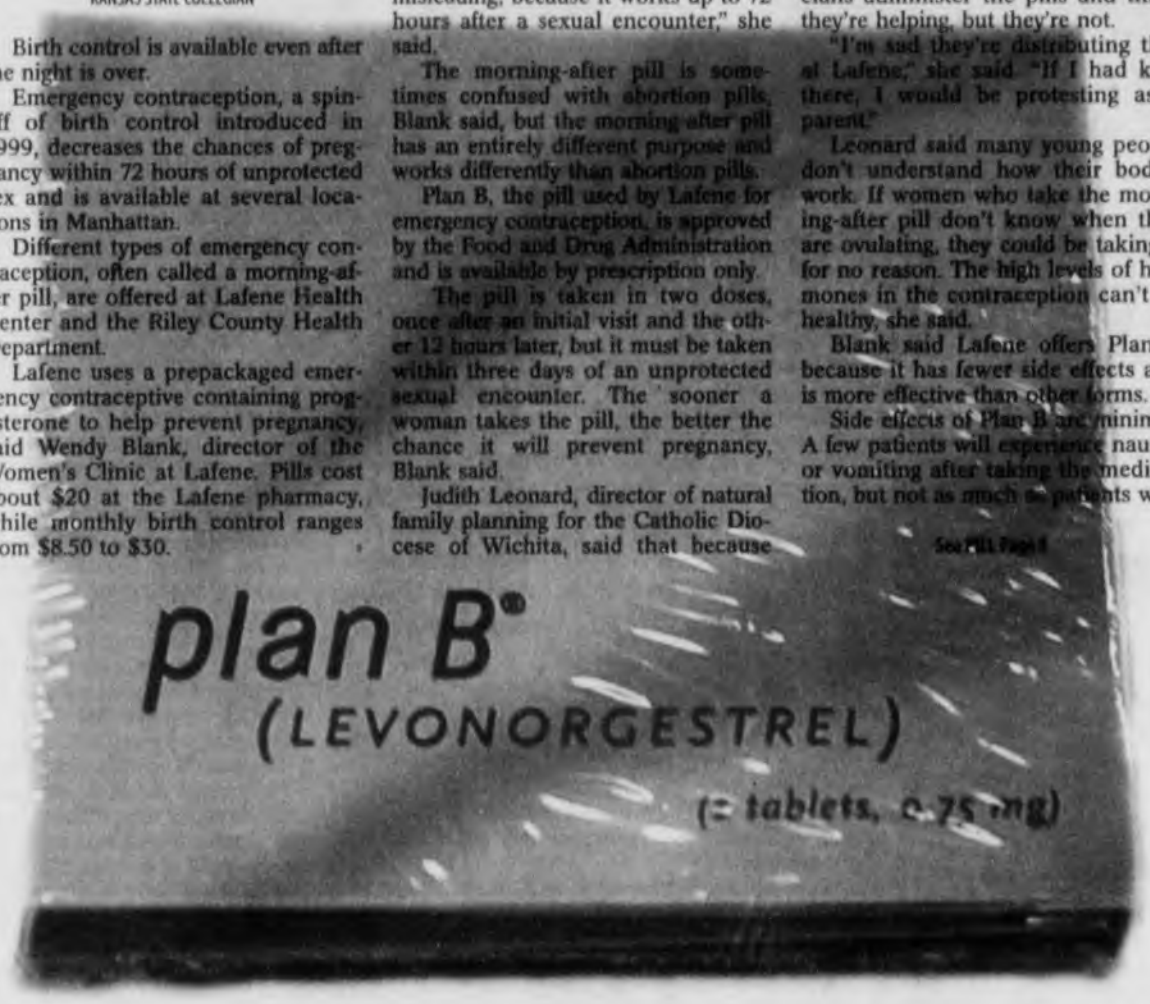
"Calling it the morning-after pill is misleading, because it works up to 72 hours after a sexual encounter," she said.

The morning-after pill is sometimes confused with abortion pills, Blank said, but the morning-after pill has an entirely different purpose and works differently than abortion pills.

Plan B, the pill used by Lafene for emergency contraception, is approved by the Food and Drug Administration and is available by prescription only.

The pill is taken in two doses, once after an initial visit and the other 12 hours later, but it must be taken within three days of an unprotected sexual encounter. The sooner a woman takes the pill, the better the chance it will prevent pregnancy, Blank said.

Judith Leonard, director of natural family planning for the Catholic Diocese of Wichita, said that because Manhattan is a college town, clinicians administer the pills and think they're helping, but they're not.



"I'm sad they're distributing that at Lafene," she said. "If I had kids there, I would be protesting as a parent."

Leonard said many young people don't understand how their bodies work. If women who take the morning-after pill don't know when they are ovulating, they could be taking it for no reason. The high levels of hormones in the contraception can't be healthy, she said.

Blank said Lafene offers Plan B because it has fewer side effects and is more effective than other forms.

Side effects of Plan B are minimal. A few patients will experience nausea or vomiting after taking the medication, but not as much as patients who

Kansas ranks 31st among victims; banks taking more extensive measures

By Shannon Hartenstein
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It only takes nine little numbers to take out loans, get credit cards and go on a shopping spree at someone else's expense.

That nine-digit Social Security number can show up almost anywhere – on personal checks, driver's licenses, student identification cards and job applications.

With so much visibility, stealing an identity – and all the personal information that goes with it – is the fastest-growing crime in America, according to a Wall Street Journal story.

"There's a lot more crime being committed out there than there was 20 years ago," said Pat Dembkowski, branch manager and assistant vice president at Commerce Bank's main branch in Manhattan. "People are more gutsy. They just do it without a conscience."

Kansas ranks No. 31 in the number of identity theft victims and No. 28 in the number of identity theft suspects by state, according to a report from the Identity Theft Data Clearinghouse.

In 2002, only one or two of the bank's customers were victims of identity theft, Dembkowski said. Usually the thief obtained a driver's license number or Social Security number and used the information to have checks printed, he said.

Sharing account information over the phone or on the Internet are common methods of identity theft, Dembkowski said.

Other common types of identity theft include fraudulent use or creation of telecommunications, utility or credit card accounts, according to statistics from the Identity Theft Data Clearinghouse.

Some identity thieves use stolen information to write bad checks, open bank accounts, get loans or work under another person's name, according to the Clearinghouse.

To prevent identity theft, Commerce Bank uses caution with customer information, Dembkowski said. Obtaining a loan requires a face-to-face visit, and no loans are granted through the mail. The bank shreds documents containing customer information before disposing of them.

"We're pretty strict in terms of

If you think you might be a victim of identity theft:

- Report the fraud and order credit reports from the three major credit bureaus: Equifax (800) 525-6285, Experian (888) 397-3742 and TransUnion (800) 680-7289.
- Use the credit reports to look for accounts you didn't open. Inform creditors of fraudulent accounts in your name.
- File a report with your local police or the police in the community where the identity theft took place. Get a copy of the report as proof.

Uncertain economy requires graduates to work harder, consider location, benefit packages when searching

By Bryan Scribner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most graduates had it easier in the late '90s.

Job availability was skyrocketing, and most employers were actively seeking people to fill positions, said Kristy Morgan, assistant director of Career and Employment Services. Today, it's the opposite.

"It's changed from where students were having multiple offers and having people offer them jobs before they even knew much about them – to where students are having to do a lot of work," she said. "The job market had gotten out of control.

"The economy cannot sustain that kind of growth for long."

Graduates are now having to be more creative and work harder to find what they want. The unemployment rate in Kansas has been on an increase since 1999. At the end of October, it was at 4.5 percent, up from 3 percent three years ago. The national average is 5.7 percent.

If students exit college and find themselves frustrated and unemployed, though, Morgan said they shouldn't wait for things to improve. She said they should find an income source and keep searching.

"Adopt the mindset that you are a professional in this field and you're going to do what it takes to get a job," she said.

Those students that are a semester or year away from graduation also need to keep themselves marketable. It's important, Morgan said, for students to keep GPAs at 3.0 or higher, be involved in on-campus activities, practice communications skills and know what they are looking for.

"When the economy's tough and they can pick the best and the brightest, they're going to pick the guy with the 3.8 over the guy with the 2.8 every time," she said.

The uncertain job market, Morgan said, is also keeping the demand for education high. Entry-level positions that might not have required more than a high school education in the past are now including a college degree as a qualification. It's not about working up through the company anymore, she said.

"There are a lot of positions that people take for granted – the kind of education that goes into them," Morgan said. "There's a need for more education."

Morgan said near retirement-age workers are being forced to stay on the job. She said 401Ks and unreliable stock markets are delaying many retirements.

But this doesn't necessarily pose a threat to those entering the professional world, she said. Older workers are expensive to companies, and the corporate world has turned to layoffs as a result.

While some companies are firing, they also are hiring. This can be confusing for graduates, she said, and it also can raise concerns.

"When there is any mention of layoffs, I think students think a lot more critically," Morgan said. "Students are a little bit more concerned about security.

"While they don't want to be tied to a

Futures trading class gives students unique learning opportunity

By Crystal Welborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Class began joyfully enough.

Students bustled excitedly after their teacher handed them envelopes to put their addresses on.

"As soon as the check clears, I'll mail you your part," said Joseph Arata, professor for the Department of Agricultural Economics.

Other classes don't tend to begin like this one, but this is no ordinary class.

This is a futures trading class designed to provide students with an experimental learning opportunity, said William Tierney, professor of agricultural economics and creator of the class.

Tierney said the class was designed to give students an opportunity to apply methods of economic analysis to commodity markets, to research real market developments, formulate a trading strategy, present their strategy to their peers and, finally, implement real commodity trades using their own money.

Each student enrolled in this class gives $100 at the beginning of the semester, and it is up to the work of their classmates as to whether they will lose or gain money.

"It's cheaper than a textbook," Lori Gruenbacher, senior in milling science, said of the class.

Although the class has lost money this year, right now, it looks as though each student will get $89.29. Arata said the loss is normal, and the students shouldn't be too disappointed.

"Futures trading is a fearsome game. There is no wealth created in the futures pit, for everyone who makes a dollar, someone loses a dollar," he said. "We, as beginning speculators, are at a great disadvantage because we are trying to take money away from professionals, people who do this for a living."

Gruenbacher said losing the money is not as bad as it may seem and through the process, she has learned something more valuable.

"It's OK to be behind. It gives you a better understanding of how hard it is to trade – you don't win every time," she said.

Arata said that although research and knowledge are important when trading, having luck on your side helps, too.

"Markets are fickle and to a certain extent, there is a certain amount of luck involved. We have had students who are knowledgeable and make certain recommendations that seem logical, and they lose big," he said.

Two student groups presented their trade recommendations to the class. Last week, one of the groups convinced their class to sell a contract and the other failed to convince the class to buy a contract.

> "Futures trading is a fearsome game. There is no wealth created in the futures pit, for everyone who makes a dollar, someone loses a dollar."
> Joseph Arata
> PROFESSOR, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS

"They break into groups of two or three and go off and research ideas, and they trade the futures depending on their ideas. Of the two groups today, the first one convinced the class while the second one didn't," Arata said. "Each group has to convince their class that their recommendation is a good idea."

K-State is the only university in the country that offers this class.

Tierney said several things had to happen before this class could be implemented.

"To actually form this 'Commodity Trading Pool' required special permission from the Commodity Future Trading Commission, the federal regulatory agency responsible for overseeing futures markets," he said.

Because the students actually trade, there are laws the group must follow including rules regarding the number of students allowed in the class, Tierney said.

"One of the conditions imposed by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission is that there can be no more than 50 people in the pool," he said. "I believe that last year and this year, the class has maxed out at 50 students."

Arata is a certified trading adviser and has a license to run this trading pool.

He previously worked for Merrill Lynch in New York City, NY, but he said he really enjoys teaching students how to get into the trading game.

"I love this class – I trade commodities all the time," he said. "Sometimes they come in here with great ideas, and I will piggy bank on them. I have money invested."

Tierney and Arata said they hope students will walk away from the class with a better understanding of how to work together as a team, research markets, develop strategies, write and present reports, and most importantly to accept responsibility for the results of their recommendations.

"I got a better understanding of how commodities trading goes and the risks involved," Gruenbacher said.

"It also gives you a great business approach, and it may be something I may be doing someday."

Tierney said he does not encourage non-economic majors to take the class, and it does have a prerequisite in the agricultural economics department.

Arata said the prerequisite is important because each student in the class plays a part in trading other students' money.

"This is gambling. We are gambling here from an educated perspective where we really assess the odds that are against us," he said. "We realize how difficult it is to do what we want to do, and we do it anyway because it's fun."

Graves: No more cuts

SRS outlines plans for funding adjustments

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Gov. Bill Graves said Wednesday he did not plan additional spending cuts, even as state revenues continued to sag in November.

"There are not any plans now," Graves said, noting the $22.9 million revenue shortfall for last month was troubling.

Last week, Graves cut $78 million to help reduce the projected $310 million deficit in the $4.4 billion state budget on June 30. He also canceled $48 million in aid payments to local governments.

Social service officials outlined their plans Wednesday to cut $26.6 million in state spending, which grew to more then $49 million with the loss in federal matching funds.

"These aren't good cuts," said Janet Schalansky, Social and Rehabilitation Services secretary.

Graves' latest reductions were on top of the $41 million he ordered in August.

"It's unfortunate bad news, but perhaps it becomes a real wake-up call," Graves told reporters. "There is a possibility that this economic free-fall could continue.

"A situation that is unprecedented in state history is getting worse by the month."

State budget officials originally thought Thanksgiving may have skewed revenue collections, believing that the bulk of sales tax receipts from the start of the Christmas season would appear in the first few days of December. That, officials said, did not occur.

"It will be interesting to see what December's numbers are," said Senate Ways and Means Chairman Steve Morris, R-Hugoton. "We'll get a clearer idea of what is going on."

While not reading too much into November's revenue numbers, Morris did see cause for concern. State revenue forecasters cut revenue estimates by $363.5 million on Nov. 5 – the largest downward revision ever.

Even with revisions, the numbers are coming up short, Morris said.

Schalansky said the SRS cuts, unlike earlier reductions, would result in fewer Kansans receiving services. She described the reductions as "distasteful."

For example, $6.5 million will be cut in aid to community-based programs, such as mental health centers and developmentally disabled organizations. It also will reduce grants for child care and Early Head Start.

Another $1.4 million in state funds will be saved by reducing eligibility for physical disability, child care and home or community based services, affecting more than 4,800 people.

In addition, layoffs and other administrative costs will save $8.4 million in state funds, $15.6 million from all sources.

SRS was hit in August with a $6 million reduction. Schalansky announced then that SRS would begin a three-year process of closing as many as 70 offices, primarily in southwest Kansas.

City and county officials, meanwhile, have scheduled a news conference for Dec. 12 to announce their response to Graves' cut in local aid.

Don Moler, executive director of the League of Kansas Municipalities, said the governing boards of the city and county associations would meet next week to decide whether to challenge Graves' authority to withhold funds.

A 1982 attorney general's opinion suggested the governor did not have the authority to deny an automatic transfer of state funds, reserving that power to legislators. Graves' staff has maintained that he has the authority.

Moler said the reduction in funds left cities and counties looking for ways to cut services immediately.

"We're stuck. Tax bills have already gone out," Moler said. "That's one of the most frustrating aspects of this whole deal."

Morris said legislators and state agencies would be well served by addressing the budget crisis soon after the 2003 session begins Jan. 13.

But he said it could be as late as March before serious discussions take place, if Gov.-elect Kathleen Sebelius does not submit her budget proposal quickly. By law, she has until Feb. 2.

Iraqis accuse U.N. of provocation, spying

Iraqi official alleges intelligence gathering by weapons inspectors

By Charles J. Hanley
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Iraq protested sharply Wednesday over U.N. weapons inspectors' surprise intrusion into one of Saddam Hussein's presidential palaces, accusing the arms experts of being spies and staging the palace search as a provocation that could lead to war.

The harshest criticism came from Vice President Taha Yassin Ramadan, who charged – in language reminiscent of clashes with inspectors in the 1990s – that the new teams of U.N. monitors are gathering intelligence for Washington and Israel.

"Their work is to spy to serve the CIA and Mossad," Israel's intelligence service, Ramadan, claimed to a visiting delegation of Egyptian professionals.

Ramadan, known for his fiery statements, claimed to his all-Arab audience that the inspectors went to the palace hoping to provoke the Iraqis into refusing them entrance – something he said would be interpreted as a "material breach" of the U.N. resolution that mandated the inspections, and a cause for war.

The resolution includes "several land mines," Ramadan said, "and the aim is that one of them will go off."

Responding to Iraqi protests over Tuesday's palace visit, a U.N. official countered that the inspectors are taking the right approach – navigating between Iraqi complaints and U.S. pressure for more "severe" inspections. And, said inspections team leader Demetrius Perricos, "we are getting results."

Among other things, Perricos reported that on a five-hour inspection of a desert installation, his experts secured a dozen Iraqi artillery shells – previously known to be there – that were loaded with a powerful chemical weapon, the agent for mustard gas. It was the first report of such armaments traced and controlled in the week-old round of new inspections.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Be smart about emergency contraception

Let's face it – sex happens. And whether you intend on it being unprotected, there is help.

Emergency contraception, also known as morning-after pills, use large amounts of the female hormone progesterone to help prevent pregnancy. The prepackaged contraceptive contains two pills and can be ingested up to 72 hours after sex.

These pills allow women who have been raped to take control of their situation. But for women who are not raped, these pills provide a sense of security after an unprotected encounter.

Though we don't oppose the use of such pills, we do caution women who choose to take them. These types of contraceptives should not be used as preventative measures. In addition to the chance of getting pregnant, STDs can be contracted.

There are also potentially serious side effects associated with these pills.

If you engage in sexual acts on a regular basis, you should consider a more steady form of protection. At Lafene Health Center, the cost of a month's supply of birth control pills ranges from $8.50 to $30 per pack, but morning after packages are $20 each.

When it come to sex, women should be smart and know all of their options.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Once Again, A Trend Is In

Emo goes pop

LAYTON EHMKE

Illustration by Anna Wetzel

In some wicked way, the Emo music genre became a fashion statement, just like everything else exploited for capital gain.

The mid-tempo, rock-based strand of punk with emotional (sometimes the singer is actually crying) punk vocals, surrounds itself with guitar sounds – distorted, strummed mostly in duo unison, with occasional, catchy rift highlights. The most popular bands closely exemplifying modern Emo are Jimmy Eat World, Thursday and Dashboard Confessional.

I personally don't like Emo music much at all, finding a lot of it fickle, poorly thought-out and extremely musically limited. Though mostly bad, I can certainly respect the fact that it is an artistic expression.

In the August issue of Seventeen magazine, the skanky, trendy, boy-gossiping, eighth-grade-slut publication published a cover and three-page article to demonstrate how to "be Emo."

It even printed Emo pick-up lines.

Pop media published an Emo handbook. Gothic, punk and hippy handbooks have already been made. I wouldn't be surprised if there's a street bum fashion statement that pops up soon. Or how's about a pirate trend? Nobody's done that yet.

What really stinks is how trendy it is for 15-year-old teens to be so sad and mopey as they buy into Emo. There really are some sad children out there who are actually depressed. It's distasteful that their expression is totally exploited. We all know that being sad is not fun, it's not cool, and it doesn't turn you into a rock star.

Yo, pop culture! These Emo children are depressed enough without mainstream, soul eaters stealing their tight pants, big, black shoes and glasses, and making a stereotype out of the whole thing, dishing it out to rich teens and posers in seriously overpriced shopping malls.

I can't help but scratch my chin in awe thinking about this geniously executed business plan.

It's all so rip-off. It's phony. Who wants to be an imitator? It is no different than some tutti-frutti city wimp buying boots, tight, dirty jeans and a beaver skin hat, then calling himself a cowboy because Gap said it was cool.

I just don't buy that.

Then again, someone once said, "Hey, whatever makes you happy..." . This obviously applies in this case.

Does anybody remember when high schoolers in 1993 bought $80 pairs of ripped jeans from The Brass Buckle? If the jeans weren't already ripped, they would pay 10 extra bucks to have them professionally ripped by a Buckle employee. Don't forget the wave of flannel that smothered the country like a soppy, Seattle downpour.

What puzzles me the most are the people who go through the motions just for the sake of looking different, or listening to music they don't even like just because nobody else listens to it. It will make them "weird" and somehow "cool."

I don't have any respect for the "buying in" to trendiness. People still do that, only while wearing studded belts, tight sweaters and sipping on soy-chai-double-chino-can-I-get-a-witness-mocha-latte.

All the while, the original has been tagged, bagged, exploited and had its ashes tossed aside. It is outright identity theft.

All props in the world go to the true punks. Stand up for what you believe in, even if people don't agree with it. In fact, stand up for it especially if people don't agree with it.

Not to sound like an Abercrombie ad, but all I have to say is. Be original. Think original.

To paraphrase Andy Warhol: It's all about finding the look you want and doing it yourself. That's not fashion. That's just humanity.

Recycling a good plan

Toss your trash in campus' other bins

SUSAN POWELL

After the Fourum is read, I'm sure many of you toss your Collegian in the trash. Hold your eco-ignorant horses, because there are certain facts you must understand.

The United States produces 230 million tons of waste annually. That means each citizen is responsible for 4.6 pounds per day, up from 2.7 in 1960, according to the Environmental Protection Agency.

Obviously, most garbage goes to a landfill. Although landfill creation has not skyrocketed in previous years, the size of landfill sites has.

There are many ways to scale the filth. One idea proposed is curbside recycling.

People complain that with it, recycling is too tedious a task. They whine about how inconvenient it is.

To all you K-Staters: Look around.

There are receptacles outside most campus buildings for you. All you have to do is look.

The K-State Recycling Program was established in 1989 to reduce waste and the costs of waste management. This program has been a success, with an estimated 328 tons of materials recycled in 2000, according to www.ksu.facilities/recycling.edu.

However, one goal of this program is education. With little knowledge of where and what can be recycled, it's gone unrealized. There are more receptacles available besides the triumvirate of trash cans seen outside the K-State Student Union and Bluemont Hall.

K-State recycles glass, paper, aluminum, rubber bands, cardboard, pallets, magazines and phone directories. There are various sites inside and outside all main campus buildings. You can visit the aforementioned Web site for exact locations.

It is commendable that our university has taken the initiative. Unfortunately, many individuals have not extended the same effort.

I'm tired of this mentality that recycling is difficult or beneath some of you.

So you save three seconds tossing paper in the trash. With the pressure to keep landfills dry to avoid toxic run-off, such a paper can take more than 20 years to biodegrade.

A friend of mine believes if it doesn't happen to her in this lifetime, it doesn't matter. I believe the quality of air she breathes is relevant, as is the quality of water she drinks. The less trash and chemicals in our ground, the cleaner our natural resources. Recycling cans allows manufacturers to produce a greater quantity of cans at the same level of energy use. This makes production cheaper and prices lower.

Does that not affect her?

Though I understand it isn't practical to haul all your cans to campus, there are other resources available for recycling.

There's Howie's Recycling Inc., at 625 S. 10th Street. It's open 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, and from 7:30 a.m. to noon Saturdays. Howie's accepts many recyclable materials but denies butter tubs, which is understandable, as they are inherently evil.

The Household Hazardous Waste Program will recycle paint, batteries and other such chemicals if you travel to 6245 Tuttle Creek Blvd. It's open from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. on weekdays. If you have questions about specific waste they accept, call 539-3202.

Yes, it is a hassle to visit Howie's on a Sunday – which I repeatedly do – and have to harvest the eco-friendly bounty for another day. But the positive effects are astounding.

Take it a step at a time. A few extra steps to the recycling receptacles to toss this paper will truly help. That is, if you indeed throw away this sage opinion page at all.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444

How can Bon Jovi play on both Letterman and Leno on the same night?

Oh, my gosh. I just lit up three blocks from campus, and my second-hand smoke blew across with a strong, east wind. Sorry, campus.

And, if you remove the words "awesome" and "wow" from the dictionary, as well as eliminating the phrases "you know" and "I don't know," the sorority girls might just go dead-silent.

KKSU's final, off-the-air words for the K-State administration: "Ignorance is curable, but you're stuck with stupidity." And, to use one of Wefald's common quotes: "Good night. Amen."

I am so tired of the K-State women's basketball players sleeping through my morning classes.

Isn't it great that in times of fiscal crisis K-State can afford to use its own corporate jet to fly people to Miami for lunch?

It's pretty pathetic that we have to bribe people to let us into the Orange Bowl.

To whoever called in about the Classy Cats not being very classy: Sorry you didn't make it.

My girlfriend calls me "Pooplet." Should I be scared?

I'm getting a blister on my thumb from dialing the Fourum.

From far away, they almost look real.

Congratulations to all of our student athletes who were selected to the academic All-America football team. Oh, wait, there weren't any, although schools like Miami, Ohio State and Georgia were represented.

It's funny how Dara's cups are all of a sudden the authority on K-State athletics.

I'm independent, and I have great friends, because the best things in life are definitely free.

I think it's really neat that all the heads of all the colleges here are named Dean.

Is it wrong to sit in class and fantasize about your girlfriend's sister?

I don't care where your money is. There are mountains in Colorado.

You oughta change the name of the Fourum to the Whine Line. All anybody ever does is gripe.

Let's compare K-State men's basketball to women's basketball. The men are taller, stronger, quicker and faster. They jump higher, shoot better and dunk. I'd say the men would win by at least 100 points.

POLISHED SOUNDS

Full Feature stops in Manhattan to release new album

By JJ Duncan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the tracks Full Feature laid down for its new album, "One For Your Health," came out sounding all wrong, guitarist Marshall Loo said the band knew what it had to do.

"When we got back the album, we found out it was mixed poorly, so we ended up recording at Gutter Snipe Studios in Kansas City, Mo., with John Evans of Famous FM," he said. "About two months after that, we sent the CD in to be reproduced."

Full Feature will make a stop in Manhattan on Friday to celebrate its CD release with Manhattan fans. Here is what Loo had to say about the performance and the new album.

Q: What influences and styles will people notice when they hear you?

A: There's a definite hip-hop element. I do the rapping in the band, and I listen to A Tribe Called Quest and De La Soul quite a bit. We're essentially a rock band with hip-hop and funk mixed in. 311 and Sublime are definitely influences.

Q: How did the band get together?

A: The band just kind of happened. We were all friends before, and it just worked out when we were living together. One day, someone brought over a trap set, and Boyd (Brasel) jumped on to try it out. I had been playing guitar for about a year and a half, and we played around and ended up really putting the band together for a benefit show that fell through. We just stayed together and kept playing.

Q: Are you pleased with the recorded representation of your music on "One For Your Health,"?

A: The album has been a labor of love. It's taken about a year, and it probably should have taken half that time. We started about a week ago last year. We got a good deal on the studio time, but it didn't turn out to be so good, and we had to wait for more money to finish the production. Then we found out it was mixed poorly when we got it back.

That's when we went to Gutter Snipe Studios.

Q: Was it worth it to go back into the studio and rerecord your material?

A: Yeah, after being together that long and not having an album, we knew the next thing we released had to be good and representative of what we sound like. So we had no other choice. It would have been crappy, and that's all that people will have to judge us on if they don't see us live.

Q: What can people look forward to about Friday's show?

A: We've always prided ourselves on our live show, because that's how we capture people, especially when you go somewhere people don't know you, which is most of the time. You want to get people's attention and get them into it.

It would be great to blow people away. And it would be great to blow away other bands sometimes because other bands might not have the stage presence they should, and nine, or maybe 9.8 times out of 10, we do. It's fun for us.

Full Feature CD Release Party

Opening band: Joe and Lucas
When and Where: 9:30 p.m. Friday at Joe's Tap Room
Cover charge: $3
Full Feature's album, "One For Your Health," will be on sale for $10

BirdHouse brings upcoming singer/songwriter to Manhattan Arts Center

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

John Smith's name is one of the only simple, ordinary things about the singer/songwriter who goes by Johnsmith.

The performer has honed his distinct folksy sound for a broad appeal, something that made him a candidate for a return performance at BirdHouse. Choosing artists for the series is tough, but having Johnsmith back to perform seemed like a no-brainer, David Kamerer, co-founder of BirdHouse, said.

"It's hard to decide the acts sometimes," Kamerer said. "We have a limited number of shows, and we have trouble deciding who to bring in. We like to try and invite new artists, but sometimes it's nice to bring back old artists, and Johnsmith is an old favorite of ours."

Johnsmith is the headlining act in the final BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series' fall season this Saturday. He will be joined by electric violinist and guitarist Joe Ebel and singer/songwriter Annie Lalley.

This is the second time that Johnsmith and Ebel have performed together at BirdHouse.

His high-energy show and unique voice, along with several local requests to bring him back, helped to make the decision to invite Johnsmith back easier, Kamerer said.

Johnsmith's local acceptance is due to the high quality of his music, a characteristic that is appealing to all ages, Kamerer said.

"He plays a great guitar and has such a beautiful voice," Kamerer said. "With Ebel, he will have more of a Celtic feel. But I'm surprised that Johnsmith isn't more famous because his songwriting and performances are that good."

Johnsmith said he has been a musician for most of his life. He started singing in a rock band in his high school years while absorbing the sounds of the 60s. When he went to college, he started playing guitar and realized music was for him. His first solo album, "Hole in the Clouds," was released in 1997 following his appearance in the Kerrville Folk Festival, a large singer/songwriter festival in Kerrville, Texas.

"I love to sing and play the guitar every day," Johnsmith said. "I find inspiration from other singer/songwriters like Bob Dylan, Jackson Browne, Shawn Colvin and Randy Newman, to name a few. I like songs that have a genuineness to it.

"I like writing songs on a similar level. I write songs that are about day-to-day events. I have songs that are about heartbreak, my father passing away, my kids growing up and love, among other things."

He said he enjoys the process of writing songs, and that is the main reason he's still a singer/songwriter. Johnsmith said he likes to give the audience members the same feelings that he experiences when he is in their position.

"I like the connection that you have when you perform," Johnsmith said. "I've been in the audience watching someone I like, and I know how it feels. When it goes right it's so soulful and spiritual and it makes you feel free and full of life, which is good. And that's what I like to do is perform from the heart and let the songs come out."

In the 1996 Kerrville Folk Festival, Johnsmith met violinist Joe Ebel. They performed together in the Festival and became fast friends. Ebel said he is excited to come back to Manhattan and play with Johnsmith because he enjoyed it before. Ebel will play his violin and guitar to support Johnsmith and Lalley, and he likes it that way.

"I don't really sing at all, I prefer instrumentals," Ebel said. "They (Johnsmith and Lalley) don't really need me, but I get to sort of hang ornaments on their songs. Sort of like putting icing on the cake, and I like it like that."

Support for the BirdHouse series has been diverse in the past. Kamerer said it is important to come out and support singer/songwriters because there isn't much of an industry or radio format for it.

"I always invite young people to come out and watch," Kamerer said. "They always say that it is different from what they normally see, but they love it. It's an atmosphere that is so intimate and vulnerable for the performer, but is extremely rewarding for both.

"The talent that's brought in is high quality. I'm confident in saying that a pop or country act will have a huge hit with one of Johnsmith's songs. His turn is definitely coming very soon."

BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series

Who: Johnsmith, Joe Ebel and Annie Lalley

IN BRIEF

The Associated Press

Blue Earth Christmas displays 2 million lights, 7 miles of extension cords

Thirty acres, 2 million lights — and 7 miles of extension cords.

And you thought your Christmas display was impressive.

For the fourth year, Blue Earth, Minn., is hosting the "Christmas Wonderland of Lights," believed to be the largest display of lights in the state. The display, at the fairgrounds in Blue Earth, is open nightly except Christmas and New Year's Eve.

It's so big people can ride a trolley through it or drive in and around it.

Shelly Greimann, director of the Chamber of Commerce, said the annual project is quite an undertaking for the town of a population around 4,000, about 10 miles from the Iowa border in south-central Minnesota.

"The community has been just thrilled to do it, and we have all the support you can imagine," she said recently.

Large paper cutting by Hans Christian Andersen auctioned in Denmark

The largest known paper cutting ever made by Hans Christian Andersen has been sold at auction for $69,000.

The Copenhagen-based Bruun Rasmussen Auctioneers of Fine Art had estimated the cutting, eventually pasted into a first edition by the Danish fairy tale writer, to be worth as much as $20,000.

"We are happy that we got it," Torben Groengaard Jeppesen of the Hans Christian Andersen Museum said Monday. "We are not surprised at all that the bids went that high up."

Auctioneer Sebastian Hauge Lerche said buyers in the United States and Japan had made bids over the telephone.

The paper cutting — likely made in 1864 — is the largest known attributed to Andersen, who made dozens of them. It measures 17 inches by 14 inches and includes a handwritten verse by the beloved Danish children's author.

Time to vote for the 2002 Collegian Readers' Choice Music Awards

Remember to vote for your choices for this year's top albums at www.kstatecollegian.com. Nominees in the category for artist of the year are Eminem, Beck, the Neptunes, Avril Lavigne and the Vines.

LISTENING BOOTH

The Collegian wants to know what music you are listening to. If you are passionate about music and want to express your opinion, e-mail A&E Editor JJ Duncan at jduncan_80@hotmail.com.
This week we asked Stefanie Shank, sophomore in illustration, what she's listening to.

1. Waterdeep "To Chase Away the Birds"

It has a good message in the lyrics. I think the song "Your Hope is Around the Corner" is one of my favorite songs from that album. It's a good album – one of my favorites.

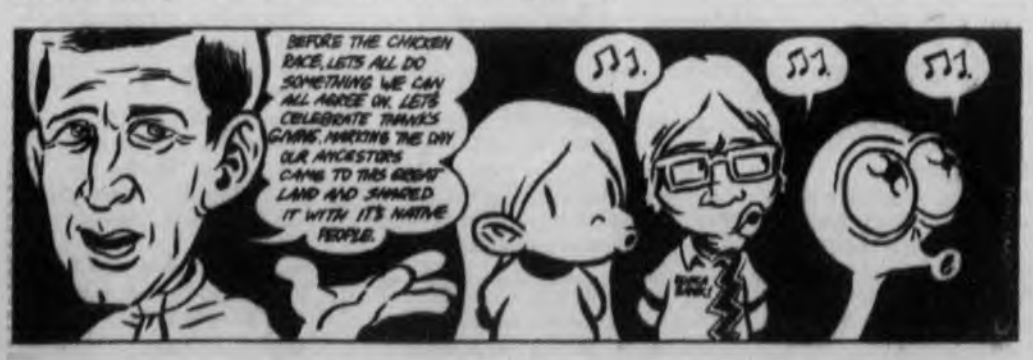
2. Shane Bernard "Rocks Don't Cry"

It has a really good acoustic sound to it. I like to study to some acoustic music.

3. Chris Tomlin

I'm not sure of the name of the album, but he writes some good worship music. Again, he has a good message with his lyrics and a powerful voice. It is a really good roadtrip CD.

4. Lifehouse, "No Name Face"



It has a more upbeat tempo. I like the song "Everything." It has a good message in the lyrics – a real powerful song.

5. Bebo Norman

I'm not sure of the name of the album, but he has a really good mellow acoustic sound. It's really relaxing. I use some of his stuff for studying.

It's No Bluff,

Cats avoid worst start in 37 years behind DeJesus' hot 3-point shot

By Sean Purcell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's men's basketball team may have dropped its home opener, but it didn't make it two in a row.

The Wildcats (2-3), led by Gilson DeJesus' 21 points, handled Arkansas-Pine Bluff (0-5) on Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum, easing past the Golden Lions 76-39.

With the win, K-State avoided going 1-4 for the first time in 37 years.

"It's a hard game to play, it really is," Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

"We've got tapes of every game they have played up to this point, and the common theme had been that teams don't necessarily come out and play as well as they can.

"Several of the games have been six- or 10-point games at half. Then they stretch it out in the second half, and it gets loose. We had our moments out there, too, but I thought we played consistent throughout."

Most of that consistency was by way of DeJesus' hot-shooting.

The junior guard was on early and often, hitting four of eight three-pointers in the first half. He then opened the second half with another three.

In fact, DeJesus didn't attempt a field goal that wasn't a three all game.

On the season, DeJesus has made 19 field goals. Of those, 18 are by way of hits behind the arc.

Wooldridge said his No. 3 guard is becoming a real threat from three-point land.

"I thought Gilson's play, again, was outstanding. He's been our most consistent player up to this point. He's rebounding, he's playing hard, and that's been a real boost," Wooldridge said.

K-State opened on a 10-2 run, sparked by two consecutive three-pointers by DeJesus.

The Cats would stretch the lead to 15 by halftime, as second-chance points helped build an insurmountable lead.

For the game, the Wildcats outrebounded Pine Bluff 51-32, including 15 offensive boards that led to 25 second-chance points.

The Golden Lions didn't score on a second-chance opportunity all night.

"That wasn't the greatest competition in the world, but we went out and left no doubt," senior forward Matt Siebrandt said.

K-State remained consistent in the second half, while Pine Bluff fell even farther from making it a close contest.

DeJesus cashed three more downtown shots, and Wooldridge was able to unload his bench.

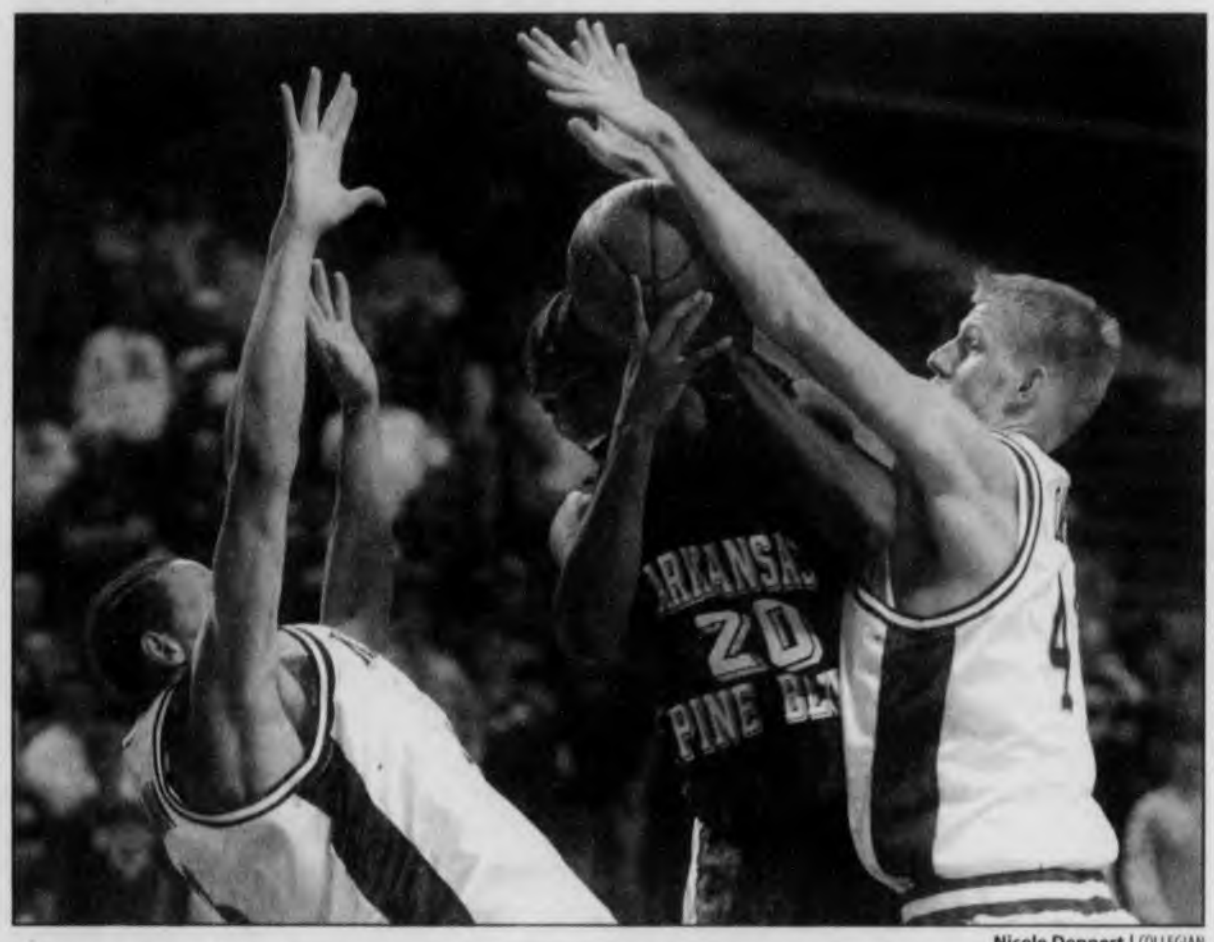
Freshman Marques Hayden led all bench scorers with 14.

Siebrandt said a goal was to get each guy some playing time. But first, he said, the starters had to take care of business.

The Golden Lions were 0-4 coming in, but all four losses were to top-25 teams.

"We knew we had to respect them and play a full 40 minutes," Siebrandt said. "I think we did that."

Shooting seven of 12 from behind the arc, DeJesus increased his conference-leading three-point percentage to 62 percent.



DeJesus said he got his inspiration from his female counterpart, Laurie Koehn of the K-State women's team.

"I came and watched the girls' game, and I was watching Laurie shoot, and she made it look so easy," DeJesus said. "I thought it could be easy for me, too. So it worked."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pervis Pasco entered Wednesday night's game against Arkansas-Pine Bluff averaging 3.8 rebounds per contest.

He more than doubled that in the first half, pulling down 10 rebounds, seven of which came on the offensive end.

Pasco and Matt Siebrandt dominated the offensive boards for the Cats in the first half, accounting for 10 of K-State's 11 offensive rebounds.

The battle on the glass was similar to the scoreboard, as K-State outrebounded the Golden Lions 51-32. Wednesday's win marked the third straight game K-State has outrebounded its opponent. In each of their four losses, the Cats lost the rebounding edge.

"We knew that coming in, so we were just aggressive toward the boards," Siebrandt said.

"We started out in the beginning, Pervis and myself – we dictated the tempo. Marques (Hayden) and all the other guys came in and did a good job. It's something we should have done, and we took advantage of it.

"We just came out and stuck to our principles and played how we needed to play," he said.

Siebrandt was one of five Wildcats to grab more than five rebounds, finishing the game with six to go along with nine points.

K-State finished with 15 offensive rebounds and 25 second-chance points.

"We need that to bolster our method of scoring, and that's one way to do it," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "The second shot will be real critical, and we have to go after every loose ball."

Pasco finished the game with six points and 11 rebounds, eight of which came on the offensive end.

"He's been frustrated," Wooldridge said. "He was pretty active out there tonight. He had 11 rebounds in under 30 minutes of play, so that's a pretty good effort.

"I thought the play of Pervis, Matt, Marques and Travis Canby, I thought they played well. They gave us something inside that we needed."

Displacing successful coaches like Slocumb not the best choice

JOEL REICHENBERGER

The Big 12 of 1996, the league's inaugural year, was far different from the Big 12 of today.

Legendary coaches still dotted the league in '96. Tom Osborne had everything on the right track in Lincoln, Neb., Rick Neuheisel produced a strong Colorado team year in and year out, and even KU entered games with a hope of winning behind the leadership of Glen Mason.

The South division didn't seem as strong, but still had its fair share of contenders. John Mackovic was in charge at Texas.

At Oklahoma, the hilariously hammered Howard "Jack Daniels" Schnellenberger was on the way out, and the forgettable John Blake was on the way in.

Spike Dykes was nearing the end of a successful run with Texas Tech, and R.C. Slocum was busy becoming the winningest coach in Texas A&M history.

But now all of those coaches are gone.

Neuheisel went on to coach at Washington. Mason went to Georgia, decided he didn't like it, and then came back to KU before finally ending up at Minnesota. Osborne retired to become a U.S. Representative, and earlier this week Texas A&M fired R.C. Slocum.

Only two other coaches had more wins than Slocum since 1990. He never had a losing season while at A&M. He was with the program for 30 years. But this season he finished 6-6, qualified for a bowl and was thrown to the curb.

The firing of Slocum makes Bill Snyder the longest tenured coach in the Big 12. Dan McCarney at Iowa State joins Snyder now as the only two coaches who ever played in the Big Eight.

But Texas A&M is not the only Big 12 school throwing away long-time coaches.

Nebraska coach Frank Solich saved his job, but fired three defensive coaches, including secondary coach George Darlington.

Darlington had been with Nebraska for 30 years. He was hired in 1973 by Osborne and even coached nearly 10 more years than Solich.

Now there's some lifelong friendship developing there. Solich and Darlington coached together for 20 years, but as soon as Solich was in hot water, he flushes his old buddy down the drain.

What's up with all the backstabbing? The Big 12 in 2002 is infinitely more competitive than it was in '96. That competitiveness makes stupid schools not even want to risk a mediocre season.

Take a look around the league.

In the North, K-State and Colorado are dominating this season. Iowa State was ranked in the Top 10 at one point and only finished third. Nebraska was fourth and played for the National Championship last year.

Then Missouri was fifth and played nearly everyone in the league very tough.

Five of the six teams in the North were in bowl contention until the last game of the season.

In the South, Oklahoma and Texas are the leaders, and both are ranked in the Top 10. But Texas Tech was also very good and beat all three in-state rivals to become the Texas state champion.

The South's fourth and fifth place teams – Oklahoma State and Texas A&M – both beat the division's champion, OU.

The Big 12 is the toughest conference in college football in 2002, and things won't change any time in the near future.

But being so good has its disadvantages.

Big 12 teams consistently beat each other up and that ends up ruining many a season and many a coach.

If Oklahoma, Texas and K-State were all in different conferences, there would be a dreadfully close run for the National Championship game this season.

K-State wouldn't have lost to Colorado or Texas, Texas wouldn't have lost to OU and Texas Tech, and OU wouldn't have lost to A&M and O-State. Those three teams would mop up poor competition in the ACC, the Big East and even the Big 10 (eleven).

The Big 10 champion, Iowa, couldn't even beat the Big 12's fifth or sixth place team, Iowa State.

Texas A&M wouldn't have had to play a schedule from hell, and Iowa State – the league's Cinderella – wouldn't have had to take the murderous road trip that ended its season. Even Nebraska, fresh off a National title run, would have been embarrassed playing in the nation's best conference.

Slocum wouldn't have been canned after 14 years. And Nebraska coaches, who helped make the school's undeniable smash mouth reputation, wouldn't have been fired to save Solich's hide.

Snyder is a great coach. In 2001, he had a down year. The league was impossibly difficult as always, and K-State lost six games. Some fans jumped off of his bandwagon. Snyder responded with a 10-2 season that featured possibly the best K-State team anyone ever has seen and in the process earning a chance at a BCS bowl.

Darlington is a great coach.

He helped win three national championships and 14 Big 8 and Big 12 titles. He got fired after 30 years on the job.

Slocum is a great coach. Even with a down year in 2002, he still beat the No. 1 team in the nation, took his team to a bowl game, but then got fired.

This holiday season I pray that K-State may never be so foolish.

CAT CALENDAR

Only one more week of classes before finals. Now is a good time to get out and support the Cats before you get bogged down with tests and papers.

Friday

- Volleyball — First round of the NCAA tournament, played at Ahearn Field House. Cats will play Michigan 30 minutes following the 5:30 p.m. Washington State/Oral Roberts match.
- Women's Basketball — Day one of the Wildcat Classic. K-State will play Middle Tennessee State at 5 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum.

Saturday

- Volleyball — Second round of the NCAA tournament. If the Cats defeat Michigan on Friday, they will play the winner of the Washington State/Oral Roberts match at 7 p.m. at Ahearn Field House.
- Women's basketball — Day two of the Wildcat Classic. If K-State loses, the Cats will play at 2:30 p.m. at Bramlage. If they win, they will play at 4:30 p.m.
- Men's Basketball — Wildcats travel to Wisconsin-Green Bay to play the Phoenix. Tip-off is scheduled for 7 p.m.

Wednesday

- Men's basketball — K-State is back at Bramlage, when the Wildcats face Texas Pan American at 7 p.m.

NCAA | Nebraska associate athletic director looking to fill vacant job

Bob Burton, Nebraska's senior associate athletic director for internal operations, said Wednesday he would apply to become the Cornhuskers' next athletic director.

Bill Byrne, athletic director for 11 years, announced Tuesday he would leave at the end of the month to take the same job at Texas A&M.

Byrne's announcement came just one day after three assistant football coaches were fired following a 7-6 season.

Burton, 39, is in his fifth year at Nebraska. He was associate athletic director for compliance and sports administration before being named to his current position in 2001.

NCAA | CU searching for running back

With so much attention paid to injuries to Colorado running backs Chris Brown and Bobby Purify and good performances by Brian Calhoun, the player who was supposed to take the headlines has been almost an afterthought.

That could change in Saturday's Big 12 championship in Houston against No. 8 Oklahoma, when Marcus Houston could get the starting call for the 12th-ranked Buffaloes.

Colorado coach Gary Barnett gave grim outlooks for Brown, who sat out the Buffaloes' 28-13 victory over Nebraska with a bruised sternum, and for Purify (high ankle sprain).

Calhoun, a freshman, rushed for 137 yards against the Cornhuskers last week, but remains below sophomore Houston in the depth chart. Both could receive considerable playing time, however.

MLB | Orioles hire big whigs

Rather than put just one person in charge, the Baltimore Orioles hired Jim Beattie and Mike Flanagan to turn around a franchise mired in a record run of five consecutive losing seasons.

Beattie on Wednesday was picked as executive vice president of baseball operations. The former pitchers will fill the job commonly known as general manager, a post that most teams trust to only one man.
